We have provided an expert to investigage how we may assist with the improvement of communications in the area and to advise Save the Children Fund (UK) on the development of its communications links throughout the country. We are considering his recommendations.

EC Overseas Development Assistance

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what EC overseas development assistance funds are used for military expenditure.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Under OECD rules, military expenditure does not qualify as overseas development assistance. EC Foreign Ministers agreed exceptionally in October, in view of the urgent need for a secure environment in Somalia for delivery of aid, to offer up to 20 million ecu from European development fund resources to support the Belgian contingent then being considered as part of United Nations Operations in Somalia.

Tropical Rain Forests

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress made on the protection and designation of tropical rain forests and the role of the European Community during the United Kingdom's presidency of the European Commission.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 9 December 1992]: Under our presidency we have been working with member states for the Sustainable Development Commission to have a role in taking forward the forests principles agreed at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development. We have also worked closely with our European Community colleagues on the continuing reform of the tropical forestry action programme and the renegotiation of the International Tropical Timber Agreement.

Kenya

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Kenya concerning the treatment of Somalian refugees.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development discussed the plight of Somali refugees in Kenya, when she met President Moi in September. This year Britain has provided assistance worth £1 million to help the refugees.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Bangladesh

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Bangladesh concerning its treatment of Burmese refugees.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have repeatedly urged the Bangladeshi authorities to co-operate with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and other non-governmental organisations in looking after the refugees until they genuinely and voluntarily wish to return home.

Turkey

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Turkish authorities concerning the killing of Kurdish journalists in south-east Turkey.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We have made no representations to the Turkish Government on this issue.

We welcome Prime Minister Demirel's recognition of a Kurdish identity and his Government's intentions to make human rights improvement a top priority as well as the introduction of a programme of democratic and human rights reform.

Hong Kong

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he first informed the Chinese Government of his wish to see an increase in the number of seats in the Legislative Council of Hong Kong beyond that envisaged in the Basic Law.

Mr. Goodlad: The point was made repeatedly to the Chinese Government during the drafting of the Basic Law as the exchanges with the Chinese during 1990—recently made public—show. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State told the House on 16 February 1990 that we would continue to press the case for a faster pace of democracy.

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he was first informed by the Chinese Government of their view that the Basic Law cannot be changed; and what was his response.

Mr. Goodlad: The Chinese Government made a public statement at the end of May this year that, in their view, the Basic Law, including provisions for the first special administrative region legislature, cannot be changed before 1997. Our position on the pace of democracy for Hong Kong was made clear once again to the Chinese side during my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's meeting with the Chinese Foreign Minister in New York on 25 September this year. While we would still wish to see more directly elected seats in the Legislative Council, the Governor of Hong Kong has made alternative proposals which are entirely within the terms of the joint declaration and Basic Law.

Cambodia

Mr. Mullins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made following the recent Thai ban on United Nations flights from Cambodia to the Government of Thailand regarding the need for Thailand to co-operate with United Nations sanctions against the Khmer Rouge.

Mr. Goodlad: The United Nations Security Council on 30 November adopted resolution 792, which calls, inter alia, on all parties to prevent the supply of petroleum products to any Cambodian party not complying with the military provisions of the Paris agreements and to respect the moratorium on the export of logs from Cambodia agreed by the Supreme National Council of Cambodia on 22 September. The United Nations Secretariat in New York and the United Nations Transitional Authority in Cambodia—UNTAC—are discussing implementation of this resolution as it affects Thailand. This is being reinfored in bilateral contacts.

Korea

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government support the peaceful and democratic reunification of Korea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We have consistently supported efforts to bring about a peaceful solution on the Korean peninsula. It is encouraging that talks have been taking place on a number of levels this year between South and North Korea. Much remains to be done, but we hope that the next round of prime ministerial talks scheduled for 21 to 24 December will go ahead and lead to further progress.

We also hope that bilateral nuclear inspections can get underway without further delay. That would be an important confidence-building measure.

China

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current situation in the People's Republic of China concerning human rights.

Mr. Goodlad: We remain very concerned by reports of human rights abuses in China, and Ministers have made our concerns clear to the Chinese at a high level both in public and private on many occasions. My right hon., noble and learned Friend Lord Howe, who has just returned from China, will in due course submit a formal report on his visit to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister. That report will be placed in the Library of this House.

Bosnia

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 23 November, Official Report, column 452, when he expects to be able to supply the information on visa applications from Bosnian citizens offered in his answer.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: For the period 9 November to 4 December, the first month's operation of the visa requirement for nationals of the Republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina and of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, 663 visa applications for the United Kingdom, for both visits and settlement, were received at our posts at Vienna, Budapest, Belgrade, Rome, Milan, Dusseldorf, Paris and Sofia. A total of 182 applications were refused. This figure includes the 166 visa applicants in the convoy arranged by the ALERT group whose applications were refused by the Home Office.

I regret it is not possible to identify the number of visa applications that have been refused from applicants with relatives in the United Kingdom. The method of recording statistics at post worldwide does not allow us to give the precise detail which the hon. Member has requested without disproportionate expense.

Somalia

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list every visit made (a) to Hargeisa, (b) to any other part of northern Somalia (Republic of Somaliland), (c) Mogadishu and (d) any other part of Somalia outside the Republic of Somaliland by (i) Ministers and (ii) official representatives of the British Government in each of the last 24 months.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The following is the information requested:

Visits to North-West Somalia: Ministers
No Ministers have visited in the last 24 months.

Visits to North-West Somalia: Officials
February 1992
Head of East African Department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and a member of the British Embassy, Addis Ababa to Hargeisa, Boroma and Berbera.
November 1992
HM Ambassador, Addis Ababa to Hargeisa, Berbera, Sheikh and Burao.
Assistant Head of African Department (Equatorial) Foreign and Commonwealth Office and a member of the British Embassy, Addis Ababa to Hargeisa and Berbera.

Visits to rest of Somalia: Ministers
September 1992
Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to Mogadishu.
Baroness Chalker to Mogadishu and Hoddur.

Visits to rest of Somalia: Officials
August 1992
Member of the British High Commission, Nairobi Mogadishu and Hoddur.
September 1992
Officials accompanying Secretary of State to Mogadishu.
Officials accompanying Baroness Chalker to Mogadishu and Hoddur.
October 1992
Member of the British High Commission, Nairobi, to Mogadishu.

Kenya

Mr. Duncan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the prospects for free and fair elections in Kenya.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We warmly welcome the Kenyan Government's expressed commitment to free and fair elections, to which end we have given considerable practical assistance. We have provided all the ballot boxes, trained key electoral officials, supplied some office equipment to the electoral commission, and have made a significant financial contribution through the Commonwealth Secretariat to the Commonwealth observer team. We are also supporting local projects to educate the electorate and monitor election media coverage. The total cost of our assistance is now over £800,000.

While there have been improvements in recent weeks, we remain concerned about the evenness of the playing field. We continue to urge the Kenyan Government to be more open, establish a better dialogue with the opposition, allow all parties unhindered campaigning in all parts of the country, ensure freedom of the press and reasonable access by opposition parties to the broadcast media. We are making the same points about openness and transparency to the electoral commission. Electoral observers will base their assessment not just on the events of polling day but on the conduct of the whole electoral process.

Above all, it is essential that all concerned should avoid the use or encouragement of violence or intimidation before, during and after the elections.

Tibet

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he has received from the Chinese authorities to the draft resolution on the situation in Tibet put forward at the UN Commission on Human Rights.

Mr. Goodlad: We, together with our EC partners, took the lead in promoting the draft of a resolution on the human rights situation in China including Tibet at the UN Commission on Human Rights earlier this year. The draft resolution referred to a resolution on Tibet adopted in the UN sub-commission in August 1991. The Chinese authorities opposed the draft resolution, which was subsequently defeated by a procedural motion.

Radiation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the benefits to the United Kingdom of the resources committed to the joint research centres and European Atomic Energy Community for research into radiation risk and protection since 1973.

Mr. Robert Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

EC programmes on radiation protection research, in particular those funded by shared cost actions, have been of great scientific value to the United Kingdom. Research undertaken by the EC is helping to provide the scientific base for an objective assessment of the effects and risks of radiation from natural, medical and industrial sources, and has led to the development of methods to optimise radiation protection. Research within the United Kingdom has also benefited: work has been completed through EC programmes that would not have been possible for any one member state to conduct alone. The United Kingdom has consistently gained more in contracts than its share of the programmes' costs.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of the contribution made to the Iraq nuclear weapons programme of the technical aid provided by the United Kingdom to Iraq via the Baghdad pact nuclear training centre since 1962.

Mr. Heseltine: It is my understanding from the limited information available that Iraq ceased to participate in the activities of the training centre when it was transferred to Tehran following the revolution in Iraq in 1959.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make available to Lord Justice Scott's inquiry all papers, records and evidence assembled by his inspectors in the course of their inquiries into Astra Holdings plc.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: All relevant Government papers will be made available to Lord Justice Scott on request.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent, Official Report, 9 November, column 589, for what reasons confidentiality was requested by Her Majesty's Government to the International Atomic Energy Agency and the United Nations Special Commission on Iraq in the provision of information of possible involvement of United Kingdom companies in the Iraq nuclear programme.

Mr. Needham: Lack of confidentialilty would hamper and could prejudice investigations into any evidence of wrong-doing or breaches of export controls.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what information his Department's export control organisation has in regard to the compliance by United Kingdom-based or registered companies with the Export of Goods (Control) (Iraq and Kuwait Sanctions) Order 1990, date 8 August 1990;

(2) what investigations his Department has made to verify the compliance of United Kingdom exporters with European Council Regulation (EEC) No. 2340/90 banning trade with Iraq.

Mr. Needham: United Nations Security Council resolution 661 was adopted on 6 August 1990 and imposed a total economic embargo against Iraq following Iraq's invasion of Kuwait. The Government have no evidence of any major breaches of the Iraq sanctions by British exporters or businesses. Her Majesty's Customs and Excise have successfully prosecuted two businesses for minor breaches of sanctions involving the export to Iraq of office furniture and goods to an Iraqi canning factory.

If the hon. Member has any evidence of a contravention of sanctions it shall be urgently investigated, and if appropriate would be a matter for the courts.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he possesses on the role of (a) Apremont S.A. Company of Panama, (b) Muiden Chemie Company of the Netherlands, (c) GEA Company, Remie Ltd. and Erber Ltd. of Italy, (d) SPEL Company of Portugal and (e) Banco Nazionale Del Lavoro in facilitating the export of United Kingdom origin military equipment to Iraq since 1985.

Mr. Needham: Matters relating to the export of defence equipment from the United Kingdom to Iraq are for Lord Justice Scott's inquiry to consider.

Export Licences

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will now make it his policy to permit public disclosure of information contained in section C6 of the export licence application form, where the prospective export is deemed to be a dual-use military-sensitive technology.

Mr. Needham: No. I see no reason to change the policy followed by successive Administrations that details of individual export licence applications should not be made public.

Arms Embargos

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which countries have been subject to United Kingdom's arms embargos over the last 20 years; and for which exact periods.

Mr. Needham: I will write to the hon. Gentleman with the details.

Japan (Energy Talks)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the matters discussed in the bilateral meeting between the European Community and Japan on energy matters held at the end of October.

Mr. Eggar: The meeting on 30 October was between directorate general XVII (energy) of the European Commission and the Japanese Ministry of International Trade and Industry. I understand that they discussed a broad range of energy issues.

Coal Industry

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will await the publication of the Trade and Industry Select Committee's report into the future of the coal industry before publishing the results of his departmental inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The results of the Government's coal review will be published in a White Paper early in the new year. The timing of publication of the Trade and Industry Select Committee's report is a matter for the Committee, but I believe that it will be helpful to the House if it is available when the House debates the White Paper.

Nuclear Electric

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures he has taken and plans to take as part of the energy review to assess accurately Nuclear Electric's economic case for extending the life of the seven Magnox stations; which outside consultants are being used by his Department for this purpose; how many civil service personnel-hours will be required to assess Nuclear Electric's submission to his Department's inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The coal review is considering the implications of the statutory obligation on electricity suppliers to purchase non-fossil power, including that from nuclear sources. Ernst and Young has been appointed to assist the coal review team in

(i) the assessment and analysis of information provided by Nuclear Electric plc and verified by Nuclear Electric's auditors, BDO Binder Hamlyn, on the costs of the company's Magnox stations with particular emphasis on the avoidable costs of premature closure, and on the cash flow and accounting implications;

(ii) the examination of information provided by Nuclear Electric, to the DTI and the Select Committee in respect of its actual and projected receipts of the fossil fuel levy.

The coal review team will be considering carefully the evidence provided by Nuclear Electric and the results of this work.

Nuclear Levy

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the purpose of the nuclear levy.

Mr. Eggar: The purpose of the fossil fuel levy is to finance the above-market element of the price paid by the regional electricity companies for electricity purchased under qualifying arrangements within the non-fossil fuel obligation.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will estimate the average avoidable costs for each kilowatt hour of generating electricity by Magnox, ACR, Sizewell B, United Kingdom coal, imported coal and CCGT.

Mr. Eggar: My Department is assessing the relative costs of coal-fired and other sources of generation as part of the Government's coal review.

Overseas Contracts

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the estimated value of contracts between United Kingdom industry and (a) Iraq, (b) Iran and (c) Indonesia since the installation of the current regimes in each country.

Mr. Needham: Figures for contract values are unobtainable. The value of United Kingdom exports of goods to the countries in question was as follows. Iraq from 1979 to October 1992 £5,092·2 million, Iran from 1989 to October 1992 £1,563·1 million, Indonesia from 1966 to October 1992 £4,374·1 million. Figures for 1965 are not available.

Economic Trends

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what forecast he has made of trends in the economy in the south-east region between 1993 and 1998.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department does not forecast future trends in regional economic performance.

Power Station, Wirral

Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the applications currently before his Department or the Office of Electricity Regulation to build a gas power station on the Wirral; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Micro-wave Transceiver

Mr. Purchase: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research he has commissioned into the biological effect on people from micro-wave transceivers of the type currently being positioned on the top of high-rise council flats in Wolverhampton; and what assessment he has made of whether the equipment which his Department has licensed companies to install meets the appropriate British and international standards necessary to safeguard residents from any harmful effects.

Mr. Leigh: The Radiocommunications Agency of the Department of Trade and Industry monitors work undertaken, in the United Kingdom and abroad, on the biological effects of electromagnetic radiation. The agency's memorandum entitled "Safety Precautions Relating to Intense Radio Frequency Radiation"—RA 119—refers to the exposure levels recommended by the Medical Research Council and is available to manufacturers, owners, employers and operators who have a responsibility in relation to the safe use of radio.

Vietnam

Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to review the ban on ECGD cover for trade with Vietnam; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: There is no ban on ECGD cover for Vietnam. The availability of such cover for any market is dependent upon the ECGD's assessment of the risks and payment performance.

In the case of Vietnam, the ECGD will consider United Kingdom investments. However, cover for medium and long term trade credits was withdrawn following defaults on payment. Unfortunately these remain unremedied, but the ECGD will continue to watch developments closely with a view to resuming cover when conditions are sufficiently improved.

Rural Post Offices

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes are envisaged in the provision of Government services over the counters of post offices in Wales in the light of the recent statement by the Post Office; and what representations have been made about the needs of rural Wales in this regard.

Mr. Leigh: It is not envisaged that any changes in the provision of Government services over the counters of post offices in Wales will result from the restructuring of Post Office Counters Ltd. which was announced on 3 December. No representations have been received about the needs of rural Wales in the specific context of this restructuring which will have no effect on the number on staffing of individual post offices.

Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Hague: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the future of the small firms loan guarantee scheme.

Mr. Heseltine: I am today announcing a number of changes to the small firms loan guarantee scheme which will focus lending more closely on those businesses which will most benefit from this type of support.

First, in order to give greater assistance to businesses in our inner cities I will be extending and further enhancing the scheme's inner city variant which already provides additional benefits over the main scheme. From April next year the special terms will be available to eligible small firms in successful city challenge areas as well as those in inner city task force areas. I can announce further help for firms in such areas. The premium paid by firms to the Government for the guarantee will be halved from the current level of 2 per cent. of the guaranteed portion of the loan to 1 per cent.

These changes will extend the special terms to many more potential borrowers and will enable them to borrow more cheaply.

Two further changes will be made to the scheme overall, also to take effect from April next year. These are:

(i) the introduction of a minimum lending level of £5,000 for support under the scheme, except within those areas eligible for the special inner city terms;

(ii) the exclusion of a number of local services where the support for firms has previously been largely at the expense of displacement of business from other firms in the locality. The sectors affected are retaling, hairdressing, taxi and cab hire and motor vehicle repair.

In the longer term, I will be exploring how the scheme could further be improved by linking loans with appropriate help, advice and training in business skills.

These changes will help ensure that Government support under the scheme which amounts to £177 million since it began in 1981 and enabled £980 million to be lent to over 32,000 small firms, remains focused on those areas where the maximum benefit can be obtained for businesses and the taxpayer.

Machine Tools Exports

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total amount of machine tools exported to (a) Iraq and (b) Iran in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 8 December 1992]: The figures for 1991 were as follows:

Iraq—nil.
Iran—£9·5 million.

Manufactured Goods

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list in percentage change order the 50 classifications of manufactured goods which have shown greatest imports growth since 1979, and the balance of trade deficit or surplus on each in 1979 and currently.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 10 December 1992]: The standard international trade classification was revised in 1988. It is, therefore, not possible to compare current data with data prior to 1988 at a sufficiently detailed level.

Tropical Timber

Mr. Morley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what quantity of mahogany was imported into the United Kingdom in 1992 to date from Brazil.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 11 December 1992]: The information is not available for 1992 because the United Kingdom trade classification no longer separately indentifies mahogany from other non-coniferous woods. Until 1991 mahogany was identified as code 440723901 of the standard international trade classification, revision 3. The latest available figures are for 1991, when the United Kingdom imported 45,762 cu m of mahogany from Brazil.

Bogus Business Directories

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he is taking to prevent or discourage the promotion of bogus business directories.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 11 December 1992]: The Unsolicited Goods and Services Act 1971 makes it an offence to demand payment in respect of a directory entry which has not been ordered by the person concerned. This is effective in preventing any such requests originating in the United Kingdom. My Department publishes warnings and an information sheet to alert businesses to offences by foreign companies.

Financial Reporting Review Panel

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what legislation governs appeals by shareholders against the decisions of the Financial Reporting Review Panel.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Section 245B of the Companies Act 1985 provides that a person authorised by the Secretary of State may make an application to the courts for a declaration that annual accounts of a company do not comply with the requirements of the Act and for an order requiring the preparation of revised accounts. The Financial Reporting Review Panel—FRRP—has been so authorised. It is for the courts to decide the merits of any case brought by the FRRP. Since the FRRP exercises public law functions under section 245B it is thought that the courts would decide that it is a body subject to judicial review, although this issue has not been before the courts. It is for the courts to decide who could bring applications for judicial review.

TRANSPORT

Nuclear Material

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what number of shipments of plutonium nitrate have taken place from Dounreay to Sellafield since April 1988; what routes have been taken; and what safety assessment his Department has made.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: There have been eight shipments using the route from Thurso by road to Scrabster then by sea to Workington and by road to Sellafield, in flasks approved by the Department in 1979: this approval has been renewed every three years since then.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what internal reviews his Department has conducted or commissioned into the criteria developed to assess the standards of integrity of transport containers developed to carry plutonium to and from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No such internal reviews have been carried out. Staff from the Department's radioactive materials transport division have represented the United Kingdom in the International Atomic Energy Agency's review of the transport of plutonium by air.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what immersion tests have been conducted by his Department on the casks designed to transport plutonium by sea;

(2) if he will place in the Library details of validity tests undertaken by his Department's laboratories on the standards recommended by the International Atomic Energy Agency for type A and type B packages, respectively for the carriage of nuclear materials.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department does not undertake regulatory test work on packages; this is the responsibility of the consignors. The Department's role is to assess test results for compliance with the appropriate regulations.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department receives routinely on the transport into, within and from the United Kingdom of unsafeguarded military plutonium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence is responsible for matters concerning the transport of radioactive materials for military purposes. I have therefore been asked to reply. My Department is kept fully informed of movements of all such materials, including military plutonium into, within and from the United Kingdom. Transport is carried out using containers which are designed, manufactured and tested in complete conformity with the appropriate International Atomic Energy Agency regulations.

Staff Statistics

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list by grade and location, the number of staff employed in the marine office;

(2) if he will list by grade and location, the number of staff employed in his Department's headquarters buildings in London;

(3) if he will list by grade, the number of staff employed by his Department;

(4) if he will list by grade and location, the number of staff employed in traffic area offices.

Mr. Norris: I am placing copies of the information requested in the Library.

Rail Investment

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of the total spent on rail investment in 1991 was provided through direct Government subsidies.

Mr. Freeman: Some 59 per cent. of rail investment—British Rail, London Underground, Docklands light railway and new light railways—in Great Britain in the financial year 1991-92 was financed by direct subsidy from central Government. Additional support was provided indirectly through revenue support grant to metropolitan districts, which fund a part of British Rail's investment in regional railways and aid light projects.

Welsh Rail Services

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much money has been invested in Welsh railway services in each year since 1979, (a) in cash terms and (b) adjusted for inflation.

Mr. Roger Freeman: My Department does not hold the information requested. Details of investment by British Rail are not broken down by country.

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people used railway services in Wales in each year since 1980.

Mr. Freeman: My Department does not hold the information requested. Statistics of rail usage are not broken down by country.

British Rail

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the required rate of return from British Rail for (a) existing Trainload Freight assets, (b) existing Railfreight Distribution assets, (c) new investment by Trainload Freight and (d) new investment by Railfreight Distribution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail's current financial objectives were set by the then Secretary of State for Transport in 1989. The objectives set an overall target for Railfreight of earning a profit of £50 million in 1992-93. This was broadly equivalent to a 4·5 per cent. return on the then estimated net asset values. The objectives also said that a return of 8 per cent. should be the basis for decisions on new investment.

Red Star Service

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to introduce safeguards preventing any new owner of the present Red Star service from switching traffic to the roads.

Mr. Freeman: Rail transport offers considerable competitive advantages over road for the rapid delivery of parcels. Effective exploitation of these advantages by the private sector will best ensure maximum use of rail for the delivery of parcels, not the artificial restriction of Red Star to one mode of transport in all circumstances.

Surveyor General's Organisation

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now issue the consultation paper on the scope for increased private sector participation in the survey and certification work currently done by the Surveyor General's Organisation.

Mr. Norris: The consultation paper was issued today. It is being sent to organisations representating a wide range of shipping and related interests. I hope that they will consider very carefully the proposals it contains and let me have their views. In particular, I hope that bodies which are interested in taking on ship survey and certification work will come forward. Copies of the consultation paper have been placed in the Library.

Level Crossing Grant

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport under what legislative authority, and for what purposes, level crossing grant is paid to British Rail.

Mr. Freeman: Under EC regulation 1192/69 railway undertakings are eligible for compensation to eliminate financial disparities which other transport modes do not have to bear, including the provision of level crossing facilities. British Rail receives from central Government a grant covering 50 per cent. of the costs of providing such facilities. The Railways Act 1974 provides the Secretary of State with the relevant statutory powers.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive Union Railways' report on the channel tunnel rail link; and if it will be made publicly available.

Mr. Freeman: By the end of the month. Union Railways plans in due course to publish a version of the report which excludes some sensitive material that is, for example, commercially confidential.

Rail Freight

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much freight was carried by rail in Britain in each year since 1987.

Mr. Freeman: This information is contained in table 5.14 of "Transport Statistics Great Britain 1992".

Rail Privatisation

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish his proposed guidance on fare control referred to in paragraph 2.3 of "The Franchising of Passenger Rail Services" before introducing legislation to privatise British Rail.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 11 December 1992]: We intend to make the draft guidance to be given to the franchising authority on fares available in draft in time for hon. Members to consider it during the passage of the privatisation legislation.

Network SouthEast

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the routes on Network SouthEast that he will treat as providing socially necessary rail services attracting continuing payment of Government subsidy after such services are franchised.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 11 December 1992]: It will be for the new franchising authority to decide on the appropriate level of passenger services to procure through franchises in line with the overall guidance provided for him by the Secretary of State. Any subsidy required and its level will be determined by competitive bidding.

Driving Licence Fees

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will reduce the licence fee for applicants for a driving licence at the age of 70 years or above.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The present £6 fee for the three-yearly renewal of driving licences from age 70 is less than the average cost of issuing these licences. No reduction is therefore possible.

Euroroutes

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions have taken place between his Department and the appropriate department in the European Community regarding the provision of Euroroutes in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Department of Transport officials, along with officials of other member states and international organisations concerned with road transport, have been taking part in the motorway working group set up by the European Commission to consider trans-European road networks.

Road Deaths

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the number of deaths caused by (a) drivers under the influence of drink and (b) drivers falling asleep in each of the last three years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Estimates of fatal casualties in accidents in which at least one driver, or motor-cyclist, has a blood alcohol level in excess of the local limit are as follows:

	Number
1991	700

No reliable estimate is available of the number of deaths in accidents caused by drivers falling asleep at the wheel. The problem is likely to be greatest on motorways; the total number of motorway fatalities from any cause in the years 1989 to 1991 was: 233, 229 and 234.

Bridges

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make third party quality certification mandatory for firms designing and erecting bridges.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department's officials will shortly be discussing the possible recognition of an independent quality assurance—QA—certification scheme with the British Constructional Steelwork Association. The scheme may encompass also those aspects of the detailed design of steelwork which are carried out by steelwork fabricators.

Such recognition could lead to QA certification being made a mandatory requirement of the Department's specification for highway works for a specified steelwork range. In accordance with EC directives, the Department would have to recognise corresponding accredited schemes in other EC member countries, provided that they were equivalent to the scheme recognised in the United Kingdom.

In the meantime, the quality of steelwork for departmental construction schemes is ensured by checking that the materials and workmanship, and the erection of the finished steelwork, comply with the Department's specification for highway works and with the relevant British standards. This checking is carried out by the Department's agent, usually the engineer to the contract, and, where necessary, involves inspection and testing in works located in other countries.

EC Speed Limits

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement outlining the response of his Department to proposed EC directives on harmonising goods vehicles and coach speed limits in the EC.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We consider that speed limits are better set at the level of member states, as they have to take account of road geometry, road user behaviour and levels of enforcement, which differ across the Community.

Pedestrian Injuries

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many pedestrians were killed or injured by (a) reversing and (b) vehicles left at a junction controlled by traffic lights in the last 12 months for which figures are available; and if he will divide these figures by age.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The information requested is given in the table.

Pedestrians killed and injured: by vehicle manoeuvre: 1991

0 to 4 years	143	5
5 to 7 years	75	9
8 to 11 years	66	14
12 to 15 years	61	22
16 to 19 years	89	28
20 to 29 years	296	44
30 to 39 years	231	26
40 to 49 years	185	27
50 to 59 years	222	26
60 to 69 years	370	21
70 to 79 years	458	34
80 years and over	329	20
All ages[1]	2,600	287

[1] Includes ages unknown.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has made of the amount of carbon dioxide which will be emitted from the existing heavy goods vehicles fleet during its remaining lifetime.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have made no estimate of this amount and the figure would depend on assumptions about the rate of replacement of vehicles in the existing heavy goods vehicles fleet. For last year it has been estimated that heavy goods vehicles in the United Kingdom emitted about 6·2 million tonnes of carbon dioxide, measured as carbon.

Strategic Plan

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to develop a cross-sectoral long-term transport strategic plan for the United Kingdom including set targets and individual strategic initiatives to achieve the long-term goal.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government's aims and objectives for transport are set out in the Department's most recently published expenditure plans for transport, Cm. 1907.

Winchester College

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions or correspondence he or any officials in his Department have had with representatives of Winchester college within the past 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Officials of my Department have had contact with Winchester college on a number of occasions in the last 12 months in relation to the acquisition of their land for the M3 motorway and other related matters. They have also attended meetings of the St. Catherine's hill/Twyford Down Forum, of which Winchester college is a member.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will request the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors to carry out an independent assessment of the market value of the land compulsorily purchased by his Department from Winchester college; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. Independent advice on the market value of land acquired under compulsory purchase powers is given to my Department by the district valuer.

Road Schemes

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what standard planning horizon is used when assessing the economic benefits of road schemes.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The appraisal of trunk road schemes takes account of costs and benefits over a 30-year period.

Mrs. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research he has commissioned into the indirect economic benefits resulting from road building in the last 10 years; and what plans he has to commission further research on this subject.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: During the past 10 years, the only research my Department has conducted into these matters was an internal review into whether there were benefits to tourism from road improvements additonal to those included in the usual appraisal of the economic benefits. The review concluded that in a country with well-developed transport links, there were unlikely to be benefits additional to those usually considered. The review was published by the Department as, "Tourism, Leisure —and Roads" in October 1987. My Department has no plans to undertake further research on this subject.

Job Creation

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate how many jobs, per pound sterling invested, result from (a) road building and (b) rail investment.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Government have made no such estimate, nor do they believe that the comparison would be either meaningful or useful.

Speed Traps

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to check the sale and use of radar speed-trap detectors.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The use of such devices is already an offence under the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949. Companies that supplied or advertised devices which could not be used legally have been successfully prosecuted for inciting members of the public to commit criminal offences.

Maritime Safety

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many maritime incidents occurred involving the misuse of emergency maritime channels in 1991 and 1992; what proposals he has to detect and prosecute repeat offenders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 7 December 1992]: I have been asked to reply.

No such incidents were reported by the Department of Transport to my Department's Radiocommunications Agency in 1991 and 1992. The detection and prosecution of offenders is an operational matter for the Radiocommunications Agency. The chief executive has been asked to write to the hon. and learned Member.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to combat the misuse of emergency maritime radio channels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 7 December 1992]: I have been asked to reply.

This is an operational matter for the Radiocommunications Agency. The chief executive has been asked to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from B. A. Maxwell to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 14 December 1992:

Your question number 80 on the Order Paper for 7 December asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many maritime incidents occurred involving the misuse of emergency maritime channels in 1991 and 1992; what proposals he has to detect and prosecute repeat offenders; and if he will make a statement. Your question number 81 asked the Secretary of State for Transport, what proposals he has to combat the misuse of emergency maritime radio channels; and if he will make a statement.

As you know, the Chief Executive of the Agency has been asked to write to you in answer to the second part of Question 80 and to Question 81 as these raise operational matters within this Agency's responsibility for the regulation of radio in the UK. I am replying in the absence of the Chief Executive.

The Agency is responsible for ensuring that radio users enjoy the highest possible standard of communications. In particular, our Ministers have asked us to give top priority to dealing with interference that affects the emergency or safety of life radio services.

The Agency's enforcement work extends over the entire radio spectrum but we do devote substantial effort to marine radio use. This is largely done through advice and education. Individual contact is an excellent way in which to emphasise the importance of responsible radio operation and educate users about this. In the last financial year my staff made direct contact with over 8,000 marine radio users. We also undertake initiatives to publicise the requirements for marine radio operation and Agency staff attend major boat shows and events such as Cowes Week.

All these efforts have resulted in a large increase in recent years in the number of marine radio users who have attained the necessary level of competence to operate marine radio and who should be well aware of the importance of correct operating practice, especially where channels designated for distress calls are concerned.

However, in cases in which advice and education is not enough, the Agency stands ready to take direct enforcement action. The maritime emergency channels arre monitored by HM Coastguards, who have a procedure for reporting to the Agency users who persistently fail to comply with the regulations so that the Agency can take appropriate follow-up action, including prosecution.

There were no such reports from the Coastguards to the Agency in the years you questioned but nevertheless the Agency has successfully prosecuted for various marine radio offences on three occasions in the present financial year and further prosecutions are pending. In the last two financial years there were a total of 12 prosecutions for marine radio offences and in all cases convictions were obtained.

I hope this is helpful.

WALES

Local Government Reform

10. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a further statement on the reform of local government in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I have had extensive consultations with the local authority associations and others. I shall announce my decisions as soon as possible.

Tourism

11. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the latest statistics on tourism within Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Despite world-wide economic difficulties the tourism industry in Wales has held up well in 1991. There was an increase of nearly 6 per cent. in the number of tourism trips taken in Wales by United Kingdom residents in 1991 compared with 1990, while expenditure by overnight and overseas visitors remained constant.

Inward Investment

12. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on inward investment to Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Wales continues to attract high levels of inward investment. Last year was a record year with 208 projects announced promising more than 16,000 new and safeguarded jobs and involving capital investment of £1,155 million. Since then (to the end of November 1992) a further 120 projects have been recorded promising nearly 10,000 jobs.

Local Government Reorganisation

14. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will publish his White Paper on the reorganisation of local government in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I shall announce my decisions as soon as possible.

Primary Schools (Expenditure)

15. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was spent per pupil in primary schools in Wales in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what was the comparable figure for 1978-79 at constant prices.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In 1990-91 current expenditure per pupil in primary schools in Wales was £1,412. The equivalent figure for 1978-79 was £1,038 in real terms.

Welsh Economy

16. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the prospects for the Welsh economy during 1993.

Mr. David Hunt: The prospects for the Welsh economy next year are encouraging. The essential ingredients for recovery are in place and I am confident that the sustained effort we have put into restructuring the economy of Wales will pay dividends during 1993.

Mineral Water

17. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the Welsh mineral water industry.

Mr. David Hunt: The bottled and mineral water industry in Wales continues to make encouraging progress.

Economic Development Strategy

18. Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement detailing the new moneys made available for the implementation of the economic development strategy prepared by the west Wales task force.

Mr. David Hunt: I received the report of the west Wales task force last week. I have asked the members of the west Wales strategy group to join me for detailed discussions of how to take forward the strategy set out in the report. We are to meet in January and I hope that the next few weeks will give all concerned sufficient opportunity to consider carefully their response to the report.

Manufacturing Industry

19. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the prospects for manufacturing industry in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Manufacturing output has risen by more than 25 per cent. since 1985, and more than 800 manufacturing plants have opened since 1980, employing more than 50,000. The industry in Wales is well placed to take full advantage of economic recovery.

Unemployment

13. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the current percentage levels of male unemployment in (a) Merthyr Tydfil, (b) the Rhymney Valley, (c) Mid Glamorgan and (d) Wales; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: In October 1992, 17·9 per cent., 17 per cent. and 13·3 per cent. respectively.

20. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has of the number of unemployed in (a) Ogmore, (b) Mid Glamorgan and (c) the Principality securing employment since 9 April.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is not available.

21. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact of current unemployment levels on young people and the community in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of people aged under 25 years, and registered as unemployed in October of this year, has fallen by more than 35 per cent. compared with the number of those registered in the same month in 1986. This compares with a United Kingdom decrease of just under 28 per cent. for the same period.

The training and enterprise councils and the careers service are working closely together to ensure that suitable youth training provision is made available for 16 and 17-year-old school leavers. Measures recently announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment (including the new training for work programme) will further extend the range of assistance available.

Trust Hospitals (Board Membership)

22. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how he ensures that the membership of the boards of opt-out trust hospitals is representative of the community served by the trust.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend makes all appointments to national health service trusts on the basis of aptitude and merit.

Examinations

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to extend the system of publishing the results of academic examinations to examinations for vocational qualifications; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In the main, vocational qualifications are gained through studies at further education colleges. We are not planning to publish Welsh Office statistics about examination achievements in colleges in Wales.

However, further education colleges have been asked to publish details of examination and assessment results and student destinations on a voluntary basis for the academic year 1991-92. We intend making regulations requiring the colleges to publish this information for the academic year 1992-93.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many acres of land in Wales are managed by the Forestry Commission.

Sir Wyn Roberts: At 31 March 1992, the Forestry Commission managed 138,671 hectares (some 342,700 acres) of land in Wales, of which 127,843 hectares (some 315,900 acres) were woodland.

River Dee Crossing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the daily average rate of vehicles crossing the River Dee at Queensferry A494 at peak periods.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The daily average rate of vehicles crossing the River Dee at Queensferry on the A494 during the peak month of August is 61,600.

Independent Schools

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all of the independent schools in Wales and the number of pupils registered at each one.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A list of all independent schools in Wales together with the number of both full and part-time pupils on roll at each school as at January 1992 is given in the following tables:

Severn Bridge

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the daily average rate of vehicles crossing the River Severn by means of the Severn bridge, M4.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The average daily flow crossing the Severn bridge between May and October this year (the six-month period after the increase in toll charges) was 54,200 vehicles.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of confirmed cases of BSE, by county, for November 1992.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is as follows. These cases will have a date of report and date of clinical onset of disease before 1 November.

Euroroutes

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions have taken place between the Welsh Office and the appropriate Department in the European Community regarding the provision of Euroroutes in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The lead in discussions with the European Commission has been taken by the Department of Transport. Arrangements are being made for me to meet the EC Transport Commissioner to discuss the trans-European road network.

Agricultural Training Board

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many responses he has received on the consultation document, "The Future Status and Operation of the Agricultural Training Board in Wales"; and how many favour Agricultural Training Board Cymru being funded in future through the Welsh Office.

Mr. David Hunt: There were 80 responses of which 20 favoured funding by my Department.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what targets he has set for the Welsh Development Agency for the generation of gross income from the sales of industrial land and factory buildings (a) in the present financial year and (b) in 1993-94; what assessment he has made of the impact of the recession on the projected gross income from the sale of such land and buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have announced that the agency's gross expenditure for 1993-94 will be £171·4 million. In determining the allocation of resources for the agency, I take account of a wide range of factors. Further details of the agency's programmes, including income, will be published in due course in the normal way.

For the current year, receipts are expected to amount to £91 million in total.

HEALTH

London Hospitals

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each London district health authority the number of (a) attendances at hospital accident and emergency departments and (b) admissions to hospital of babies in the first six months of life for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Yeo: The available information is shown in the tables.

Leukaemia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent studies have been conducted by her Department into the incidences of leukaemia and other blood cancers by medical districts in (a) Cumbria, (b) Lancashire and (c) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sackville: The Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE) has so far produced three reports to the Government on the incidence of leukaemia and cancer in young people. Its first report (1986)[1] dealt with new information about discharges from Sellafield, Cumbria, which had not been available to an ad hoc advisory group which reported in 1984[2]. Its second report (1987)[3] considered reports of an increased incidence of childhood leukaemia in the vicinity of the Dounreay nuclear establishment in Caithness, Scotland. COMARE's third report (1989)[4] considered the incidence of childhood cancer in the vicinity of the atomic weapons establishment at Aldermaston in West Berkshire, and the Royal Ordnance factory at Burghfield, North Hampshire. COMARE has made a number of recommendations for further reseach which has either been completed, or is currently under way or planned. An important issue identified by COMARE in their third report was the need to establish the national pattern of leukaemia incidence to enable local findings to be placed in context. This has been addressed by a study published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys in 1991[5]. The incidence of childhood cancer in Cumbria and around Sellafield has now been reviewed and the results are due to be published in the new year. This study was recommended by COMARE and will be considered alongside other evidence as part of the committee's current review of childhood cancer around Sellafield.

Hypothermia

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) men and (b) women have died of hypothermia in the Tooting constituency in each year since 1987.

Mr. Sackville: Information is not available in the form requested. Deaths with a mention of hypothermia on the death certificate for the London Borough of Wandsworth for the years requested are shown in the table.

Trent regional health authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be her Department's criteria for selecting a successor to the present chairman of Trent regional health authority; when she expects to announce the name of the next chairman of Trent regional health authority; and when the new appointee will commence his or her duties.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have no plans to replace Sir Michael Carlisle as chairman of the Trent regional health authority.

Contraceptives

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish in tabular form the annual total cost of contraceptive provision in England between 1979 and 1989-90 in both cash and constant prices terms excluding fees to general practitioners but including the cost of drugs and appliances prescribed by them and dispensed by retail pharmacy and appliance contractors and by family planning clinics.

Mr. Sackville: The table shows an estimate of the annual total costs of national health service contraceptive provision. The figures are an aggregate of health authorities' expenditure on family planning services (including drugs and appliances prescribed by family planning clinics) and the estimated net ingredient cost of contraceptive drugs prescribed by GPs and dispensed by retail pharmacy and appliance contractors.

Between 1979-80 and 1989-90, the Department also made section 64 grants totalling £2·2 million to voluntary organisations involved in the provision of family planning advice.

Press and Public Relations

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many press releases her Department has issued since 9 April.

Mr. Sackville: The Department has issued 301 press releases since 9 April.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many press and public relations officers currently work for her Department; and what information she has on the number working for (a) regional health authorities, (b) district health authorities and (c) national health service trusts.

Mr. Sackville: Functions which are commonly associated with press and public relations are carried out by the Department's information division; 39 staff are currently employed as information officers.

The number of press and public relations officers working in the national health service is not collected centrally.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the list of (a) journalists, (b) departmental officials, (c) NHS personnel and (d) other people who regularly receive copies of her Department's press releases.

Mr. Sackville: No.

The Department regularly issues press releases through the Central Office of Information to enable journalists to report on departmental and ministerial announcements. Distributions are also made to all national health service general managers and a limited number of non-journalists and organisations.

The names of recipients vary depending on the subject.

Wessex Regional Health Authority

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice her Department gave Wessex regional health authority on the inclusion of penalty clauses and performance guarantees in contracts negotiated between the health authority and Wessex Integrated Systems Ltd./CFM Health Systems; what steps were taken to ensure that this advice was followed; and what assessment she has made of the results.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department of Health issued guidance on good practice in the field of national health service computer procurement in 1987. This guidance is currently being reviewed by a joint working party of the Department and the NHS Supplies Authority and new guidance is expected to be issued soon.

The Department also gave advice on various contractual matters to Wessex at its request.

I understand that the contract between Wessex Regional Health Authority and WIS/CFM is now the subject of legal action.

London Health Services

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account she will take of differing results of independent assessments in considering the cost of closing hospitals, including the Royal Marsden, as proposed in the Tomlinson report.

Dr. Mawhinney: When the Tomlinson report was published, we invited the organisations concerned to submit comments on its recommendations. A number have done so, including the Royal Marsden, and we shall take their views into account when putting forward our proposals.

National Vocational Qualifications

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a study of the work done by the Suffolk county consortium in national vocational qualifications in health and social care and make the findings available to all training agencies and responsible bodies that are starting to implement national vocational qualifications; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We welcome the introduction of national vocational qualifications (NVQs) for health and social care. Joint initiatives where practical and relevant, such as the Suffolk County Consortium, are also welcome. The implementation of NVQs is a matter for employers, who are also responsible for providing opportunities for training.

Deputising Services

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has to give financial assistance to medical deputising services run by general practice co-operatives; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: None at this stage, but I have agreed to discuss with the representatives of the profession the out of hours arrangements made by general practitioners.

Well House NHS Trust

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients called for operations since 1 June by the Well House NHS trust have been sent home after arriving at Barnet general hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not collected centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Anthony Orton, chairman of the Wellhouse Trust, for details.

Dr. Kypros Loucas

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her oral answer of 8 December, Official Report, column 681, (1) if she will give details of the investigations of the circumstances in which Dr. Kypros Loucas left Broadmoor hospital in 1989; and if she will make a statement.

(2) what plans she has to investigate the activities of Dr. Kypros Loucas; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him and the hon. Member for Rochdale (Ms. Lynne) on 10 December 1992, Official Report, columns 781-82.

EMPLOYMENT

Training

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals she has to increase retraining programmes for unemployed adults over 21 years of age; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 10 December 1992]: Training for work, which will replace employment training, high technology national training and employment action from April 1993, will allow training and enterprise councils scope to provide opportunities for 320,000 unemployed adults aged 18 and over to train or retrain to meet their assessed needs. This is part of the package of employment and training measures which we are increasing by nearly 500,000 opportunities in 1993-94.

Food Service Industry

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will estimate how many students work (a) full time and (b) part time in the food service industry; what were the comparable figures for 1988, 1989 and 1990; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 10 December 1992]: Estimates from the labour force survey (LFS) of the numbers of students (those still at school or in other full-time education) employed part-time in the hotels and catering industry (class 66 of the standard industrial classification) are given in the following table. The numbers of students working full-time in the industry are too small for reliable estimates to be produced from the LFS.

Unemployment Statistics

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will give the latest actual and percentage figures for the number of adult males (a) registered unemployed, (b) receiving income support and (c) economically inactive for the United Kingdom, Scotland, Wales and the South Wales valley initiative area.

Mr. McLoughlin: [holding answer 10 December 1992]: The latest available information is given in the tables.

ENVIRONMENT

United Nations Conference on Environment and Development

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to providing funding to enable non-governmental organisation involvement in consultations on United Kingdom implementation of its Rio obligations undertaken of the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

Mr. Maclean: The Government involved the non-governmental community throughout in preparations for the Earth summit, and provided funding for UNEP-UK's "NGO Earth Summit Report". The Department of the Environment is providing funding of £150,000 over three years until 1994-95 to the International Institute for Environment and Development to continue to take an active role in the United Kingdom's follow-up to the Earth summit. We are also sponsoring an international meeting of non-governmental organisations to be held in Manchester next September.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken, and what further steps he proposes to take, to promote the dialogue with the British academic community on United Nations Conference on Environment and Development follow-up.

Mr. Maclean: The Government consulted the academic community throughout the preparations for the Earth summit. We intend to continue this policy during the follow-up process and in the preparation of national reports. We also hope members of the British academic community will join in our "Partnerships for Change '93" conference in Manchester next September.

Newham Council

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the cumulative total of the capital expenditure of the London borough of Newham, for which repayment and interest is still required, for which Her Majesty's Government have given permission and the provisional sum he has allocated to the borough in respect of standard spending assessment for 1993-94 for expenditure under this heading.

Mr. Robin Squire: The debt charges element of Newham's provisional 1993-94 SSA is £20·374 million. This is the revenue which the Government consider appropriate for Newham to spend in 1993-94 on interest and debt repayment on borrowing required to provide a standard level of service. It is based on a notional outstanding debt figure at 1 April 1993 of £129·859 million.

It is not possible to calculate the cumulative total of capital expenditure for which permission was given by the Government. Past and present decisions on the financing of capital expenditure are a matter for the London borough of Newham subject to the availability of credit approvals.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to prevent CFC stockpiling in advance of production phase-out dates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The supply of new CFCs to the European market was cut to 50 per cent. of 1986 levels at the beginning of this year. We expect to agree further interim cuts in the revision of the European Regulation which should take place at the Council of Environment Ministers on 15 and 16 December.

Sellafield

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what procedural arrangements need to be completed before his Department can give clearance to the start-up of operations at the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield in Cumbria; and what further reasons there are for the delay.

Mr. Maclean: No discharges of radioactive waste from the thermal oxide reprocessing plant (THORP) can be made unless they are authorised by the chief inspector of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (HMIP) and my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (MAFF). Statutory consultation on their proposed draft authorisations for the Sellarfield site, including THORP has already begun and will end on 11 January. HMIP and MAFF will then consider whether there is a need to make changes to the draft authorisations in the light of comments received. Once they have decided whether, and if so how, the authorisations should be amended, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and my right hon. Friend the Minister MAFF, in accordance with statutory provisions, will offer British Nuclear Fuels (BNFL) the opportunity of a hearing and will consider whether to offer a hearing to such local authorities or other persons whom they consider appropriate. BNFL also requires a licence to operate THORP from the nuclear installations inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive.

Vehicle Noise

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to extend the noise nuisance abatement powers under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to cover jet-skis and boats.

Mr. Maclean: Part III of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 controls all statutory nuisance emanating from premises, which includes land and vessels. Noise nuisance from jet-skis and boats can therefore already be controlled under these provisions.

Euratom Treaty

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions he has had with the European Commission in regard to the implementation of article 35 of the Euratom treaty.

Mr. Maclean: My officials have recently confirmed formally with the Commission our agreement on the conduct of Commission verifications of monitoring facilities for radioactivity in the United Kingdom environment under article 35 of the Euratom treaty.

Fire Precautions

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the paper "Fires Involving Sprinklers" published by the Home Office in July 1990; and what account was taken of the conclusions of this paper in framing current building regulations covering fire precautions in very large low-rise buildings.

Mr. Baldry: Although the report was not available until after the technical review of the regulations was substantially complete, officials were in close contact with their Home Office and fire research station colleagues throughout the review. The report showed which type of sprinklers could be most beneficial in large shops of different configurations. Changes made to the building regulations which came into effect in June this year give greater recognition to the beneficial role of sprinklers.

Birkenhead to Seacombe Development Proposals

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what planning applications are currently before his Department for development of the land between Birkenhead and Seacombe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: No planning application is currently before my Department in the area mentioned.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the financing of the secretariat of the convention to control toxic waste.

Mr. Maclean: Non-parties to the Basel convention will be invited to make voluntary contributions to meet the costs of administration. In order to demonstrate its support for the convention, the United Kingdom has made voluntary contributions of $50,000 for each of the last three financial years. A similar amount will be paid in the first quarter of 1993.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his present estimate of the size of and coverage of the ozone layer; and what estimates were made in 1990 and 1985.

Mr. Maclean: The ozone layer covers the entire globe but a progressive depletion in its thickness has been observed since the mid-1980s, with strong evidence that this is due to man-made ozone-depleting chemicals. Assessments of depletion published in 1992 by the WMO/UNEP Scientific Assessment Panel indicated a total ozone loss rate of 8 per cent. per decade in the early spring over northern mid latitudes (30–60°N), a peak downward trend at high southern latitudes in October-December of greater than 35 per cent. per decade and an average global depletion of 3 per cent. per decade.

Assessments by the International Ozone Trends Panel have been published by the World Meteorological Organisation in 1985, 1988, 1989 and 1992 and by the Department's stratospheric ozone review group in 1987, 1988, 1990 and 1991. Copies of these reports have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the results of the conference on the ozone layer in Copenhagen.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 27 November 1992 to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike), Official Report, column 85.

Council House Sales, East Anglia

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by authorities the number and value of council house sales in East Anglia in each year since 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Information on sales of council houses reported by local authorities in East Anglia in the period April 1983 to March 1992 is given in the table. The figures exclude dwellings transferred to housing associations in large scale voluntary transfers. Such transfers took place in Broadland in April 1990 and in Suffolk Coastal in May 1991. The transfers involved some 9,000 dwellings valued at about £50 million.

Homelessness

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) families and (b) single people were accepted by local authorities as homeless in each local authority area in the United Kingdom and each standard planning region in the United Kingdom in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Baldry: Local authorities in England report the number of households they accept as homeless in their annual housing investment programme (HIP1) returns. Total acceptances cover households which include dependent children or a pregnant woman, single people, childless couples and other adult households but only the first of these groups is separately identified.

The available information for individual authorities for 1991-92 are in columns C11 (total acceptances) and C2b1 (those including children or a pregnant woman) of the "HIP1 All Items Print". Regional totals are in the "HIP1 Regional Grossing". Both documents are in the Library.

For information about Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland respectively.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish the discussion document on Britain's carbon dioxide programme promised in "This Common Inheritance: The Second Year" report.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish a discussion paper on the strategy to reduce carbon dioxide emissions in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Howard: I am publishing today a discussion document: "Climate Change—Our National Programme for CO_2 Emissions". Copies have been placed in the Library.

This is the first step in implementing in the United Kingdom the climate change convention agreed at UNCED in June this year.

The convention has been signed by over 150 nations. As part of the process of ensuring that the convention is translated into effective action we in Britain must now begin drawing up our own programmes of measures to limit emissions of greenhouse gases. Carbon dioxide is the first priority.

I do not believe it would be right for the Government alone to determine the content of our programme. The programme needs contributions from all sectors of the economy. The discussion document describes:

the main principles of the Climate Change Convention, the sources of CO_2 emissions in the United Kingdom and the prospects for emissions in the year 2000, the opportunities for individuals, business, and public sector bodies to reduce CO_2 emissions, options for Government measures to supplement and support voluntary action.

Through the discussion document I am inviting business to commmit itself to taking action as part of our national programme, and I am seeking views on the scope for individuals to take further action and on the options for Government measures. I look forward to a full debate on these issues over the next three months.

Housing Action Trusts

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made with the further housing action trust proposals announced in his statement of 16 December 1991, at columns 59-62.

Sir George Young: I am pleased to announce that I have decided, after careful consideration of tenants' views and of the detailed feasibility studies for the estates, that there should be ballots of tenants on the proposals to establish Housing Action Trusts for the Castle Vale estate in Birmingham, and for the Lefevre Walk, Tredegar Road and Monteith estates in the Bow neighbourhood of Tower Hamlets.

I hope to announce ballot dates shortly. I shall do so as soon as I am satisfied that the consultations with tenants, which have been continuing for some time, have enabled them fully to explore and understand the implications for them of the establishment of HATs.

Meanwhile I have decided to appoint Mr. Richard Temple-Cox and Dr. Michael Barraclough respectively as prospective HAT chairs for the trusts. They will carry forward the necessary consultation with tenants, and help prepare for the major tasks to be undertaken by the trusts, if established.

While I am encouraged by the progress on the proposal for a HAT for Stonebridge Park in Brent, I have decided that it would not be appropriate to make a decision at this stage. I hope to be able to do so shortly.

Housing Finance

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a table showing capital spending on housing by region for each year since 1981 (a) at current prices and (b) at 1981 prices.

Sir George Young [holding answer 30 November 1992]: The available data on regional gross capital expenditure on housing by local authorities, which relate to financial years, are given in the tables. Corresponding figures for 1981-82 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a table showing housing turnover by region in each year since 1987.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 9 December 1992]: The available information is tabulated in table 14.2 of the MHSO publication Inland Revenue Statistics which is held in the Library. The years 1988-1991 are covered in the 1992 edition, and the year 1987 in the 1991 edition.

Wild Geese

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what have been the numbers of wild geese exports to Italy for the period from 1 September 1991 to 31 January 1992, inclusive; and if he will provide a breakdown by type of goose;

(2) how many licences for the export of wild geese have been issued since 31 January 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 11 December 1992]: According to our records, three licences to export wild geese have been issued since 31 January 1991. Only one of these licences was issued in the peirod from 1 September 1991 to 31 January 1992. This licence allowed the export of 177 dead Greylag geese (Anser anser) to Italy.

Zoos

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many zoos are currently licensed in the United Kingdom; and what are their locations.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 11 December 1992]: Zoo licences are issued by local authorities. The information they have supplied to my Department indicates that 219 zoos are currently licensed in England under the Zoo Licensing Act 1981. In addition, 54 premises have been granted dispensation from the provisions of the Act because of their size. The corresponding information for zoos in Scotland and Wales is held by the Scottish Office and the Welsh Ofice respectively. I have placed a list of zoos, together with a list of those premises which have been granted dispensation, in the Library of the House.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many United Kingdom zoos do not currently meet the terms of the proposed EC zoo directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 11 December 1992]: The proposed directive would require member states to introduce measures to license all zoos. it is difficult to be precise about its effect on individual zoos since it does not contain detailed standards. We would expect most zoos in Great Britain to meet its terms since they already comply with the strict standards set under the Zoo Licensing Act 1981.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce a bonding scheme to all zoos to ensure the proper relocation of zoo animals should British zoos be forced to close.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 11 December 1992]: I have no plans to do so.

Ostrich Farms

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications have been made under the Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976 to set up ostrich farms; and if he will list their location.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 11 December 1992]: This information is not held centrally, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Diesel Engine Trains

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines British Rail is required to follow, as regards limiting levels of pollution produced by diesel-engine trains.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

British Rail is required to meet the provisions of the Clean Air Act 1956, the Environmental Protection Act 1990, the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the low-level radioactive waste stockpiled at the Drigg disposal site originates from the reprocessing of imported foreign nuclear fuel.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

I understand from British Nuclear Fuels plc that, at the end of March 1992, some 5 per cent. by volume of the low-level radioactive waste disposed of at Drigg had arisen from the reprocessing of spent fuel from overseas.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Bank Notes

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Bank of England will continue to have the authority to authorise the issue of bank notes by domestic clearing banks in Scotland under the provisions of the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. Nelson: The Scottish note-issuing banks currently have statutory authority to issue their own bank notes, subject to certain requirements to hold Bank of England notes. Scottish notes are not formally legal tender but they may nevertheless be used in ordinary transactions.

Under article 105a of the Maastricht treaty, the European central bank—ECB—would have the exclusive right to authorise the issue of bank notes in member states participating in stage 3 of economic and monetary union —EMU. Article 16 of the protocol on the statute of the ECB, requires the ECB to respect as far as possible existing practices regarding the issue and design of banknotes. If the United Kingdom were to participate in stage 3 of EMU these articles would permit the ECB to authorise the Scottish banks to continue to issue their own notes. In stage 2 of EMU, and in stage 3 were the United Kingdom not to participate, the United Kingdom could continue to maintain its existing arrangements.

Racehorse Training

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest number of reported closures of racehorse training establishments since 1989; and what analysis he has made of the effects of lower rates of VAT in other EC countries, on the competitiveness of the United Kingdom racehorse training industry.

Sir John Cope: There is no information available on how many racehorse training yards have closed since 1989. The present difference in the VAT rates for training fees between EC member states has existed for many years and will not be affected by the introduction of the single market. Racehorse owners choose to put their horses for training to particular trainers for many reasons. The United Kingdom continues to retain a large number of highly respected and successful trainers.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what reviews he is currently carrying out in respect of the privatisation of the premium bond scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: None.

Tobacco

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his forecast revenue from tobacco taxes in 1992-93; and what the comparable figure was for 1986.

Sir John Cope: Revenue from tobacco excise duties is forecast to be £6,044 million in 1992-93. This figure is consistent with the Chancellor's recent autumn statement. Revenue from tobacco excise duties in 1986 was £4,640 million.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much the total tax levied on the United Kingdom's most popular price category cigarette brands has changed since May 1979.

Sir John Cope: In May 1979 a package of 20 king size cigarettes typically sold for 55p and the total tax was 39p. The corresponding price in 1992 is 221p per packet and the total tax is 168p. Over this period the tax percentage of the retail price has increased from 70 to 76 per cent.

European Banking System

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what dicussions he has had with his European Council counterparts on the conditions set out at article 34·2 of the protocol on the statute of the European system of central banks and the European central bank in the draft treaty on European union, during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Council.

Mr. Nelson: Article 34.2 of the protocol on the statute of the European system of central banks and the European central bank contains nothing requiring a Council discussion. No discussion of this article has taken place in the Finance Ministers' Council.

Mortgage Tax Relief

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current annual cost to the Exchequer of tax relief on mortgages; and what would be the cost to the Exchequer if tax relief on mortgages were limited to the 20 per cent. band.

Mr. Dorrell: The cost of mortgage interest tax relief in 1992-93 is provisionally estimated to be £5·2 billion based on the conventional assumption of no further changes in interest rates.

If relief for existing amounts of allowable interest were restricted to a rate of 20 per cent., the cost would be about £4·2 billion, a reduction of £1 billion.

Custom House, Dundee

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total cost of the refurbishment recently carried out to that part of the Custom House building in Dundee occupied by Customs and Excise staff; which Government Department paid for the refurbishment; and how long the refurbishment programme took from start to finish.

Sir John Cope: The total cost of restoration work to Dundee Custom House was some £1·4 million including fees and VAT. The scheme was initiated by the Property Services Agency which spent £0·4 million up to March 1990. Changes in the arrangements for managing Government property projects were introduced in April 1990. The remaining costs were shared between Customs and Excise—£0·5 million—and the Department of the Environment's directorate of property holdings—£0·5 million—although PSA continued to run the project as an agent. Following preliminary planning and consultation with the historic buildings and monument division of the Scottish Office, work started on site in October 1988 and took three and a half years.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which Government Department fixed the selling price of the refurbished part of Custom House in Dundee; what that selling price is; and which Government Departments will have to incur any financial loss resulting from sale at a price below the cost of the recent refurbishment.

Sir John Cope: Dundee Custom House is currently for sale, together with the adjoining property owned by the port authority. In accordance with normal practice, the selling price has not been fixed. Offers will be invited by a closing date once a reasonable level of interest has been generated. The selling price will depend on market interest and potential alternative uses.

Disposal is the responsibility of the Department of the Environment's directorate of property holdings. Together with the port authority, they have instructed James Barr and Son as selling agents.

Work to restore the stonework was necessary to make the building safe and, as a matter of Government stewardship of historic, buildings, to preserve its fabric. The effects of the work on the prospects of sale were a secondary consideration. It was never intended to recoup the cost of accumulated maintenance responsibilities through sale proceeds.

Pensions

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures the Government propose to take in respect of the pensions of those who retire during the period covered by the staging of the 1992 Top Salaries Review Body pay award.

Mr. Portillo: Earlier this year the Top Salaries Review Body recommended new salaries for judges, senior officers of the armed forces, and members of the higher civil service. The Government, taking into account wider implications, including the level of pay settlements in the private sector, decided to moderate the proposed increases and stage them over three years, bringing the total increase down to about half of the recommended level.

The pensions of those who retire normally during the period covered by the staging of the award will be based on the salary payable at or in the period before the date of retirement, in line with the policy applied for public service pensions since the announcement made by the then Prime Minister following the staging of the 1983-84 award.

Those who are retired early in the public interest during the staging period are in a different position from those who retire at the normal end of their career, since they could reasonably have expected to work until the deferred elements of the award had been fully or partially implemented. Arrangements are therefore being made so that senior military officers and civil servants who retired early in the public interest during the period over which the award will be staged need not suffer any pensions loss as a result of the staging.

Company Headquarters

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was (a) the number and percentage of the United Kingdom total and (b) the market value and percentage of the United Kingdom total of quoted companies with headquarters in each region in (i) 1979, (ii) 1983, (iii) 1987, (iv) 1991 and (v) currently.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 10 December 1992]: This information is not available centrally, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

World Bank and IMF

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to make the World bank and International Monetary Fund more conscious of the need to promote sustainable development.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 11 December 1992]: The IMF helps countries to lay foundations for sustainable development through its work in support of stabilisation measures and medium-term structural reform. The World bank pays full regard to the need for sustainable development, in particular with regard to the impact their programmes have on the environment and the poorest members of society. The current measures taken by the two institutions to achieve objectives in connection with sustainable development are described in detail in the 1992 annual reports, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the achievement of the structural adjustment programmes applied to countries by the World bank and the International Monetary Fund.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 11 December 1992]: The Government welcome the support given by the IMF and the World bank to countries pursuing adjustment programmes and the recent evidence of the improved economic performance that results from these programmes. The IMF's and World bank's 1992 annual reports, copies of which are available in the Library of the House, describe both the recent evidence and the institutions' policies.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans exist for the EC nations having a shared policy at the World bank and the International Monetary Fund.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 11 December 1992]: European Community member states are all individual members of the IMF and the World bank and instruct their representatives accordingly. There are no plans to change this practice. Furthermore, while the United Kingdom is in a single member constituency at the executive board, most EC member states are in constituencies with a wide range of non-EC countries.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what new proposals he has to take to the World bank and the International Monetary Fund to lower the debt burden of developing countries.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 11 December 1992]: The Government continue to encourage the IMF and World bank to support commercial debt and debt service reduction deals. As noted by the IMF-World bank development committee on 21 September, 12 countries, which account for more than 90 per cent. of the commercial bank debt of the major debtor nations, have now reached agreement on such arrangements. Furthermore, as a direct result of the Prime Minister's initiative to relieve the official debts of the poorest and most indebted countries, the Paris club of creditor Governments began implementing Trinidad terms last December. These provide for a reduction of up to 50 per cent. of certain official bilateral payments, and give a commitment on the part of creditors to address the question of the country's stock of debt after a period of three to four years of proven financial and economic responsibility. So far, 12 countries have benefited, and I am sure that many more will follow. The United Kingdom will continue to press our creditor colleagues to agree improvements in the terms on offer.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Lime

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will reintroduce grant aid for the application of lime to agricultural land to encourage agricultural output and reduce acid rain leaching.

Mr. Curry: Grant is payable under an improvement plan in the farm and conservation grant scheme for the application of lime as part of a programme of grassland improvement and, in the less favoured areas only, when lime is applied as a separate operation without reseeding or other chemical treatment of the grass. Grant is not payable on work to convert heath or moorland to grass. I do not intend to extend these grants to subsidise the application of lime to arable land which would risk encouraging the further output of crops already in surplus.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the total payments made to farmers for each year encompassing existing and new entrants as a whole within each designated environmentally sensitive area and for England in total.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is set out in the table. The payment figures relate to the cost of agreements in the years in which the applications were made, even though a minority of payments were actually made early in the following year. The 1992 figures include estimates of the costs of agreements not yet finalised.

Turkeys

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the amount of turkey meat imported into the United Kingdom in each of the last five years; what measures Her Majesty's Government takes to ensure that imported turkeys have been reared and transported humanely; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The amount of turkey meat imported into the United Kingdom over the last five years is as follows:

	Turkeymeat (tonnes)
1988	12,743
1989	14,652
1991	28,430

Any live turkeys imported into the United Kingdom would be safeguarded by the provisions of the European directives protecting the welfare of animals during transport. However, the Government have no control over welfare conditions for rearing turkeys in other member states and no Community rules exist for them. Turkeys reared in the United Kingdom benefit from our national animal welfare legislation and a specific welfare code for turkeys.

The Government have made it clear that we wish to see the highest possible Community welfare standards set for the husbandry and transport of all farm livestock.

Dietary Supplements

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration he has given to the response of the Society for the Promotion of Nutritional Therapy to the conclusions of the Denner report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: I recently met the Director of the Society for the Promotion of Nutritional Therapy to discuss the views of the society. There are differences of detail on some technical issues, but there is a wide measure of agreement that whatever legislation emerges as part of the European Commission's harmonisation programme the consumer should have continued access to safe products.

Sheep Grazing

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to monitor erosion caused by excessive sheep grazing in less-favoured areas.

Mr. Curry: I do not believe that sheep grazing is a widespread cause of erosion. Measures to discourage overgrazing in less favoured areas are however included in the hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme. Also a number of current or proposed environmentally sensitive area schemes include the regeneration of moorland vegetation by offering payments to farmers to reduce sheep stocking levels and to carry out other beneficial management practices.

Water Damage

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what plans he has to make funds available to local authorities to pay for the damage caused to roads and ditches by silt-laden water from farmers' fields;

(2) what plans he has to make farmers pay for the damage caused to roads and ditches by silt-laden water from farmers' fields.

Mr. Curry: None. Farmers who allow soil to leave fields and create a nuisance may be prosecuted under section 151 of the Highways Act 1980. This authorises the highway authority to serve a notice requiring appropriate preventive measures to be undertaken.

Erosion

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what plans he has for the future monitoring of water erosion on arable land;

(2) what plans he has to assess the impact of wind erosion on arable land.

Mr. Curry: Government-funded research into soil erosion by both wind and water includes work on estimating the risk of erosion for different soils in England and Wales and is expected to result in the publication in 1993 of a map of erosion risk. In addition ADAS is engaged in a project monitoring the effects of water erosion on arable land.

A range of measures are available to farmers to tackle erosion problems, and the Government have recently issued for public consultation a draft Code of Good Agricultural Practice for the Protection of Soil, which is designed to help farmers on this and other matters. A copy of the consultation document is in the Library of the House.

Badgers

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will specify the circumstances in which he is prepared to grant licences to fox hunters to attack occupied badger setts with spades and dogs.

Mr. Soames: There are no circumstances in which I would be prepared to grant a licence allowing fox hunters to attack an occupied badger sett with spades and dogs. However, the legislation provides that licences may be issued for interference with a badger sett for the purpose of controlling foxes in order to protect livestock, game or wildlife. I announced on 14 October that, in exceptional circumstances, a licence may be issued which would permit a dog to be entered into a badger sett to flush out a fox.

Potatoes

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which organisations were asked to make comments on the proposals for a Council regulation regarding the common organisation of the market in potatoes; and what were the specific dates when the formal requests for those comments were communicated to them.

Mr. Gummer: Following is the list of organisations:

Association of County Councils
British Retail Consortium
Association of Consumer Research
Co-operative Union
Federation of Agricultural Co-operatives (UK) Ltd.
Food from Britain
National Farmers Union (England)
British Potato Trades Consortium

The Commission's proposal was received on 25 November and the consultation letter was sent on 26 November 1992.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the organisations which have replied to the request for comments on the proposals for a Council regulation regarding the common organisation of the market in potatoes; and when those replies were received.

Mr. Gummer: Following is the list of organisations

Name of organisation	Date of reply
British Retail Consortium	7 December 1992
Consumers in the EC Group	9 December 1992
Consumers Committee for Great Britain	7 December 1992
Federation of Agricultural Co-operatives (UK) Ltd.	4 December 1992

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which organisations had not replied by 7 December, in response to the request for comments on the proposals for a Council regulation regarding the common organisation of the market in potatoes.

Mr. Gummer: The following organisations had not replied by 7 December:

Association of County Councils
Association of Consumer Research

Wool Guarantee

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost of maintaining the wool guarantee in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Curry: The wool guarantee is designed to operate as a price stabilisation mechanism on the basis of advances to, or receipts from, the British Wool Marketing Board. Net expenditure (or net receipts) over the past nine financial years was as follows. The information for earlier years could be obtained in the form requested only at disproportionate cost.

1983-84	602,882
1984-85	[1]7,838,406
1985-86	1,458,753
1986-87	8,082,047
1987-88	[1]1,942,751
1988-89	[1]3,267,593
1989-90	2,180,700
1990-91	18,191,215
1991-92	40,841,371

[1] = receipts.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to retain the wool guarantee after 1 May 1993.

Mr. Curry: No.

Set-aside Proposals

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arable acreage he expects to be set aside in each EC country arising from the MacSharry proposals; what proportion this will be of existing arable acreage in each case, assuming constant yields and current prices; what will be the loss in production and value in each country; and, in each case, if he will set out the figures as an absolute figure and as a proportion of the EC total, assuming no change in the balance between cereal types, seasonal planting and cereals and oilseeds.

Mr. Curry: The information in the following table is derived from budgetary estimates of expenditure on the CAP reform package prepared earlier this year by the Commission. These estimates do not contain figures for the value of lost production, which will depend on market prices in the next marketing year.

Metrication

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out the chronology of the change from acres to hectares as it has affected returns and claims required by his Department; and the reasons for the change.

Mr. Curry: The Government have been committed to the introduction of metric units for many years and the change from acres to hectares in relation to returns and claims required by this Department is entirely consistent with this policy. The dates when specific changes to hectares were made are as follows:

Agricultural census and survey forms—1976.
Hill livestock compensatory allowances—1976.
Scheme forms and literature for capital grants phasing-in of hectares completed by 1976.
Sheep annual premium scheme—land information required for first time in 1990 when hectares specified.

Sand Dredging

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the studies undertaken by the working party in his Department on the effects of sand dredging.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

My Department has undertaken one specific study on the effects of marine dredging in the Hilbre Swash area of Liverpool bay. This was completed in 1990. Any application to dredge for aggregates which comes before my Department is carefully examined for potential environmental effects including the potential effect on the coastline.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Water (Direct Payments)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications under paragraph 7 of schedule 9 of the Claims and Payments Regulations 1987, for direct payments to water companies have been made to each regional DSS office; how many have been turned down; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Regions were replaced by territories in April 1990. The information requested in respect of each of the Benefits Agency's three territories for the year ending October 1992 is given in the table.

	Scotland and North Territory	Wales and Central England Territory	Southern Territory
Number of applications made	31,500	75,000	47,000
Number of applications rejected	5,000	12,000	9,500

[1] Figures refer to North Territory only as different arrangements for payment of water charges apply in Scotland.
Note: The figures used are based on Management Information Statistics collected by the Benefits Agency in the 12 months period ending October 1992. These figures, which have been rounded to the nearest 500, are provisional and may be subject to amendment.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 30 November, Official Report, column 70, what plans he has to extend the system of direct payments to water companies by DSS offices for claimants.

Mr. Burt: We have no plans to extend the current arrangements by which direct payments of income support are made to water companies.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 30 November, Official Report column 70, if he will list those DSS offices which currently (a) make and (b) do not make direct payments for benefit claimants to water companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: All of the Benefit Agency's district offices in England and Wales are currently making direct payment to water companies on behalf of those meeting the criteria in paragraph 7 of schedule 9 of the Claims and Payments Regulations 1987.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 30 November, Official Report, column 70, if he will list for each DSS regional office the number of people meeting the criteria in paragraph 7 of schedule 9 of the Claims and Payments Regulations 1987, who have direct payments made to the water companies by the DSS.

Mr. Burt: The latest information showing the total number of income support recipients with a deduction for water charges in each of the Benefits Agency's three territories at the end of August 1992 is as follows:

	Number
Scotland and North Territory	28,000
Wales and Central England Territory	80,500
Southern Territory	38,000

Note: The figures used are based on Management Information Statistics collected by the Benefits Agency for the quarter ended August 1992. These figures, which have been rounded to the nearest 500, are provisional and may be subject to amendment.

Disability Payments

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to extend the disability premium to means-tested benefits to people who are registered as partially sighted.

Mr. Scott: We have no such plans. The disability premium in income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit is available to partially sighted people on the same basis as other long-term sick and disabled people.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what definition his Department uses of bodily functions for the purpose of the award of disability living allowance and attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: Bodily functions are defined in a decision of the Court of Appeal published as an appendix to a reported decision of a national insurance commissioner (decision R(A)2/80).

The Chief Adjudication Officer has advised that the list is not exhaustive and that adjudication officers, who decide individual claims to benefit, should use their own judgment in each case.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will reconsider the proposed change in the arrangements for claims in respect of service-related disability allowance so that claims involving disablement of below 20 per cent. will not be rejected.

Miss Widdecombe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 12 November proposals to introduce a threshold for claims for war pension in respect of noise-induced hearing loss so that no award would be made where disablement was less than 20 per cent. It is proposed also to use savings from that change to remove rank differentials in war disablement pensions by moving everyone up to the rate for officers; this would benefit nearly 200,000 war disablement pensioners who would gain up to £5 a week.

These proposals have been discussed with the Central Advisory Committee on War Pensions chaired by my noble Friend Lord Henley. We have been considering the proposals following that consultation and will make an announcement shortly.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his target for reducing the time that disability living allowance and attendance allowance claims are taking from the date of initial application to the date the claimant is notified of a successful award.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance and attendance allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Ron Leighton, dated 11 December 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what is the target for reducing the time that Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and Attendance Allowance (AA) claims are taking from the date of initial application to the date the claimant is notified of a successful award.

The Benefits Agency introduced a standard performance measure across benefits some time ago. This is expressed in terms of clearance targets rather than average clearance times as was previously the case. The term "clearance" refers to the number of decisions made.

As I explained in my letter of 19 October to all MPs the success of the advertising campaign and the policy initiatives surrounding the launch of the benefits attracted a much larger number of applications in the early stages than was expected. The resulting backlog of new DLA and AA claims was successfully tackled following implementation of the remedial measures described in my letter and Disability Benefit Centres are now well within sight of achieving their targets.

I should explain that the primary target set for the clearance of new DLA claims is 60 per cent. of claims to be cleared in 30 days and for AA, 60 per cent. to be cleared in 35 days. At the end of November 1992 55 per cent. of new DLA claims were being cleared in 30 days and 53 per cent. of new AA claims cleared in 35 days. Progress towards fully achieving these targets continues and we expect to meet them shortly.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy is also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what grade of official replies to hon. Members regarding the disability living allowance; once a decision is reached on a case, how soon a written response is made to hon. Members; and what guidance is given to officials dealing with cases referred by hon. Members over replying to hon. Members.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. David Winnick, dated 11 December 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security concerning the grade of officials replying to honourable Members regarding Disability Living Allowance (DLA) once a decision has been given; how soon a written response is made and what guidance is given to officials replying to honourable Members.

Letters from Members of Parliament (MPs) about DLA addressed to the DLA Unit at Fylde are answered by officials not below the grade of Executive Officer and a number of replies are subject to a check at the level of Higher Executive Officer. Senior managers are consulted on any case which involves an uncommon or sensitive issue.

Once a decision is given on a claim involved in such an enquiry from an MP, the DLA Unit aims to provide a written reply within 48 hours.

Officials involved in written replies are given training in drafting skills and there are written guidelines on drafting technique. Detailed information to be included in the reply is obtained from the relevant operational area.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

National Insurance Benefit

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the numbers and percentages of (a) men and (b) women above state pension age, who do not receive any national insurance benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: It is estimated that at March 1991 about 110,000 men (3·0 per cent.) and 580,000 women (8·5 per cent.) over state pension age did not receive a national insurance benefit. These numbers include those who received only the graduated benefit element of the retirement pension, but do not show receipt of non-contributory retirement pensions nor income-related benefits (available to those with insufficient resources).

Note: These estimates are subject to a considerable degree of uncertainty (rounding is to the nearest 10,000).

Housing Benefit

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households are receiving housing benefit (a) with income support and (b) without income support; how many households are having their mortgage interest paid with income support; and what is the average weekly payment in each case, and the total annual costs.

Mr. Burt: The latest available information for 1991-92 for housing benefit is in the table. I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Greenwich (Mr. Raynsford) on 26 October at columns 737-38 concerning mortgage interest paid with income support.

	Expenditure £ million	Number of households (thousands)	Average weekly payment £
With income support	3,450	2,370	27·80
Without income support	2,128	1,830	22·20
Total	5,578	4,200	25·35

Income Statistics

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what, for the latest date available, are the average weekly incomes excluding mean-tested benefits of (a) men aged 65 years and over and (b) women aged 60 years and over, distinguishing between husbands, wives, single men and single women respectively.

Miss Widdecombe: Information is not available in the form requested. The latest data available from the 1988 family expenditure survey shows that the average gross income (excluding housing benefit) of a single woman aged 60 and over is £74·90; for a single man aged 65 and over it is £89·80 and for a couple where the husband is over state pension age it is £168·00.

The nature of the survey techniques used in the family expenditure survey means that reliable information about pensioner income from income support is not available, nor can the separate incomes of husbands and wives within a couple be identified reliably.

Chief Adjudication Officer's Report

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will publish the eighth report of the Chief Adjudication Officer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The report is being published today. Its findings point to encouraging improvements in some areas of adjudication in Benefits Agency districts, particularly in review action in income support cases. The CAO has also reported good standards of adjudication within the Newcastle and Fylde benefits directorates.

The CAO acknowledges the commitment of the Benefits Agency and Employment Service to better standards of adjudication and the increased emphasis in quality in agency business plans for 1992-93. Both he and I look forward to progress in coming years, particularly in those areas where the CAO found some room for improvement.

The CAO also welcomes the positive responses made to the majority of the recommendations he made in his 1990-91 report and makes further recommendations to build upon the progress made so far.

These recommendations are being considered and we will respond in due course.

Household Incomes

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households there are with incomes below 50 per cent. of the national average in each standard planning region in the United Kingdom; what is this figure expressed as a proportion of the number of households in the region; and what were the equivalent figures for 1979.

Mr. Burt: A reliable regional breakdown of the numbers and proportions living below half average income could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Statistics for the United Kingdom as a whole are available in "Households Below Average Income", a copy of which is in the Library.

Industrial Diseases

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration he has now given to the recommendations of the report on chronic bronchitis and emphysema, submitted to him by the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council on 25 August; and if he will make a statement on the Government's response to the report.

Mr. Scott: The Government published the report on 25 November and is now considering a number of administrative, medical and financial issues raised by the report. We will announce our response as soon as possible.

Council Tax

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the effect of the introduction of the council tax on the standard of living of those of retirement age who are receiving income support or who are just above income support level.

Mr. Burt: With the introduction of the council tax the standard of living for most people on income support will improve, as will that of those on slightly higher incomes. Around 5 million claimants receiving income support, including 1·7 million over-60s, will benefit from the decision not to withdraw the current element added to the income-related benefits to help meet the community charge. The total additional help effectively made available will be around £750 million in 1993-94, £260 million of which relates to people over 60.

Benefit Entitlement

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to publicise benefit entitlement to older people as part of the European Year of Older People 1993.

Miss Widdecombe: The provision of information on benefit entitlement is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Barry Sheerman, dated 11 December 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security regarding the publicising of benefit entitlement to older poeple as part of the European Year of Older People 1993.

Analysis of research into the needs of our customers has identified the elderly as a priority group for information on benefits. As part of the European Year of Older People a new leaflet, with an associated poster, is planned for issue in May.

The leaflet will focus on elderly people who have been retired for several years and the Social Security benefits for which they may qualify but are unaware of. It will cover areas such as help on a low income—including help for people to continue living in the community rather than in care—looking after health, sickness and disability benefits, residential care, death of a partner and payment direct to an account. Council Tax Benefit and the new community care arrangements are included. Mention is also made of some services provided within the local community such as low-cost travel and help within the home.

The leaflet will be researched with the target audience to ensure that the language and style are appropriate. It will be distributed through various outlets but particularly to those in contact with elderly people such as day care centres and will be included in post office displays.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will be placed in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

SCOTLAND

Disabled People (Transport)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives for the disabled to discuss their transport needs; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has not met formally with any representatives of disabled people recently to discuss their transport needs, although Scottish Office officials are in regular contact with many of the organisations concerned with the transport needs of people with disabilities.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he gives to the needs of the disabled when deciding transport policy for Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend continues to give full consideration of the needs of disabled people when deciding transport policy for Scotland. The Scottish Office works closely with the Department of Transport's disability unit to ensure that public transport is easier to use and that personal mobility is increased for disabled people.

A Scottish Office official acts as an observer on the Disabled Persons' Transport Advisory Committee, the statutory committee set up to advise the Government on transport and mobility matters relating to disabled people. Two of the 20 members of this Committee are Scottish. The Scottish Office also has an observer on the Access and Mobility Committee of Disability Scotland.

Council Houses

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many new council houses were built in each district council area in each year since 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the number of local authority dwellings completed in each district and islands council area is contained in the quarterly Statistical Bulletins published by the Scottish Office entitled "Housing Trends in Scotland", copies of which are in the Library.

Food Group

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress is being made with the Scottish Food Group; and if he will give details of its membership, its terms of reference and its programme of work.

Sir Hector Monro: I expect a full announcement at the beginning of January.

Wool Guarantee

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will delay the removal of the wool price guarantee until 1995.

Sir Hector Monro: No. Our decision to terminate the wool guarantee was taken in 1988, following consultation with the industry. We concluded that such direct involvement in the wool market was no longer appropriate in the face of European Community support measures under the common agricultural policy. The wool industry has had several years in which to prepare for the termination of the wool guarantee and should now be ready to accept financial responsibility for is own affairs.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of maintaining the wool price guarantee (a) in Scotland as a whole and (b) in the less favoured areas of Scotland in each of the past five years.

Sir Hector Monro: The information is not available in the form requested. The wool guarantee is designed to operate as a price stabilisation mechanism on the basis of advances to, or receipts from, the British Wool Marketing Board. For the United Kingdom as a whole, nett expenditure (or nett receipts) in each of the past five years was as shown.

	£ million
1987-88	(1·9)
1988-89	(3·3)
1989-90	2·2

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to retain the wool price guarantee after 1 May 1993.

Sir Hector Monro: No. Our decision to terminate the wool guarantee was taken in 1988, following consultation with the industry. We concluded that such direct involvement in the wool market was no longer appropriate in the face of European Community support measures under the common agricultural policy. The wool industry has had several years in which to prepare for the termination of the wool guarantee and should now be ready to accept financial responsibility for its own affairs.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the importance of the wool price guarantee to Scottish producers; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: I have received representations about the ending of the wool guarantee from several hon. Members.

The effect of ending the guarantee will vary between producers but, on average the return from wool amounts to only about 5 per cent. of total producer returns. Sheep farmers will continue to receive very substantial Government support through ewe premium and hill livestock compensatory allowances. Scottish producers currently benefit by over £90 million in direct subsidies from these sources.

Water and Sewerage Services

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if it remains his policy not to introduce legislation to allow mains water disconnections for non-payment of water bills.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 10 December 1992]: Scottish water authorities may disconnect non-domestic consumers for non-payment of water bills. They have no powers to disconnect domestic consumers under these circumstances.

My right hon. Friend announced the publication of a consultation paper about the future structure of the Scottish water and sewerage industry on 17 November. He said that once the appropriate option for the industry's future structure had been decided all other factors relevant to that option will also be decided. The consultation period does not expire until 29 January 1993.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many households currently rely on septic tanks for each regional and island authority;

(2) how many households have been connected to mains drainage for each island and regional authority area for the last five years for which figures are available.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 10 December 1992]: This information is not available.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many households have been connected to mains water supplies for each of the island and regional authorities for the last five years for which figures are available.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 10 December 1992]: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many households rely on private water supplies for each of the regions and island authorities areas.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 10 December 1992]: From information supplied by local authorities we estimate that there are around 30,000 private supplies in Scotland. The available breakdown by regional and island authority areas is given in the table. No information is available on household numbers.

DEFENCE

Polaris

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what decisions have been taken on the methods of disposal for United Kingdom Polaris missiles and their components.

Mr. Aitken: Final decisions have still to be taken on the disposal of Polaris missiles. The methods adopted will take account of all relevant factors, including safety considerations, and advice from appropriate United Kingdom and US authorities.

Reactor Cores

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those sites that are licensed to hold used or unused nuclear submarine reactor cores, listing for each site how many it is licensed to hold and how many it currently holds.

Mr. Aitken: The information the hon. Member requests is as follows:

Site	Licensed capacity	Current holding[1]
VSEL, Barrow-in-Furness	1 new core
Naval Reactor Test Establishment, Dounreay	1 used core	1 used core
DML, Devonport	1 new core 2 used cores	1 used core
BTL, Rosyth	1 new core 1 used core	1 used core
BNFL, Sellafield	Not limited by site licence	37 used cores
Rolls-Royce and Associates Ltd., Derby	Not limited by site licence

[1] These figures exclude cores in submarine reactors.

For security reasons, it is not our policy to comment on the location of new reactor cores.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the last used reactor core was transported to Sellafield; and from where it was moved.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 27 November, Official Report, column 895. The core to which I referred is regarded as used because it had been fitted to a submarine reactor plant, although it remained unirradiated.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he first knew that the used core transportation package flasks used by his Department would have to be replaced.

Mr. Aitken: The current applicable standards are the 1985 International Atomic Energy Agency regulations which came into effect in the United Kingdom in 1991. The first formal indication that the used core transport packages would not, in their existing form, meet those requirements came during 1991 when a case was prepared to license the packages against those regulations. However, the likely need eventually to replace the packages was foreseen some time earlier and work had started on the provision of a new design of container.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the transportation of nuclear submarine reactor cores within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Aitken: The Government attach great importance to nuclear safety and no movement of Royal Navy nuclear submarine fuel has taken place without the relevant Department of Transport licence. Transportation of irradiated used fuel ceased on expiry of the latest licence for the MoD used core transport package in October 1991 and will not recommence until licensed containers are available. A programme is under way to procure replacement containers but this is a complex and technically demanding task and the first new container is not expected to be available before 1995. Other possibilities, including modification of the existing packages, are being explored with the aim of providing a licensed mode of transport for irradiated used cores in the meantime.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many unirradiated nuclear submarine reactor cores are held by his Department; and what are their locations.

Mr. Aitken: For security reasons, it is not our policy to comment on the location of new reactor cores. Two used but unirradiated cores are held by BNFL Sellafield.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the expected date of the removal of the reactor cores from HMS Sovereign and HMS Revenge.

Mr. Aitken: The reactor cores in HMS Sovereign and HMS Revenge are currently planned to be removed during 1993 and 1994 respectively.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the expected timetable for the introduction into service of the replacements for used core transportation package flasks.

Mr. Aitken: Industry has been invited to tender for a replacement used core transportation package and subject to the outcome we expect to place a contract in 1993. Allowing for the detailed design and proving work that will then be necessary and the demanding engineering standards that apply, we do not expect the first replacement package to be available before 1995.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when used core transportation package flasks were last licensed for use in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Aitken: The last used core transportation package transport licence expired in October 1991.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current locations of the reactor cores from (i) HMS Conqueror, (ii) HMS Warspite, (iii) HMS Courageous, (iv) HMS Churchill, (v) HMS Spartan, (vi) HMS Splendid and (vii) HMS Valiant.

Mr. Aitken: The information the hon. Member requests is as follows:

Submarine	Location of reactor core
HMS Conqueror	DML Devonport
HMS Warspite	BNFL Sellafield
HMS Courageous	Aboard submarine at Devonport
HMS Churchill	BNFL Sellafield
HMS Spartan	Aboard submarine at Devonport
HMS Splendid	BNFL Sellafield
HMS Vailant	Aboard submarine at Rosyth

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the cooling pond for used nuclear submarine fuel cores at Rosyth to become operational; and what will be its maximum capacity.

Mr. Aitken: The Rosyth core pond is expected to become operational, for the storage of up to two complete fuel cores, during the latter half of 1993.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the invitation to tender for a new Ministry of Defence used core transport package was issued; what companies have entered bids; and what will be the estimated cost of the new UCTPs.

Mr. Aitken: An invitation to tender for a replacement used core transportation package was issued to Rolls-Royce and Associates in December 1991 and a response is due early next year. An estimated cost cannot be made available before a contract has been placed for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer by the Minister of State for Defence Procurement of 27 November, Official Report, column 895, why an unirradiated unused nuclear submarine fuel core was moved to BNFL Sellafield for safe storage and why it was not reused in another nuclear powered submarine refit at Rosyth or returned to Rolls-Royce and Associates, Derby for recycling.

Mr. Aitken: The core referred to in my answer of 27 November was originally intended to be used in a submarine refit which was subsequently cancelled prior to completion as a consequence of the "Options for Change" review. The core was built to an older design for which there are no opportunities for use in a further refit. The fact that the core has been fitted to a submarine reactor prevented recycling.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what interim measures are being taken to alleviate the problems arising from the halting of transportation of used nuclear submarine fuel cores in used core transport packages from Rosyth and Devonport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: Possible interim measures for restoring a licensed mode of transportation for nuclear submarine used cores, including the use of commercial containers and modification of the existing packages, are being explored. Used cores can remain safely contined within submarine reactors until licensed storage or transport arrangements are available for them. A limited number of used cores may temporarily be stored at Rosyth and Devonport dockyards in accordance with their nuclear installations inspectorate site licences. The relicensing of the core storage ponds at the dockyards to permit additional cores temporarily to be stored there is being pursued.

A91 Building, Aldermaston

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 294, what previous project definition studies have been carried out in relation to the A91 building at AWE Aldermaston.

Mr. Aitken: A definition study for the building that is now designated as A91 was commissioned by the Property Services Agency in July 1980.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 25 June, Official Report, columns 298-99, what is the average level of plutonium contamination in grassed areas inside AWE Aldermaston; and how much of AWE Aldermaston is estimated to be affected.

Mr. Aitken: AWE Aldermaston undertakes routinely an extensive programme of on-site monitoring, involving hundreds of surveys and thousands of measurements each year, for alpha, beta and uranium radioactivity in soil and grass. The average level of plutonium specifically is not measured in most of these surveys, but its activity is included as total alpha. In addition local soil surveys are always undertaken prior to any engineering work in order to confirm that disturbed material will not contain significant levels of radioactivity. Almost all results are very low and show no levels of radioactivity greater than that which occurs naturally or due to worldwide fallout from the atmospheric testing that took place mainly in the 1950s and 1960s. Slightly elevated levels are occasionally measured in some localised areas where certain operations have been conducted. The specific compound referred to in my previous answer on 25 June 1992, Official Report, columns 298-99, occupied an extremely small area, less than one thousandth of the total area of the site. The average levels of alpha, beta and uranium radioactivity in soil and grass are indistinguishable from those measured off-site in the general locality of Aldermaston. They do not present radiological dangers to the workers, the general public or to the natural environment.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the design and construction of a solid waste treatment plant as part of the new waste management complex at AWE Aldermaston.

Mr. Aitken: This project has been deferred pending the decision about the requirements of a United Kingdom repository for intermediate-level waste.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the new design and construction of a size reduction facility as part of the new waste management complex at AWE Aldermaston.

Mr. Aitken: This project has been deferred pending the decision about the requirements of a United Kingdom repository for intermediate level waste.

Atomic Weapons Establishments

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will name the three tenders for the contract to operate the atomic weapons establishments.

Mr. Aitken: The three tenderers for the contract to operate the atomic weapons establishments are Babcock NNC Limited, a wholly owned subsidiary of the Babcock International Group plc; Hunting-BRAE Limited and RRO Limited, a joint venture company owned by Rolls-Royce plc and Royal Ordnance plc.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) physically disabled and (b) sensorily disabled people are employed in his Department; and what percentage they are of the total work force.

Mr. Aitken: As at 1 July 1992, the total number of registered disabled persons employed by the Ministry of Defence was some 1,103 representing approximately 0·8 per cent. of the total non industrial and industrial work force. We are not able to break these figures down further, into the two categories requested. The MOD is, however, at present engaged in a Department-wide disability survey, covering both registered and non-registered disability. This will, in due course, provide more detailed and accurate information about our disabled staff to help us improve our performance as an employer of people with disabilities.

Submarine Exports

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to explore the possibility of defence exports of submarines to the western Gulf states and Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Aitken: My Department takes the opportunity to discuss defence exports, including sales of submarines, wherever and whenever it is appropriate. We are always willing to consider responsible defence exports to our friends in that region.

Services Home Saving Scheme

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which financial institutions were chosen to provide the services home saving scheme accounts; and on what criteria the selections were based.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre (Mr. Coombs) on 19 November 1992, Official Report, column 296. The criteria used in selection of the four institutions included the investor protection provided, the institutions' commitment to developing, implementing and marketing the scheme, and the interest rates on offer to service personnel.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the projected cost to his Department of the services home saving scheme.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The cost of the special savings scheme will depend upon how many service personnel take advantage of the scheme, and the period for which they save. When fully operational, it might cost up to £50 million a year. This will represent a new commitment for which additional provision will be made.

Army Lottery

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual projected saving to the central Army funds expected to be following the introduction of the Army lottery.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There will be no savings to public funds. The planned Army sports lottery is intended to supplement existing sources of non public support for Army sport and welfare activities.

Defence Estate (Public Access)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which projects on improving access by the public on the defence estate have been initiated since July 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department is constantly seeking to improve public access. Since July 1991 improvements have included the following projects:

Coquet Valley—Refurbishment of Barrowdown Old School as an outdoor camping barn, (agreed November 1991.)

Coquet Valley—Development of car parking and picnicking facilities at Windyhaugh School (agreed November 1991.

Praker Wood—Footpath and signposting.

Willsworthy—Public access agreement with Dartmoor National Park, March, 1991.

The publication "Walks on MOD Land" was published in August 1991. A copy is in the Library of the House.

Forces' Clothing

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 December, Official Report, column 546, what was the expenditure on clothing which was imported for each of the armed forces for each of the last five years.

Mr. Aitken: The information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. I will write to the hon. Member.

Service Personnel

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel in (a) the Army, (b) the Royal Navy and (c) the Royal Air Force have been based in England, Scotland or Wales since 1986; what are his estimates for 1993 and 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The figures requested for 1986 to 1992 are given in the table. Estimates for 1993 and 1994 are not available in the form requested.

All figures are for 1 July:

	Royal Navy and Royal Marines	Army	RAF

Cnewr Estate

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the decision was taken to pursue a formal agreement to use the Cnewr estate in the Brecon Beacons national park for military training purposes; what consideration was given when making this decision to the proposed agreement between the Brecon Beacons national park authority and the trustees of the Cnewr estate concerning improved access; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In September this year the MOD responded to an approach from the trustees of the estate. In making that response, MOD was aware of the proposed agreement with the Brecon Beacons national park.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 7 December, Official Report, column 544, how his Ministry became aware in May that discussions between the trustees of the Cnewr estate and the Brecon Beacons national park authority were taking place.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The MOD initially became aware of the discussions during an informal meeting between the local defence land agent and the trustees of the estate.

Military Training Land

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the locations of all land where he has published notices of proposed development for military training purposes as required by the Department of the Environment circular 18/84 since 1984, giving the date of issue and whether the development went ahead in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information is not held in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Defence Equipment, Iran

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what way the guidelines relating to all deliveries of defence equipment to Iran set by his predecessor on 29 October 1985 cover the export of civilian equipment which could be militarily useful.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Dual use goods and technologies which require a licence to be exported to Iran under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1991, as amended, fall to be considered under the guidelines.

Laws of War

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which of the additional protocols to the Geneva convention on the laws of war have been signed and ratified by Her Majesty's Government; which have been signed but not ratified; which have not been signed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The United Kingdom signed both additional protocols on 8 June 1977. It has not yet ratified them.

United Nations Charter

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which parts of the charter of the United Nations have not yet been ratified by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Goodlad: The United Kingdom ratified the United Nations charter on 20 October 1945 without any reservations.

Bosnia

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will propose a review of the role of the United Nations protection force to ensure, within its mandate, its maximum effectiveness in support of the relief effort in Bosnia.

Mr. Goodlad: The United Nations keeps the role and effectiveness of UNPROFOR in Bosnia-Herzegovina under constant review. The Secretary-General reports his findings and recommendations to the Security Council on a monthly basis.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what requests he has received from the Bosnian Government for assistance in establishing a diplomatic residency or office in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We have received no request from the Bosnian authorities about the establishment of a diplomatic mission in the United Kingdom.

Sudan

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Sudan in relation to the persecution of (a) Roman Catholics and (b) other Christians in that country.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have made clear to the Sudanese Government both bilaterally and in international forums our abhorrence of the systematic abuses of human rights throughout Sudan, and the importance we attach to respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms, freedom of religion among them. We co-sponsored the United Nations General Assembly resolution on the human rights situation in Sudan, adopted in the third committee on 4 December.

Technology Transfers

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list current proscribed destinations under the COCOM rules; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 7 December, at column 463.

There are currently 24 destinations proscribed under the Co-ordinating Committee on Multilateral Export Controls—COCOM—rules. These are:

> The Republics of the former Soviet Union (Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Estonia, Georgia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lithuania, Moldova, Russia, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, Ukraine and Uzbekistan), the People's Republic of China, the Czech and Slovak Republic, the Mongolian People's Republic, the People's Democratic Republic of North Korea, the Republic of Poland, Romania and the Socialist Republic of Vietnam.

Hungary was removed from the list of proscribed destinations in May this year. COCOM will consider removing other countries from the list as they make progress in establishing effective control procedures for the export or re-export of sensitive goods and technology.

China

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Chinese Government over the abuse of human rights of prisoners in China's gaols; and if he will raise the matter at the United Nations Commission on Human Rights.

Mr. Goodlad: We have taken every opportunity this year as in past years to raise human rights issues with the Chinese authorities. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister did so most recently with Vice-Premier Zhu Rongji in November. My noble Friend Lord Howe and his delegation did so in great detail during their visit to China earlier this month. The delegation's discussions included the treatment of prisoners, and the programme included visits to places of detention. We and our EC partners co-sponsored a resolution on the situation in China, including Tibet, at this year's full session of the UN Commission on Human Rights. A "no action" motion prevented the resolution from coming to a vote.

Overseas Staff

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to alter the number of grade of staff employed in posts overseas in support of the United Kingdom trade and commercial interests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: There are at present no plans to alter the number of grades of staff employed in our commercial effort overseas.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards efforts being made at the United Nations to seek an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice on the legality of use and threat of use of nuclear weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Government see no need for an advisory opinion from the International Court of Justice on the legal status of nuclear weapons. There is no treaty which outlaws nuclear weapons. On the contrary, the non-proliferation treaty explicitly recognises the possession of nuclear weapons by "nuclear-weapon States". The use of nuclear weapons would have to be judged as lawful or not in the light of the particular circumstances in which they were used. Since the use of nuclear weapons might according to the circumstances be lawful, the deterrent threat of their use must also be considered lawful.

Parking Fines, Diplomats

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish up-to-date figures recording the number of unpaid parking fines incurred by each diplomatic mission in London in the first six months of the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested by my hon. Friend is given in the table. The table also includes those international organisations which incurred unpaid fines. The figures may be reduced by late payments.

The total of 2,388 for the first six months of 1992 represents a 20 per cent. reduction from the figure of 3,000 for the same period in 1991. It compares with nearly 67,000 in the first six months of 1984 before publication of the 1985 White Paper. We welcome this further reduction in unpaid parking fines that has been achieved during 1992 and appreciate the co-operation of diplomatic missions since the introduction of the parking policy. We shall continue to monitor carefully the level of unpaid fines and bring pressure to bear on diplomatic missions to reduce this still further.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what diplomatic initiatives he proposes, as EC president, to complement and follow on from the military action in Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The European Council on 12 December issued a declaration supporting the Security Council resolution 794 and expressing the hope that its implementation will encourage national reconciliation. The EC has supported the United Nations proposals to seek reconciliation through local and regional consultations designed to build a framework for national reconciliation.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the United Nations about its performance in Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development visited New York last month to discuss with the Secretary-General and senior United Nations officials the progress of the relief effort in Somalia and plans for stepping up activities including the greater involvement of United Nations agencies. We have stressed the need for the United Nations to provide strong and effective co-ordination of relief operations in Somalia. We have participated in co-ordination conferences organised by the United Nations in Geneva in October and in Addis Ababa this month.

ENVIRONMENT

Homelessness

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make an assessment of the extent of homelessness in Stoke-on-Trent; and how many (a) families and (b) single people will benefit from the additional funding announced in the autumn statement.

Mr. Baldry: An assessment is made on the basis of the local authority's own estimates contained in its housing strategy statement and statistical returns, together with the homeless indicator in the housing general needs index.

This information is used to inform our decisions on the allocation of housing investment programme allocations to local authorities which will be announced later this month.

The autumn statement made considerable additional resources available for the support of capital programmes which will directly benefit families and single people in housing need:

An increase in Housing Corporation spending to £2·3 billion this year, enabling the immediate purchase of about 16,000 new, empty or repossessed homes for those in housing need. And provide sufficient funds to exceed the target of 153,000 new housing association homes in the three years 1992-93 to 1994-95;

The release of additional local authority capital receipts, which are expected to add about £1 billion to housing spending between now and 1995-96;

And, the creation of a new housing partnership fund where £30 million will be available in the form of supplementary credit approvals to be bid for worthwhile housing investment projects.

Churches National Housing Coalition

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from Stoke-on-Trent representatives of the Churches National Housing Coalition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Ministerial colleagues and I received a number of written and oral representations when the Churches National Housing Coalition lobbied Parliament on 1 December.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much expenditure has been incurred on mandatory home improvement grants in the Hyndburn constituency in each of the financial years since the inception of the current scheme; and what is his estimate, based on recent trends, of the demand for expenditure during the financial year 1992-93.

Sir George Young: The total expenditure on mandatory home improvement grants under the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 reported by Hyndburn local authority—whose area is identical to the constituency—since the inception of the current renovation grants scheme is:

1991-92	1,333,500

The Department does not prepare forecasts of expenditure on home improvement grants by local authority area, but reported expenditure on mandatory home improvement grants in Hyndburn for the first six months of financial year 1992-93 is £911,300.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the viability and cost of technology to reduce carbon dioxide emissions from coal-fired power stations.

Mr. Maclean: Improvements in the thermal efficiency of coal fired power stations will reduce the use of fuel per unit of energy produced. This also reduces carbon dioxide emissions per unit of energy. Most coal-fired power stations already incorporate many efficiency improvement measures.

The gasification of coal and the burning of the gas in a combined cycle gas turbine plant can improve the thermal efficiency to about 45 per cent. from about 35 per cent. for a conventional power station. This technology is available and may be used in the longer term.

Building and Construction

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what progress he has made towards commencing his proposed inquiry into the construction industry; and which bodies he has invited to take part;

(2) how much of the estimated sum required to be paid by participants taking part in the project to reduce conflict within the building industry has so far been raised; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will give a breakdown of the cost involved in setting up the group to look at ways to reduce conflict within the building industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Negotiations between the Department and the industry and client organisations are continuing. We hope to conclude these discussions shortly. The following organisations have been invited to take part in the proposed joint review: the Construction Industry Council, the Construction Industry Employers Council, the Confederation of Associations of Specialist Engineering Contractors, the Specialist Engineering Contractor's Group, the National Specialist Contractors Council and the British Property Federation. The estimated maximum budget for the review is £250,000, with half the cost to be met by the Government and half by the other sponsors.

Conference on European Business and the Environment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contribution was made by Ministers and officials of his Department to the conference on European business and the environment held in Brussels at the end of November.

Mr. Howard: The Minister for the Environment and Countryside and I chaired the conference, and the Minister for Trade and I addressed it. This very successful United Kingdom presidency event highlighted the important role of business in improving Europe's environment. It was arranged in partnership with the European Commission, and a number of officials from my Department and the Department of Trade and Industry were involved in organising and participating in the event.

Environmental Damage

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment's report on financial and civil liability; when he expects to respond to the House of Lords Select Committee on the European Communities' 1990 report on liability and environmental damage; what reports and proposals he expects to receive from the EC and the Council of Europe on liability for environmental damage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We expect to receive the Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment's report on civil liability shortly. I understand that the European Commission proposes to issue a consultation document on civil liability for environmental damage in the new year. It is not clear at this stage what effect this will have on the draft directive on civil liability for damage caused by waste, which was presented by the Commission in 1991. The Council of Europe has prepared a convention on civil liability on which the negotiations have recently been completed. I am not aware of any outstanding responses to the House of Lords Select Committee on European Affairs regarding liability for environmental damage.

Foyer Hostel Schemes

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance his Department is giving to the development of Foyer hostel schemes in England.

Mr. Baldry: My Department's assistance for the development of foyer hostel schemes is channelled through the Housing Corporation, in the same way as for other housing association schemes. The corporation is providing revenue support to five pilot projects based around existing YMCA hostels in Nottingham, Norwich, St. Helens, Romford and Wimbledon. It will also be providing capital funding for two new-build foyer schemes in Birmingham and London; and 20 bed spaces at the London scheme will attract revenue support through special needs management allowance. Agreement in principle has been given to capital funding for a third project in Salford.

In addition, my Department has seconded an official to the Foyer Federation for Youth—FFY—a limited company established to promote the growth of foyers in this country; and the head of the Department's homelessness policy division attends meetings of the FFY board as an observer.

Public Analyst Service

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what guidance he has issued to the Local Government Commission in relation to the public analyst service;

(2) what representations he has received about the future of local authority scientific services or about the public analyst service in regard to the work of the Local Government Commission and future reorganisation of local government; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what guidance he has issued to the Local Government Commission in relation to the provision of local authority scientific services.

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what guidance he has issued to the Local Government Commission in relation to the public analyst service;

(2) what guidance he has issued to the Local Government Commission in relation to the provision of local authority scientific services.

Mr. Robin Squire: In response to the 1991 consultation paper on local government structure, representations were received from the Association of Public Analysts as well as from other organisations such as the Institute of Environmental Health Officers and the Society of County Trading Standards Officers.

The policy guidance issued to the Local Government Commission emphasises the importance of regulatory and enforcement functions of local authorities. We have also issued to the commission a new comprehensive descriptive list of all local government functions, which is publicly available. This contains chapters on environmental protection, environmental health and consumer protection.

The commission must ensure that all functions, particularly those which involve protecting all aspects of the local environment, will be satisfactorily performed by any new authority it recommends.

Environmental Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the implication for the appeal mechanisms in force under the public registers provisions within integrated pollution control of the incorporation into United Kingdom law of EC directive 90/3B/EEC on the freedom of access to environmental information in 1993.

Mr. Maclean: None. At present information may be withheld from the integrated pollution control—IPC—public register only on grounds of commercial confidentiality or national security. The EC directive on freedom of access to information on the environment contains similar exemptions. As the existing provisions under IPC and the requirements of the directive are compatible, the appeals mechanism for the exclusion of information from public registers will not be affected by incorporation of the directive into United Kingdom law.

Planning Policy Guidance Notes

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department now proposes to publish the proposed planning policy guidance notes made arising from the revision of his Department circular 8/87.

Mr. Baldry: A draft for consultation will be published in the new year.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent information he has received from Her Majesty's chief inspector of pollution in respect of the application by British Nuclear Fuels for authorisation to operate the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Maclean: The chief inspector of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution informed me when he and my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food proposed to go out to public consultation on their proposed new draft authorisations for British Nuclear Fuels' Sellafield site.

Organic Waste Collection

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will fund a pilot project to enable Stoke-on-Trent city council to introduce organic waste collection; if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: We have made £15 million in supplementary credit approvals—SCAs—available for local authority recycling investment in England in 1993-94, as part of our environmental partnership scheme. The Department invited applications from Stoke-on-Trent city council and other English local authorities for these SCAs on 17 November 1992. A copy of the letter making the invitation has been placed in the Library. We will consider any application from the city council, along with applications from other authorities, against the criteria set out in that letter.

Derelict Land Grant

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much derelict land grant was paid in each of the last five years with respect to reclamation schemes in the borough of Thamesdown; and which were the schemes.

Mr. Robin Squire: Derelict land grant expenditure in the borough of Thamesdown in the last five years is shown in the table. All the expenditure relates to a scheme to reclaim former quarry land at Queens park, Swindon for public open space.

	Expenditure (£)
1987-88	512,015
1988-89	401,545
1989-90	96,927

	Expenditure (£)
1990-91	444,553
1991-92	6,659

Customs House, Dundee

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the sums spent from Government funds in each of the past five years on the refurbishment of the Customs House building in Dundee, formerly occupied by Customs and Excise.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer about the cost of restoration work given to him by my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General on 14 December Official Report, column 62. All Customs and Excise expenditure was in the financial year 1990-91.

Shrewsbury Castle (Bombing)

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice and assistance from his Department's funds he has been able to extend to Shrewsbury and Atcham borough council, owners of Shrewsbury castle, following bomb damage in August.

Mr. Robin Squire: Neither my Department nor the Department of National Heritage has received any request for advice or assistance from Shrewsbury and Atcham borough council in respect of the bomb damage to Shrewsbury castle in August.

Fish (Pollutants Report)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the report "Chlorinated Organic Pollutants in Fish from the North-East Irish Sea", which his Department has partly funded.

Mr. Maclean: The report "Chlorinated Organic Pollutants in Fish from the North East Irish Sea" was prepared under a sub-contract by the department of the environment and evolutionary biology of the university of Liverpool, as part of a DOE research contract with WRc plc for a study of the sources and fates of synthetic organics. The main contract final report is on sale through the Foundation for Water Research, and is available in the DOE library. The sub-contract report is also available to the public in the DOE library. Copies of both reports have been deposited in the House of Commons Library.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the procedure for local authorities in appealing against their standard spending assessments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. and learned Friend announced his proposals for standard spending assessments for 1993-94 on 26 November 1992. There is now a period of consultation until 31 December 1992 during which local authorities and Members of Parliament may make written representations about any aspects of SSAs. We will also try to satisfy as many requests for meetings as is practical during this period. All representations will be carefully considered before decisions are announced in January 1993.

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the local authority associations on changes to the criteria for standard spending assessments for 1993-94.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 9 December 1992]: The proposals which were announced on 26 November as part of the provisional revenue support grant settlement followed extensive discussion with the local authority associations about the methodology for standard spending assessments. We are now in the middle of a period of formal consultation on these proposals which continues until 31 December. So far we have received a letter from the chairman of the London Boroughs Association setting out a number of areas of concern to London boroughs and requesting a meeting. We have also received a letter from the Association of County Councils expressing concern at the provision for spending on the fire service within SSAs for 1993-94. All representations from the associations and individual local authorities will be carefully considered before final decisions are reached in the new year.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the proposed increases in standard spending assessment and revenue support grant for 1993-94 over 1992-93 for Brighton, Blackpool and Southend-on-Sea; and Dorset, Sussex, Lancashire and Essex;

(2) what is his proposed increase in standard spending assessment and revenue support grant for Bournemouth for 1993-94 over 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 10 December 1992]: The proposed increase in SSA between 1992-93 and 1993-94 for the authorities requested is shown in the table. The 1992-93 figures used in making the comparisons have been adjusted for major changes in function, mainly the transfer of further education, so that they are comparable with the 1993-94 figures.

Under the community charge system revenue support grant—RSG—is paid into collection funds. In shire areas there is no separate grant towards county and district level services. The distribution of RSG depends, among other factors, on the amount which could be raised from relevant adults in the area and the income from non-domestic rates—NDR—which is distributed in line with relevant adults. Under the council tax, RSG will be paid to all tiers of authorities and will depend, among other factors, on the income which could be raised from the taxbase of equivalent dwellings. The income from the NDR will depend on resident population. It is thus not possible to provide the grant figures requested on a comparable basis.

Housing, Rotherham

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new homes will be provided by Rotherham borough council in 1993-94; what is the total provision from central funds which will be received by the authority in support of capital expenditure on housing; and what capital expenditure he expects the authority to incur next year.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 14 December 1992]: The level of housing capital expenditure in Rotherham in 1993-94 is a matter for the borough council to decide in the light of the available resources. The authority's proposed programme for housing capital expenditure in 1993-94, included in its housing investment programme—HIP—submission, contains no expenditure on new housebuilding by the council. Details of local authority HIP allocations for 1993-94 will be announced later this week.

Council Tax (Students)

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he will make it his policy to enable local authorities to charge business rates on those properties rented exclusively to students and whose occupants are exempt from council tax;

(2) what estimate he has made of the loss in revenue arising from the exemption of students from council tax liability in respect of (a) students residing in accommodation provided by institutions of higher education and (b) students residing in privately rented accommodation.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 14 December 1992]: Halls of residence and student-only dwellings have been exempted from the council tax because most students are not eligible to claim council tax benefit. The imposition of business rates on such properties would result in higher rents for students. The Government do not intend to take such a step.

Local authorities will be compensated for the revenue forgone as a result of this exemption through the revenue support grant system. No local authority will therefore be financially penalised for the presence in its area of students.

Vehicle Noise

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been undertaken to date by his Department in developing a standard method of measuring noise levels from moving vehicles.

Mr. Carlisle: As the matter is within the remit of the Secretary of State for Transport, I have been asked to reply. A new vehicle type-approval test was established in the 1960s, as since then the United Kingdom has applied relevant EC directives which are subject to it. More recently, the Department of Transport has been carrying out research concerning the noise generated by tyre/road interaction and supporting the work of an International Standards Organisation (ISO) working group looking at traffic noise. This group is evolving a Transport Research Laboratory system for assessing road traffic noise into an International standard. When this is completed, we anticipate that the United Kingdom system will be universally acknowledged and will provide a uniform measure for this environmental nuisance.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Chipmunks

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the welfare of caged chipmunks for sale in pet shops; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We have received no representations about the welfare of chipmunks sold as pets in pet shops. The welfare of animals sold as pets is protected by the Pet Animals Act 1951, as amended, which requires any person keeping a pet shop to be licensed by the local authority.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish tables, for 1991 and for 1990, showing the number of (a) young adults and (b) juveniles committing each category of offence and a breakdown showing the percentage under each category who were sentenced to each type of sentence or order;

(2) if he will list for each category of offence the number of offences committed by (a) juveniles and (b) young adults in each police force area; and what percentages this was of the total number of offences in each category in each of the last five years for which figures are available.4

Mr. Jack [holding answer 14 December 1992]: Information on convictions and cautions within police force areas by age and offence group, is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" supplementary tables volume 3.

Figures showing the number of offenders cautioned and convicted by type of sentence given, age and offence group is also published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" supplementary tables volumes 1, 2 and 3. Copies of all the publications referred to above are available in the Libarary.

The 1991 volumes will be published in the new year.

Hazelton UK

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is to be taken on licensing irregularities in the animal procedure carried out in the current year at Hazelton UK in respect of its use of primates.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Two, unrelated, technical irregularities in blood sampling in rats and monkeys, discovered in March and May of 1992, were dealt with at the time by the inspector.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department's inspector responsible for sanctioning the conditions at Shamrock (GB) Ltd. and Hazelton United Kingdom retain responsibility for implementing improved conditions.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Yes.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 December, Official Report, column 215, if he will make a statement on the quality of his Department's previous inspections at Shamrock (GB) Ltd. and Hazelton United Kingdom institutions.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Shamrock (GB) Ltd and Hazelton United Kingdom were inspected respectively four and nine times in 1991 and six and fourteen times in the period January to September 1992. It is difficult even for unannounced visits, however frequent, to detect the failures of care, handling and management which were revealed at Shamrock by the detailed investigation which was carried out following receipt of the allegations made by the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection. None the less, the incident shows that the system is able to respond quickly to such allegations, and to take tough and effective action where necessary.

I consider that the inspectors responsible for the two establishments acted conscientiously to ensure the well-being of the animals concerned. With hindsight, the programmes of cage replacement agreed at Shamrock and Hazelton seem over-generous and these have now been accelerated in the light of the findings of the investigation. Nevertheless, I am satisfied that the inspectors would have taken steps to require immediate improvements if it had ever become apparent that overt animal suffering was being caused by the caging in use.

Police Supernumerary Posts

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department has taken itself or via the inspectorate of constabulary, to encourage any police force to seek to hold supernumerary posts in the coming year.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many supernumerary posts the Thames Valley police asked to be allowed to hold in 1992-93 and 1993-94; and how many have been permitted by his Department in each case.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I shall arrange for a written reply to be sent to the hon. Member.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance was offered (a) by his Department and (b) by the inspectorate of constabulary on the criteria against which he would consider allowing police authorities to hold supernumerary posts in the coming year.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question by him on 14 December 1992, at column 6. Police authorities were informed of these criteria in March 1991.

HIV

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to make it an offence for a person deliberately to infect another with the HIV virus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have considered this matter very carefully in the light of the concern which has been expressed, and have looked at the precedents in other countries. I have concluded, however, that there are difficulties both of principle and of practice in bringing this type of behaviour within the scope of the criminal law and I am not persuaded that these difficulties have been overcome in other jurisdictions. I, therefore, have no plans to introduce legislation to make the deliberate transmission of the HIV virus a criminal offence.

High-Risk Prisoners

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes have been made to the role of the category A committee for high-risk prisoners in the light of the security audit undertaken by Mr. Hadfield and Mr. Lakes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In the light of the security audit undertaken last year by Mr. Hadfield and Mr. Lakes, it has been decided to change the procedures for reviewing the security status of category A prisoners. Security status will continue to be reviewed on conviction and at least annually there after, but referral to the category A committee will be limited to new cases and to those cases where recommendations have been made for a change to the security category either by the holding prison or by prison service headquarters.

The category A committee comprises senior officials of the prison service, including governors and staff of prisons normally holding category A prisoners; a senior medical officer; and a senior police adviser. Its role is:

(i) to consider whether prisoners recently convicted of very serious offences should be retained in security category A, which is reserved for those whose escape from prison custody would be highly dangerous to the public or the police or the security of the State;

(ii) to consider all cases of category A prisoners where recommendations have been made for a change in security status; and to review cases where no such recommendations have been made for five years; and

(iii) to make recommendations to the director general of the prison service.

All other cases will be considered at least annually by officials of the directorate of custody.

The new procedures are designed to improve efficiency in the administration of category A prisoners while ensuring that changes in security status are well founded and that no prisoner remains in category A any longer than is necessary.

Crime Statistics, Dorset

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the percentage change since 1979 in (a) police manpower, (b) recorded crime and (c) population in Dorset; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The requested information is as follows:

	per cent.
(a) police manpower[1]	14·6
(b) recorded crime[2]	121·6
(c) population[3]	12·6

[1] Actual strength for April 1979 and September 1992.
[2] Based on annual figures for notifiable offences recorded by the police in 1979 and 1991.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what sums were expended by his Department on European Drug Prevention Week additional to those already expended through other programmes; and for what purposes.

Mr. Jack: The additional Home Office expenditure on European Drug Prevention Week amounted to £393,000. The bulk was used by the 20 local drugs prevention teams set up under the drug prevention initiative, to produce over 220 events and projects across the country during the week, with the aim of further raising awareness of drug and solvent misuse. The remainder included funds spent on publicity and promotional material as well as organisation costs.

Royal Holloway and Bedford New College

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps the Charity Commission took in considering Royal Holloway and Bedford New college's proposal to sell pictures from its collection to (a) consider and take advice on surveys of the buildings and (b) consider the college's alternative plans for raising the money; if he will list those surveys commissioned or considered; and what information was received from the college on its financial needs;

(2) what steps the Charity Commission took in considering Royal Holloway and Bedford New college's proposal to sell pictures from its collection to (a) seek advice on the integrity of the collection from (i) directors of national museums or art collections or (ii) independent experts and (b) consider the provisions on the use of paintings in the 1883 deed of foundation; if he will list the experts whose advice was taken into account; and what alternative educational use was considered for the pictures.

Mr. Jack: The foundation deed of 11 October 1883 does not make provision as to any specific use for the pictures. The trusts relating to the pictures are contained in an indenture of 5 August 1881. I understand that the commissioners were asked to make a scheme to change the trusts of the 1881 deed to allow certain pictures to be sold for the purpose of providing a fund without which the main purpose of Thomas Holloway's Foundation could not be maintained.

It was for the college to satisfy the commissioners that it had considered the options before it on the basis of proper advice. It was for the commissioners to satisfy themselves that the case was supported by appropriate evidence, not to seek independent advice.

In reaching their decision the commissioners had before them evidence provided by the college both as to the state of the buildings, the estimated costs of repairs and the financial position of the college including evidence of efforts made to raise the necessary funds. They also had the evidence produced by the objectors to the scheme which was examined with equal care.

The terms of the 1881 deed were considered very carefully on a number of occasions. Specifically the deed did not provide any educational use for the pictures. I understand that the commissioners' view was, therefore, that the integrity of the collection was not central to the consideration of this matter by the commissioners.

Asylum (Children)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many asylum applications made by unaccompanied children under 16 years were determined

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available information relates to unaccompanied children applying at the ports since November 1990 and is given in tables A and B. Corresponding information for January to October 1990 is not available. The information in table A, for November 1990 to December 1991, is of children aged 16 or under: separate figures for those under 16 are not available. The information in table B, for January to November 1992, is of those under 16.

Information on in-country application by unaccompanied children is not available in this form.

As I indicated in my reply to the hon. Member for 25 November, columns 647-48, information on decisions on applications by unaccompanied children is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Remand

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons currently held on remand in gaols in England and Wales have been held for (a) up to six months, (b) exceeding six months but less than 12 months, (c) exceeding six months but less than 18 months, (d) exceeding 18 months but less than 24 months, (e) exceeding 24 months but less than 36 months and (f) more than 36 months;

(2) what assessment he has made of the reasons for the delay in coming to trial for persons held on remand in gaols in England and Wales for periods exceeding 18 months; and to how many cases each reason applies.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 2 December 1992]: The latest readily available information held currently is given in the table.

Population of untried and convicted unsentenced prisoners in prison service establishments in England and Wales on 30 June 1992[1]: by length of time since first remand into a prison service establishment.

Length of time since first remanded into a prison service establishment[2]	Number of Prisoners[3]

I regret that information on the reasons for delay in relation to individual persons who have been held for periods in excess of 18 months is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Wellbury House

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what inspection has been carried out into the fire regulations at Wellbury House; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 8 December 1992]: Wellbury House boarding school, Great Offley, was inspected by Hertfordshire fire and rescue service on 4 February 1992. Conditions were thought to be such that persons using the basement and upper floors would be at serious risk from a fire. A notice under section 10 of the Fire Precautions Act 1971 was duly issued the following day.

The notice prohibited the use of the basement and upper floors pending work to remedy the deficiencies identified by the inspecting officer. I understand, however, that no such work has been done. The premises are therefore inspected each month to ensure that the prohibition notice is being observed.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministerial Travel Expenses

Mr. Hatton: To ask the Prime Minister what was the total expenditure for travel by Ministers on European Community business, divided into fares and subsistence for each parliamentary Session from and including 1987-88 to 1991-92 in (a) cash and (b) 1991-92 prices.

The Prime Minister: The information can be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Regional Planning Guidance

Ms. Walley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the arrangements for ensuring that regional planning guidance issued by the Department of the Environment and regional briefs produced by the Department of Transport are each drafted with regard to the other.

The Prime Minister: Regional planning guidance and regional briefs giving information on transport issues are prepared with regard to each other. There is close consultation between the two Departments which have joint regional offices.

Land Sales

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Prime Minister what rules govern the disclosure of information concerning the sale of land owned by Government Departments with regard to the location of the land, sale price and name of purchaser; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government adopt normal commercial practice in relation to the disclosure of the details of land transactions. The terms on which land has been sold and the identity of the purchaser are treated as commercial in confidence. Information should not be disclosed without the agreement of both parties.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 15 December.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 15 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Talking Books

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what information he has as to which local authorities supply a free talking book service to the visually impaired from the local library service; and if he will make a statement about such provision.

Mr. Key: Information about which local authorities supply a free talking book service to the visually impaired is not collected centrally.

Library authorities generally exercise their responsibilities towards visually impaired people by providing as wide a selection as possible of large print books and cassette recordings of books. Large print books are part of the book lending service and must be provided free of charge. Many authorities also loan cassette recordings of books free of charge to the visually impaired. Some library authorities provide reading machines, and in some cases braille transcription services. The Royal National Institute for the Blind—RNIB—talking books service, as such, is not generally regarded as an indispensible element of a library service for blind people, and any charge which might be made for the talking book service does not, of itself, constitute any infringement of the Public Libraries and Museums Act 1964.

However, we recognise that more needs to be done to develop public library services for blind people. That is why we have been jointly funding the RNIB's "Share the Vision" project, which is examining various ways of developing the public library as the primary point of access to information services as a whole for visually impaired people.

National Sports Museum

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) if he will give consideration to the establishment of a national sports museum in the region, in conjunction with the north-west bid for the Olympic games;

(2) if he will consider sponsoring the establishment of a national sports museum in Liverpool.

Mr. Key: I have received no proposals from the Manchester bid committee to establish a national sports museum.

Government support for new museums is provided by the Museums and Galleries Commission through its network of area museum councils. Applications for grant assistance from the commission must demonstrate that the project is well conceived, and that the governing body is willing to work towards the standards set out for the registration of a museum by the commission.

Art Treasures

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps he will advise to secure national art treasures in view of the Windsor fire; if he will make it his policy for the public to have the right to view such treasures free of charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 30 November 1992]: I have commissioned an inquiry into fire protection at all royal palaces for which my Department has financial responsibility in the light of the Windsor castle fire and will consider carefully the recommendations of the inquiry. Responsibility for fire protection at national museums and galleries is vested in the trustees who may seek advice from whatever sources they consider to be most appropriate. It is for those responsible for the care and presentation of national art treasures to decide whether or not a charge is made to view them.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the latest information on the epidemic of BSE in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: I am placing in the Library of the House a note summarising the latest evidence about the epidemic. All the evidence continues to point to infected ruminant protein as the origin of the epidemic, and to justify confidence that the ban on feeding such material to ruminants will bring about its end.

WALES

Welsh Language

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his plans to promote the Welsh language.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Government will soon be placing before Parliament a Welsh Language Bill. The Bill will require public bodies serving Wales to prepare schemes covering the use they will make of Welsh in providing services to the public. It will also establish a statutory Welsh Language Board and amend previous legislation in respect of Welsh.

The Bill will be a further step in the Government's unprecedented programme of support for the Welsh language, as part of which we are making available £7·6 million in grants for Welsh language organisations and projects in the current financial year. We are also continuing to implement the introduction of Welsh as a national curriculum subject in all schools in Wales.

Cardiff Bay

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met representatives of Cardiff Bay development corporation; and what was discussed.

Mr. David Hunt: I meet the chairman of Cardiff Bay development corporation regularly to discuss a variety of issues.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of the process of consultations between Cardiff Bay development corporation and the Welsh Office.

Mr. David Hunt: Under the terms of its financial memorandum, Cardiff Bay development corporation is required to prepare and submit to the Welsh Office a corporate plan looking three years ahead of the current financial year. There are formal consultations on this plan. In addition, there is informal discussion between officials on a day-to-day basis.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the relationship between Cardiff Bay development corporation and (a) Cardiff Bay Management Ltd. and (b) Cardiff Bay Investment Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Cardiff Bay (Management) Ltd. and Cardiff Bay (Investment) Ltd. were both incorporated in May 1989 and are wholly owned subsidiary companies of the corporation. In the published accounts of the corporation as at 31 March 1992 they were described as dormant and this status is unchanged. In each case the authorised share capital is £1,000 and the issued share capital is £2 being two shares of £1 each.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of the Government funds given to Cardiff Bay development corporation each year since its inception; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is given in figure 6.01 in "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1992-93 to 1994-95: A Report by the Welsh Office", Cm 1916, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) which factors in the environmentally sensitive area programme account for savings to common agriculture policy expenditure, in order of their costs;

(2) if he will collate and tabulate the total savings in common agriculture policy expenditure arising from the environmentally sensitive area scheme since its inception, per year and in total for each scheme and for Wales as a whole.

Mr. David Hunt: The main factor that could account for savings to CAP expenditure is the requirement to reduce stocking densities in order to protect specific wildlife habitats and landscape characteristics of the areas. An assessment of likely savings is contained in the interim report prepared by the University college of Wales, Aberystwyth, on the socio-economic aspects of designation. This report was issued in June 1991 as technical background to the consultation paper relating to the Cambrian mountains (original) ESA, a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House. The final report is expected to be published early in the new year.

AIDS

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of reported AIDS cases for Clwyd.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: At the end of September 1992 the total number of AIDS cases who were known to live in Clwyd was 14, of whom 12 had died.

Noise Nuisance

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many noise nuisance complaints have been received by each local authority in Wales during each of the last three years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office does not have this information on a local authority basis. Figures for Wales in total for 1988-89 and 1989-90—1990-91 data are not yet available—can be found in table 3.29 of the "Environmental Digest for Wales No. 6 1991", copies of which are held in the Library of the House.

Garden Festival Wales Ltd.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the auditing arrangements he has put in place for Garden Festival Wales Ltd.

Mr. David Hunt: This is not a matter for the Secretary of State for Wales. The two local authority sponsors, Blaenau Gwent borough council and Gwent county council have established a limited company, Garden Festival Wales Ltd. Audit arrangements are covered under the Companies Acts.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what contingency arrangements he has put in place to mitigate the impact on either (a) local authority and (b) urban programme projects in the event of Garden Festival Wales Ltd. making a loss.

Mr. David Hunt: I have made no contingency arrangements. The two local authority sponsors Blaenau Gwent borough council and Gwent county council agreed in the 1990 revised business plan to accommodate any losses.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to publish (a) the management accounts and (b) final accounts of Garden Festival Wales Ltd.

Mr. David Hunt: Garden Festival Wales Ltd. expect its final accounts, which will include management accounts, to be available at the end of this financial year.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact of Garden Festival Wales Ltd. expenditure and revenue outturn on the approvals he will make regarding local government expenditure in Wales (a) in the current financial year and (b) 1993-94.

Mr. David Hunt: The final position of Garden Festival Wales Ltd. has not yet been reported to me.

Commercial Fishing Boats

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many commercial fishing boats are currently registered at each Welsh port; and how many people are directly employed.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are 950 commercial fishing vessels registered in Wales. Comprehensive data on port of registry are not available centrally. In 1988, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 1,165 full-time and 511 part-time employees in the Welsh fishing industry.

Farmers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of farmers in Wales are currently aged (a) between 55 and 65 years and (b) over 65 years.

Mr. David Hunt: According to the latest EC farm structure survey, carried out in 1990, some 26 per cent. of farmers in Wales were aged between 55 and 64 years and 23 per cent. were aged 65 years and over.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his proposals for emergency planning consequent upon his proposals for local government reorganisation.

Mr. David Hunt: Emergency planning is the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary, who will announce any proposals in the light of my decisions on local government reorganisation.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will publish the Bill for the reorganisation of local government of Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I will be announcing my decisions on local government reorganisation in due course, and will publish my Bill to implement reorganisation at an appropriate time thereafter.

Farmers (Retirement)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received calling for the implementation of a pension scheme to assist early retirement amongst farmers in the United Kingdom.

Mr. David Hunt: Several.

Fishing Fleet

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total tonnage catch of all species made by the Welsh fishing fleet for each year since 1980.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Data on fish landings in Wales are contained in the annual publication, "Digest of Welsh Statistics", copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Council House Sales

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the number and (b) the value of council house sales by district council in each year since 1985 in (i) cash terms and (ii) prices, using 1985 as a constant.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is given in the tables.

Hospital Closures

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the hospitals which have (a) partially and (b) wholly closed in Wales, during each year since 1989-90.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on partial closures is not available centrally. Information concerning the number of hospitals which closed wholly, and are still closed, is given in the table.

	Hospitals which closed	Hospitals which opened

Sheep Scab

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to control sheep scab disease in Wales in the light of its reduction from a full notifiable status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. and learned Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 24 November, at column 628.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to reinstate sheep scab disease to full notifiable status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government have no plans to reintroduce controls on sheep scab.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many non-departmental public bodies had fully expensed executive car leasing schemes in the year 1991-92; how many have revised them since; if he will issue updated guidelines on such schemes to all such bodies in Wales; if he will list which bodies had schemes which involve (a) free petrol and oil to executives benefiting, (b) no contribution to the leasing costs and (c) contributions of less than two sevenths of the total lease costs to the executives in the scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: One non-departmental public body, the Welsh Development Agency, had an executive car leasing scheme which in 1991-92 did not require repayments for personal mileage. Repayments for petrol and oil commenced from 1 April 1992. The Development Board for Rural Wales —DBRW—had a scheme which required no contribution to leasing costs for some executives, including the chief executive, who also received full petrol and oil, and less than two sevenths from others. As stated in the Comptroller and Auditor General's report on the DBRW's 1991-92 accounts, this matter is being pursued by the Welsh Office. Guidance produced by the Treasury's central unit on purchasing on car contract hire or lease schemes was passed to Welsh non-departmental public bodies this year.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to issue a comprehensive statement on delegated powers to Welsh non-departmental public bodies; if he will place a copy of the statement in the Library; what proposals he has to keep it up to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Delegations to non-departmental public bodies—NDPBs—are set out in the financial memoranda, guidelines and other control documents applying to the individual bodies.

These are kept under review and amended in the light of changing circumstances. The Welsh Office has recently taken action to remind NDPBs of the delegations currently in force.

Training, Education and Enterprise

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about resources for training, education and enterprise in Wales in 1993-94.

Mr. David Hunt: I attach great importance to training and education, and to the encouragement of enterprise. It is by developing people's abilities that our economy is strengthened and grows. I have established a department of training, education and enterprise to take the opportunity which we have uniquely in Wales to combine our efforts across these sectors. I am pleased to announce that a total of £559·4 million will be available for these sectors in 1993-94. This includes £248·5 million recurrent and £21·5 million capital expenditure for higher education, £129·3 million recurrent and £13·9 million capital for further education and £146·2 million for training. These resources will assist the further and higher education institutions in meeting rising demand and offer a sound basis for the work of the training and enterprise councils in delivering training and supporting enterprise.

I am placing in the Library of the House copies of letters which are being sent today to chairmen of training and enterprise councils in Wales and to the chief executives of the higher and further education councils in Wales.

Housing for Wales

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what resources will be made available to Housing for Wales to support development in the financial year 1993-94.

Mr. David Hunt: In gross terms the resources available to Housing for Wales will amount to over £129·5 million in 1993-94. Taking account of associated private sector funding, the overall programme will be worth over £190 million next year. Compared to provision this year, my plans provide an uplift of about 5 per cent. in cash terms. Next year excluding the likely additional benefit of in-year transfers from local authorities, the allocation I have made will ensure that Housing for Wales's core annual production target can be raised from the present 3,500 to 3,650 homes. As regards current expenditure, I shall be making available almost £7·1 million in 1993-94 to cover the costs of the special needs management allowance scheme. This is of particular importance in supporting the housing component of our strategies for the vulnerable groups in Wales. It amounts to an 18 per cent. increase over provision for 1992-93.

Noise-induced Hearing Loss

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of claimants in Wales who will not be eligible to claim for noise-induced hearing loss as a result of the decision to exclude those whose claim is for less than 20 per cent. disablement.

Mr. Scott: I have been asked to reply.

The information on which to base a separate estimate for Wales is not available. The proposed change would bring war pension rules for claims in respect of noise-induced hearing loss more into line with those for occupational deafness under the industrial injuries scheme.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Tax Relief and Allowances

Mr. Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the yield if (a) the personal income tax allowances, (b) mortgage interest income tax reliefs and (c) employers' employees' and personal pension income tax reliefs were restricted to (a) 25 per cent. and (b) 20 per cent. income tax.

Mr. Dorrell: The latest estimates of the direct revenue yields in a full year with the 1992-93 levels of allowances and tax rates are as follows:

	Restriction to 25 per cent. £ million	Restriction to 20 per cent. £ million
(i) All main income tax allowances	1,500	6,800
(ii) Mortgage interest relief[1]	—	1,000
(iii) Pension contribution reliefs[2]	470	1,100
(iv) Combination of (i), (ii) and (iii)	2,100	9,000

[1] Mortgage interest relief is currently restricted to the basic rate of tax.

[2] Employees' contributions to occupational pension schemes and contributions to personal pensions including retirement annuity premia and free-standing additional voluntary contributions.

The yield from restricting the rate of relief on employers' contributions to pension schemes would depend on the method by which such contributions were allocated to individual employees.

No account has been taken of possible behavioural changes resulting from such restrictions.

Value Added Tax

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the introduction of VAT on newspapers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I have received a number of representations about this issue. The Government have no present plans or proposals to extend the scope of VAT to newspapers.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many businesses have been wound up as a result of Customs and Excise taking action on value added tax in the last available year; and what percentage that represents of the number of businesses that ceased trading in that period.

Mr. Dorrell: Figures for businesses that cease trading are not collected centrally. During the year ending 31 March 1992, there were 42,676 insolvencies, in 6,775—16 per cent.—of which Customs and Excise were the petitioning creditors. In virtually all of these cases, other creditors were also involved.

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the annual change in the revenue to the Exchequer if a reduced rate of value added tax at 6 per cent. were imposed on (a) the bloodstock industry, (b) funeral undertakings and cremations, (c) theatre and cinema tickets and video retail sales, (d) all snack foods, including chocolate, confectionary and chocolate coated biscuits and (e) admission to all sporting events.

Mr. Dorrell: Precise costings are not available. The following estimates are based on consumers' expenditure data and make no allowance for the likely behavioural response to the change in the VAT rate:

	£ million (1991-92 prices)
Bloodstock industry	−5
Theatre and cinema admissions and video retail sales	−120
All snack foods	−930
Admissions to all sporting events	−40

All snack foods include chocolate biscuits, confectionery, crisps, nut products, soft drinks and ice cream. These items are almost all standard rated at present.

Funeral undertakings and cremations are presently exempt from VAT. The revenue effect from applying a VAT rate of 6 per cent. would need to take account of input tax which would be reclaimed at the standard rate of VAT. The revenue effect is likely to be close to zero.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will meet the editor of the Biddulph and Congleton Chronicle to discuss concerns about the removal of VAT zero-rating on newspapers.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government have no present plans or proposals to extend the scope of VAT to newspapers. I do not think that any useful purpose would be served by a meeting at this time.

Interest Rate Cuts

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to make retail banks pass on the interest rate cuts more rapidly to their customers.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor announced at the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee hearing on 16 November that he intended to ask the Bank of England to have another look at the interest rates the banks charge their business customers and also to meet the bank chairmen when he has the opportunity.

Tobacco and Alcohol Taxation

Mr. Parry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to facilitate the convergence of tobacco and alcohol taxation in the EC by (a) reducing current United Kingdom taxes or (b) making no further increases in taxation, until such convergence is achieved.

Sir John Cope: A commitment to rate convergence is not necessary for the successful establishment of the single market and would unduly constrain my right hon. Friend's Budget flexibility.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects convergence of tobacco taxes to be achieved in the European Community.

Sir John Cope: Recent directives have brought greater uniformity to the coverage and structure of EC tobacco duties, and have set minimum duty rates. For cigarettes the agreed minimum duty incidence is 57 per cent. of the retail price at the most popular price category. We accepted this reluctantly in the interests of agreement on a package of indirect tax measures, as we had been pressing for a minimum duty in cash terms. We intend to return to this issue in the first review of EC duty rates due by the end of 1994.

We are committed to reducing smoking in the United Kingdom and have already undertaken, in the White Paper "The Health of the Nation", Cm 1986, at least to maintain the real level of the tobacco taxes. During our presidency of the EC, we have strongly advocated to finance and health colleagues the merits of using taxation to support health objectives. To avoid our own health and fiscal policy being adversely affected, we would like to see upwards convergence of EC duty rates towards United Kingdom levels.

Crown Estate Commissioners

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the amount of tax paid or other contributions made to the Consolidated Fund by the Crown Estate Commissioners since 1962.

Mr. Lamont: The Civil List Act 1952 provides that the net income from the Crown estate, after defraying costs of collection and management, is paid into the Exchequer. The costs defrayed include VAT where applicable, but the Crown estate is not subject to corporation, income or capital gains tax.

The net income paid into the Consoidated Fund for each financial year since 1962 was published in the Official Report of 2 July at columns 659-60. The payment for 1991-92, then provisional, has since been confirmed at the same figure, £70 million.

Taxation

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer of 17 December 1991, to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown), Official Report, column 121, to provide similar estimates of the burden of direct and indirect taxes for the years 1991-92 and 1992-93; and if he will publish any revisions for earlier years.

Mr. Dorrell [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1992, c. 569]: Updated figures for 1991-92, including estimates of community charge payments, and the latest estimates for 1992-93 for direct taxes and indirect taxes excluding the community charge are given in the table on a similar basis as that provided to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East on 17 December 1991.

Estimates of community charge payments in 1992-93 for specimen households are not yet available.

Notes:

1. Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that the households receive no tax reliefs other than the standard allowances and only have income from employment. All earners, including wives, are assumed to pay class 1 NI contributions at the contracted-in rate.

2. Since 1990-91, husbands and wives have been taxed independently. Previously, the tax liability of couples depended on their joint income. To permit comparisons with earlier years, the table therefore shows income tax and national insurance contributions paid by a married couple as a proportion of their joint income, assuming, as in the earlier years, that where both partners are earners, the husband and wife share the relevant multiple of earnings in the ratio 60:40.

3. In order to provide comparability with 1987-79, when support for children was given partly through child tax allowance, child benefit is treated as a negative income tax for the married couple with two children.

4. Average earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of all full-time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. These are £328·70 per week in 1991-92 and is estimated to be £346·00 per week in 1992-93, based on the Autumn Statement earnings growth assumption of 5¼ per cent. in 1992-93.

5. The estimates of indirect taxes apart from the community charge are based on equations derived from the 1985 family expenditure survey, uprated to later years using forecasts of aggregate tax receipts. They are based on the illustrative assumption that 10 per cent. of disposable income is saved. There are wide variations in spending patterns between households with the same composition and similar incomes and estimated payments of VAT and other indirect taxes are therefore approximate, even within the income range for which figures are shown. Outside this range, the margin of error is even higher and reliable estimates cannot be made. Because of sampling variation, there can be substantial differences between estimates obtained from family expenditure surveys for different years.

6. Estimates of the burden of the community charge has been derived from the 1991 family expenditure survey. All respondents were assumed to pay the charge to which they were liable. The calculations include water charges in order to put the estimates on a comparable basis to the estimates for earlier years. Community charge payments are net of transitional relief and community charge benefits. Since community dharge payments vary widely between households with similar incomes, the estimated charge payments are only approximate.

Safes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the necessity of distinguishing between the value of the production of safes and the value of the production of armoured doors for safes in the EUROPROD COM returns was required by the European Community or evolved nationally; and what value he places on this distinction.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 14 December 1992]: The text of the PRODCOM questions refers to "armoured or reinforced safes and strong boxes"

and

"armoured or reinforced doors . . . for strong-rooms".

These are two entirely separate products and have been distinguished from one another for many years in both United Kingdom domestic production statistics and in external trade statistics. The distinction between a safe and the armoured door for a strong-room is a necessary and useful one. The definitions are required by the European Community.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Yugoslavia

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what humanitarian aid has been given to prisoners in Serbian concentration camps by direct intervention, or through the Red Cross or the United Nations.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The International Committee of the Red Cross—ICRC—takes the lead role in providing humanitarian aid to detention camps. It has committed over £18 million in humanitarian aid to all victims of the conflict throughout the former Yugoslavia so far, to which the United Kingdom has directly contributed £1·8 million. We are also channelling humanitarian aid to the former Yugoslavia through the EC, which has in turn made contributions to assist the Red Cross. In November the ICRC reported that it had visited a total of 20 detention camps containing 5,404 detainees. Of those, six were in Serbian-controlled areas and contained 4,103 detainees.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid is currently granted to his Department to (a) Austria, (b) Hungary and (c) Slovenia to assist displaced refugees from the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: To date we have committed over £70 million—£29·5 million bilaterally and £41 million through the EC—towards the relief programme in the former Yugoslavia. Our aid is planned in co-operation with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees who co-ordinates the international relief effort in the region. The priority is the supply of humanitarian relief to central Bosnia, where the suffering is greatest. But some of the aid through the EC, UNHCR and other international organisations has been used to assist displaced people in Slovenia. Figures detailing the amount of this aid are unavailable. No United Kingdom bilateral aid has been given to Austria or Hungary.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to offer more money to displaced refugees from the former Yugoslavia over and above the money granted to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees/ UNICEF/World Health Organisation appeal.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: It is already our policy to provide support to displaced people in former Yugoslavia over and above the money granted towards the UNHCR, UNICEF and WHO appeals. We are providing support to the ICRC and non-governmental organisations, as well as direct bilateral assistance in such things as the rehabilitation of existing buildings in order to provide shelter for displaced people. We have so far committed over £70 million towards the humanitarian relief effort in the former Yugoslavia. This is in addition to the cost of the 2,400 British troops we have made available to the UN protection force—UNPROFOR.

Tropical Timber

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will detail the proposals put forward (a) directly by the Government and (b) through the EC during the United Kingdom's presidency concerning the reform of the international tropical timber agreement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have proposed focusing the objectives of the international tropical timber agreement on the achievement of the year 2000 target for all internationally traded tropical timber to come from sustainably managed sources. We have also proposed measures to improve the operational performance of the International Tropical Timber Organisation and its ability to help tropical timber producing countries meet this target. We act in close co-ordination with our EC partners who share these objectives.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what mechanisms have been established by the Overseas Development Administration to monitor the performance of the International Tropical Timber Organisation in attaining its target of sustainable management of tropical timber.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We will monitor information from a range of sources including national reporting of progress towards the year 2000 target and reliable independent assessments of the sustainability of timber production as these are developed.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the British contribution to the United Nations military effort in Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We will pay our full share of United Nations operations in Somalia in accordance with assessed contributions. We have provided two RAF transport aircraft and accompanying personnel to support the US-led coalition's actions in accordance with United Nations Security Council resolution 794. We will also pay our share of the EC's commitment to assist with the funding of the Belgian contributions to military operations in Somalia.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice he has given to British aid agencies in Somalia about their role during the military initiative in Somalia by the United Nations.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development has discussed the implementation of United Nations Security Council resolution 794 with representatives of British non-governmental organisations working in Somalia twice in the last three weeks and with senior US Government officials. She has stressed the need for regular liaison between the military commanders and NGOs in the planning and execution of Operation Restore Hope.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution Britain has made in diplomatic and humanitarian terms to the area of the former British Somaliland during the period since the end of the civil war in Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We provide humanitarian assistance to northern Somalia in response to requests from United Nations agencies and non-governmental organisations. Since Siad Barre's fall in January 1991, Britain has provided £2 million in emergency humanitarian relief to northern Somalia. Since the British embassy in Mogadishu was closed in early January 1991, officials have visited northern Somalia on three occasions and maintained informal contact in London, Nairobi and Addis Ababa with representatives of Somali groups. We have also pressed the United Nations, at all levels, to take account of northern Somalia's distinct needs.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice, help and support he has given to the Republic of Somaliland since September with a view to assisting the re-establishment of law and order.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have advised the authorities in north-west Somalia to co-operate with the United Nations Somalia initiative. This recognises the need for assistance with the establishment of law and order through the creation of local police forces.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what sums of money he has (a) offered and (b) provided to pay administrator police and militia in northern Somalia, Republic of Somaliland, since September.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have received no formal requests for assistance with the establishment of a police force or a militia in northern Somalia; nor have we made any offers to do so.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what role he expects the United Kingdom to play in the mission to provide relief aid to Somalia; and to what extent United Kingdom efforts will be directed towards aid and reconstruction in the north of Somalia, Republic of Somaliland.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Britain is already a major donor of humanitarian assistance to Somalia. On 4 December my noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development announced a new pledge of £4·5 million. This brings our total commitment of humanitarian assistance to Somalia this year to £31·5 million, including our contribution to European Community actions. These resources are available to support the work of British and international non-governmental organisations and United Nations agencies throughout Somalia.

Crown Agents and Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for the future status of the Crown Agents and Commonwealth Development Corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Ministers have decided to review the status of the Crown Agents. Consultants will be appointed to advise on the feasibility of various options, including retention in the public sector. Account will be taken of the implications of any change for the Crown Agents' existing clients, which include a wide range of international aid donors, the Overseas Development Administration and many overseas Governments.

Similarly, options for the future status of the Commonwealth Development Corporation—CDC—are being examined in the context of the current quinquennial review. The recommendations of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, contained in its recent efficiency scrutiny of the CDC, are being considered as part of this review.

In commissioning these reviews, Ministers recognise the valuable role that both Crown Agents and the CDC play in their respective spheres of activity.

Forests

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Yokohama conference on forest conservation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 14 December 1992]: Two meetings relating to forest conservation were held in Yokohama recently. These were the 13th International Tropical Timber Council—ITTC—and the first preparatory committee for the renegotiation of the international tropical timber agreement—ITTA. Some progress was made in the ITTC towards our objective of improving the capacity of the International Tropical Timber Organisation to help tropical timber producing countries manage their forests sustainably. The ITTA renegotiation will continue in a second preparatory committee meeting in Quito, Ecuador in January.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy at the conference at Yokohama on the conservation of northern forests.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 14 December 1992]: Two meetings relating to forest conservation held in Yokohama recently were the 13th International Tropical Timber Council and the first preparatory committee for the renegotiation of the international tropical timber agreement. The ITTC and ITTA focus on international trade in timber from tropical forests.

We are pursuing our policies towards the conservation of non-tropical forests in other forums such as the meetings next year of European Forestry Ministers in Helsinki and of Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe members in Montreal.

Along with other European Community and G7 Governments, we are committed to producing plans for the implementation of the forest principles agreed at the UN Conference on Environment and Development last June and for the establishment of an international review process.

DEFENCE

Munitions Orders

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with Royal Ordnance plc about future orders for munitions from his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I discussed future ammunition requirements, among other matters, with representatives from British Aerospace defence group and Royal Ordnance plc on 18 November. I also refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley) on 8 December, Official Report, column 614, and to my hon. Friend the Member for Congleton (Mrs. Winterton) on 24 November 1992, Official Report, column 730.

Operation Granby

Mr. Menzie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the items of equipment lost during Operation Granby and the cost of replacement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Full information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Work is still continuing in inspecting items returned from the Gulf and the final replacement costs will not be known for some time. The Comptroller and Auditor General stated in a note to the class I appropriation accounts 1991-1992, Cm 197-I, that he was "generally satisfied that, in the circumstances, the Department took all reasonable steps to maintain control over their stores and equipment".

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many containers of equipment were lost during Operation Granby; and what each contained.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Some 7,000 containers were used in the Gulf, and 87 remained unaccounted for when action was taken in July 1992 to compensate their owners and to write them off. No record is available of what, if anything, these containers held.

Explosives and Propellants Agreements

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his plans for the future of the explosives, propellants and related products agreements which were signed in 1987 when Royal Ordnance was privatised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley) on 8 December 1992, Official Report, column 614.

Legal Immunity

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what public legislation is not applicable to the operations of his Department; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement about the application of Crown immunity to the operations of his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence is in general subject to regulatory requirements and enforcement arrangements on the same basis as others, except where there is a legitimate reason for exemption, for example on grounds of national security. Even in circumstances where the Department is not bound by legislation it is the Ministry's policy that it should comply as though requirements applied to it wherever this is appropriate and practicable. Since the repeal in 1987 of section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947, the position of service personnel injured on duty is the same in relation to the Ministry of Defence as that of any other employees and their employer.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Standing Committees

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many Standing Committees have been set up so far in this Parliament; what was the ratio of Government, main Opposition and minority Opposition party members serving on each committee; and if he will show, in rising numerical order, the ratios for Standing Committees from 16 to 60.

Mr. Newton: (i) As of Monday 30 November, 12 Bills have been committed to Standing Committee in the current Session. The Standing Committees on Statutory Instruments have been constituted on 38 separate occasions. There are also two Standing Committees on European Documents.

(ii) The ratios of Government, main Opposition and minority Opposition party Members on each of these committees were as follows:

Bill	Size of Committee	Conservative	Labour	Other
Asylum and Immigration Appeals	22	12	9	1

all SI committees	18	10	7	1

(iii) Under Standing Order No. 86 the Committee of Selection is required to nominate not fewer than 16 nor more than 50 members to serve on these Standing Committees. In nominating members, it is required to have regard to the qualifications of Members and to the composition of the House.

(iv) Proportions for Standing Committees of between 16 and 50 Members are as follows:

Size of Committee	Conservative	Labour	Other
16	9	6	1

Parliamentary Pensions

Mr. Dixon: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Members for Jarrow and for Manchester, Blackley (Mr. Eastham) on 7 December, Official Report, column 510, what further action he has now taken in relation to parliamentary pensions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Following the debate on 25 November, I held a meeting with the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) and the trustees of the parliamentary contributory pension fund. Officials are now considering, in consultation with the Fees Office, how to take matters forward.

Divisions

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will now respond to the second report of Session 1991-92 from the Select Committee on Procedure relating to the Chair's discretion to extend the time allowed for a Division.

Mr. Newton: I have now considered this report and agree with the main recommendation that the existing discretion of the Chair as set out in Standing Order No. 37 should remain unchanged. The other recommendations flow from that and are matters already within the discretion of Madam Speaker and other House authorities. The separate proposal to amend Standing Order No. 37 to bring it into line with current practice and remove a confusing ambiguity will be implemented at a convenient opportunity.

Public Petitions

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will now respond to the fourth report of Session 1991-92 from the Select Committee on Procedure relating to public petitions.

Mr. Newton: I have now completed my consideration of this report and agree with its recommendations for changes in the rules relating to the format and wording of petitions. I will shortly table a motion to approve the report. If passed, this will give the Journal Office the necessary authority to implement the recommendations and prepare revised rules and guidance for Members. The changes do not involve any amendment to Standing Orders.

TRANSPORT

Fisheries Safety

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has received from the European Commission concerning a proposed directive on the occupational safety of both fishermen and fishing vessels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: An amended proposal for a directive (9284/92) was received from the European Commission on 6 November. The Commons Select Committee on European Legislation has recommended that the proposed directive should be debated by European Standing Committee A.

Bus Priority Measures

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Tansport which bus priority measures will be funded from his Department in 1993-94.

Mr. Freeman: We shall be making available a total of £15·475 million to local authorities in England for measures to promote bus use in 1993-94. Of this total, £6 million will be found from the Department's provision for local public transport and £9·475 million from the provision for local roads; £3·3 million of the total will be allocated to schemes in London and a separate announcement about those will be made by the Minister for Transport in London. The allocations to successful local authorities outside London are listed. In addition, the Department will be supporting a low floor bus demonstration project and research into alternative fuels.

I am delighted that we have been able to increase substantially the level of resources available for measures to promote bus use. This is in response to increased interest from local authorities in the role of the bus in helping to alleviate road congestion. The allocations will enable authorities to continue schemes funded in 1992-93 and to introduce many new ones.

Dangerous Goods

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what controls his Department requires of port authorities in respect of the import and export of dangerous goods.

Mr. Norris: The movement of dangerous substances through ports is controlled by the Dangerous Substances in Harbour Areas Regulations (SI 1987 No. 37).

Freight

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what dates British Rail's objectives of 19 December 1989 for rail freight were superseded; and on what date British Rail was informed.

Mr. Freeman: The objectives have not been superseded.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the change in the amount of freight traffic carried by rail since May 1991.

Mr. Freeman: In the year ending May 1992, there was a decline of some 10 per cent. in terms of tonnes lifted. Factors affecting changes in rail freight are discussed at pages 18 to 20 of the 1991-92 annual report and accounts of the British Railways Board.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the five most used motorways for the purpose of freight haulage.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The five motorways which carry most heavy goods vehicle traffic on average per mile are the M25, M1, M6, M62 and M56.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of British goods for the domestic market are transported by (a) rail and (b) road; and how this compares with the EC average.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The information that is readily available for 1990 is published in "Transport Statistics Great Britain 1992" as tables 8.9 and 8.10. Definitions and more detailed comparisons for earlier years are published in the transport statistics report "International Comparisons of Transport Statistics Part 1: Intermodal". Both publications are in the House of Commons Library.

Citizens Charter

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to extend compensation provisions for rail users outlined in the citizens charter to cover all users of public transport.

Mr. Freeman: I welcome the fact that our citizens charter initiative has led British Rail and London Underground to introduce compensation schemes for poor performance. It is for other public transport operators to decide whether to follow their example, but I hope that many will do so.

Road Planning

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish (a) the terms of reference and (b) the line table including completion date, of the review of the road planning process he announced in October.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The terms of reference for the review were to review the statutory and administrative procedures involved in preparing a major road scheme from programme entry to the start of construction, and to recommend possible changes, either statutory or administrative, which might speed up the process; and to report by the end of November 1992.

We are now considering the consultants' report.

EC Road Proposals

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the status of the European Commission's proposals for a network of major roads in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The European Commission's proposals for a trans-European road network of routes of Community interest have been laid for opinion before the European Parliament. They have yet to be discussed by the Council of Ministers.

The route proposals are intended to encourage action by member states. A member state's positive assent is required before any project can go ahead.

Regional Consultative Meetings

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the dates for his Department's regional annual consultative meetings for each region for 1993-94; what issues are expected to be raised at these meetings and if he will place in the Library copies of all minutes of meetings held since April 1991.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The dates of the regional annual consultative committee meetings for 1993-94 have not yet been arranged, but they are normally held between October and December. The agenda items are generally proposed by the local highway authorities of the region concerned, and are agreed with the regional office nearer the date of the meeting. I am arranging to place the minutes of the 1991-92 round of meetings in the Library, and will do the same for the current 1992-93 round when they become available.

Regional Brief

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is his policy regarding the preparation by regional offices of regional briefs;

(2) by what means regional briefs are available to the public; and if it is his intention to consult the public during their preparation;

(3) if he will list those regional briefs which have been prepared; when they were published; and if he will provide a timetable for their revision and preparation for each of his regional offices;

(4) if he will set out the remit of the regional briefs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Regional briefs contain information about transport, including Government policy, in the eight Department of Transport regions outside London. The briefs were commissioned by the Secretary of State in 1990 to inform local Members of Parliament and others about planned transport improvements. Publicity was given to their publication and copies are available to the public on request. Details of publication dates are:

Regional Brief	Date of publication
Eastern	May 1991
East Midland	May 1991
Northern	November 1990
North West	December 1991
South East	December 1991
South West	November 1991
West Midland	January 1991
Yorkshire and Humberside	January 1991

The briefs may be updated from time to time as considered necessary by the individual regional offices.

Road Schemes

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to ensure the compatibility of trunk road and motorway proposals with land use planning policies in forthcoming regional planning guidance.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We shall continue our long-standing policy of consultation both with the Department of the Environment in the joint Environment/Transport regional offices, and with the local planning authorities.

Traffic Congestion, Greenwich

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made by his Department following the visit by the Minister of Transport in London to Greenwich on 25 June, in considering proposals for easing traffic congestion in Greenwich town centre, and in particular the feasibility study for a bypass, and the interim proposal for a ban on heavy goods vehicles in the town centre; and when he expects to announce his decision in respect of the application by Greenwich council for transport supplementary grant to pursue such options.

Mr. Norris: An announcement about the allocation of transport supplementary grant will be made before Christmas. The hon. Member will appreciate that I cannot comment on specific bids in advance of this announcement.

Fares

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to oppose any attempt by the European Commission to make public transport fares subject to value added tax.

Mr. Dorrell: I have been asked to reply.

The Government have maintained, during the single market negotiations, our right to retain the coverage of our current zero rates including domestic passenger transport. The present agreement reached by Finance Ministers covers the period until 1997 without prejudice to what happens thereafter.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Citizens Charter

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many copies of the summary "Guide to the Citizen's Charter First Report: 1992" have been distributed to date.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have distributed 500,000 copies of the summary guide.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the cost to date of the publication and distribution of the summary "Guide to the Citizen's Charter First Report: 1992".

Mr. Waldegrave: The cost to date of the publication and distribution of the summary guide is in the region of £160,000.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the total cost to date of the publication and distribution of the "Citizen's Charter First Report: 1992", Cm 2101.

Mr. Waldegrave: The costs of printing, publishing and distributing the report were borne by HMSO, which expects to recover its costs from sales revenue. HMSO does not normally reveal details of such costs, which are treated on a commercial in confidence basis.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the overall charge to date from the Post Office for the distribution of citizens charter material.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have to date paid the Post Office £23,500 for the distribution of the summary guide to the "Citizen's Charter First Report: 1992".

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the average time taken by his Department to reply to queries from hon. Members concerning the citizens charter; what were the targets set; and what means of redress is available to hon. Members if his Department fails to meet those targets.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department aims to respond to all letters from hon. Members within 15 working days. Over the last four months we have met this target with just under half our cases. No means of redress is available, but I am happy to investigate any individual complaints about the handling of correspondence.

Publications (Cost)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the average cost of the purchase from HMSO for a full five-day sitting week of one copy of the daily Official Report of the House of Commons and the House of Lords, the daily Order Paper, the Vote Bundle of each House and the Weekly Information Bulletin; and what plans he has to seek to alter the cost of such publications.

Mr. Robert Jackson If both Houses sit for a full five days, which is not usual for the House of Lords, the following prices would apply:

The Official Report, House of Commons (daily)	37·50
The Official Report, House of Lords (daily)	21·00
House of Commons Vote Bundle (including Order Paper)	[1]145·80
House of Commons Order Paper alone	[1]25·45
House of Lords Minutes of Proceedings	[1]23·50
Weekly Information Bulletin	2·30

[1] Average.

HMSO prices for these items have not been increased during 1992 and HMSO intends that current prices should continue unchanged throughout 1993.

Civil Servants (Complaints)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will bring forward proposals to create the post of inspector general of the civil service to deal with complaints on the conduct of civil servants.

Mr. Robert Jackson: No. Standards conduct in the civil service are regulated by the "Civil Service Code", a copy of which is in the Library. The Royal Commission on Standards of Conduct in Public Life 1974-1976 (Cmnd. 6524) recommended against the establishment of a new agency to oversee investigations of alleged impropriety. There are no grounds for reconsidering that recommendation.

Patents and Licences

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assistance his Department provides for patenting or licensing of any products or processes developed from work funded by his Department.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The research councils are expected to meet the cost of protecting their intellectual property rights from within their annual grant-in-aid from the Office of Public Service and Science.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Mans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on progress under the programme for action to achieve equality of opportunity in the civil service for people of ethnic minority origin.

Mr. Robert Jackson: There has been further progress this year; the proportion of ethnic minority staff in the civil service continues to rise. A report summarising progress during 1991-92 is being published today. Copies are being placed in the Library of the House.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Textiles

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing the tariff levels for United Kingdom exports of wool cloth, headings 5111 and 5112, to the following markets, and any non-tariff barriers which apply, together with the tariff level for imports of that product from the same countries into the Community (a) the United States of America, (b) South Africa, (c) Australia, (d) Turkey, including additional duties payable, (e) India, (f) Pakistan, (g) Thailand and (h) Malaysia.

Mr. Needham: United Kingdom exports attract the following charges:

United States

tariff 51.11—duties range between 7 per cent. and 38 per cent. on an ad valorem basis depending on quality and size of fabric.

51.12—duties range between 7 per cent. and 38 per cent. by value depending on quality and size of fabric.

South Africa

tariff 51.11—40 per cent. duty plus a 5 per cent. import surcharge.

51.12—40 per cent. duty plus 5 per cent. import surcharge.

The South African system of duties on textile imports is currently under review.

Australia

tariff 51.11—32 per cent. duty.

51.12—32 per cent. duty.

Turkey

tariff 51.11—10 per cent. duty.

51.12—10 per cent. duty.

Plus the following additional duties:

1. Municipality tax: 15 per cent. of customs duty;
2. Stamp duty: 10 per cent. of the cost/insurance/freight (CIF) value. NB The Turkish authorities have informed the GATT secretariat, that from 1 January 1993, stamp duty will cease to be applied;
3. Price support and stability fund tax: 10 per cent. of the CIF value;
4. Transport infrastructure duty: 3 per cent. of the cumulative total of the above duties (including Customs duty) and taxes if commodity arrives by air or land, 4 per cent. if by sea;
5. Value added tax: usually 12 per cent. of the cumulative total of the above duties (including transport infrastructure duty) and taxes. Although 1 per cent., 2 per cent., 6 per cent. and 20 per cent. may also be applied, depending on the type of commodity.
6. Mass housing fund tax (surcharge): only applied to certain products. This tax depends on the type of commodity—it could be a percentage of the CIF value, or based on a fixed dollar, weight, or unit rate.

From 1 January 1993 a new Turkish import regime is to be introduced, based on a unified single customs duty system. In addition to the ending of stamp duty, the import regime is to abolish the municipality tax, the transport infrastructure duty, and the price support and stability fund tax. Details are not yet available on how the single customs duty system will be applied.

India

tariff 51·11—duties range between 110 per cent. and 140 per cent. by value;

51·12—110 per cent. duty;
plus 45 per cent. auxilliary duty.

Pakistan
tariff 51·11—90 per cent. duty;
51·12—90 per cent. duty;
In addition the following taxes are payable:
(1). Sales tax: 12·5 per cent.
(2). General import surcharge: 10 per cent.
(3). Iqra tax (allocated to education budget): 5 per cent.

Thailand
tariff 51·11—80 per cent. duty
51·12—80 per cent. duty

Malaysia
tariff 51·11—2 per cent. duty
51·12—2 per cent. duty

United Kingdom Customs duties on import from the following sources:

United States
tariff 51·11—13 per cent.
51·12—13 per cent.

South Africa
tariff 51·11—13 per cent.
51·12—13 per cent.

Australia
tariff 51·11—13 per cent.
51·12—13 per cent.

Baghdad Pact Nuclear Training Centre

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what benefits have accrued to the United Kingdom as a result of the financial contributions given to the Baghdad pact nuclear training centre.

Mr. Heseltine: No direct financial contributions were given to the centre. From the limited information available no scientific benefit accrued to the United Kingdom from the assistance provided by United Kingdom experts at the nuclear training centre on the peaceful uses of radioisotopes.

Iraq (Arms Exports)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what investigation has been made by his Department's export control organisation into the sale of militarily sensitive equipment and technology to Iraq by the Astra Company since 1985.

Mr. Needham: Matters relating to the sale of such equipment and technology to Iraq are for Lord Justice Scott's inquiry to consider.

Sizewell B

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) to what extent Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate has relied upon the experience of other nuclear regulators in its reliability assessment of the primary computerised safety system for the Sizewell B nuclear plant;

(2) what information he has received from Her Majesty's chief nuclear installations inspector in regard to progress made by Nuclear Electric in the installation of the secondary non-computerised safety protection system at the Sizewell B nuclear plant;

(3) what progress has been made by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate in validating the Sizewell B computerised primary safety system against the latest international standards.

Mr. Eggar: I understand that the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate (NII) has participated over several years in meetings with nuclear regulators from other countries—the United States of America, Canada and France—who have experience in the assessment of computer based safety systems in nuclear applications.

Similarly, I understand the chief inspector is satisfied with progress made on the installation and commissioning of the secondary non-computerised safety protection system at Sizewell B.

The work of validation against the NII's regulatory requirements including the latest relevant international standards is well advanced. Comparison with international standards is only one part of NII's assessment of the primary protection system safety case for Sizewell B.

Coal Research

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has on the expenditure on clean coal research for the latest year for which figures are available in each G7 country.

Mr. Eggar: The most recent outturn expenditure figures on coal research for the G7 countries are for 1990 and were published by the International Energy Agency in "Energy policies of IEA Countries—1991 review". No figures are available specifically for clean coal research, but most of the expenditure on coal research in the G7 countries is believed to be focused on the development of clean coal technologies for power generation.

Coal Research and Development expenditure for 1990 in G7 countries

Canada	16·3
France	3·1
Germany	42·3
Italy	n/a
Japan	134·5
United States	472·2
United Kingdom	[1]39·4

[1] Total United Kingdom research and development expenditure is only available on a United Kingdom financial year basis. The United Kingdom total for coal research and development is for 1990-91 and includes expenditure by Government Departments, British Coal and, where available, United Kingdom industry. Since 1981-82 about £1,000 million of public sector funds have been invested in coal technology research and development in the United Kingdom. Around half this total has been spent on clean coal technology research.

The figures published by the IEA were in 1991 United States dollars. These have been converted to pound sterling using the IEA average exchange rate unit of $1·764 to £1 for 1991.

Small Businesses

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance he has given to small businesses in each year since 1989.

Mr. Leigh: The support programmes for small businesses operated by my Department together with their annual cost in each year since 1989 are as follows:

Expenditure

£ million

Programme	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
Enterprise initiative consultancy scheme	35·6	40·2	52·10
Small firms loan guarantee scheme	99·4	85·0	69·85
Small firms merit award for research and technology	8·8	10·7	12·70
Support for projects under research	—	—	12·40
Regional enterprise grants (investment)	8·5	8·5	6·40
Regional enterprise grants (innovation)	3·1	2·5	2·20
Export marketing research scheme	3·0	3·8	1·10
Your business success	—	0·5	1·00
Graduate enterprise	—	0·4	0·30

My Department also provides funding for development work which aims to benefit small firms and produces a wide range of publications aimed at small businesses.

From April 1993 my Department will take over responsibility from the Employment Department for funding training and enterprise councils (TECs), which provide a wide range of business support services to help small businesses.

Tour Operators

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to stop tour operators from surcharging customers after a contract has been signed, in cases where the operators in fact incur no corresponding rise in their costs.

Mr. Leigh: My Department has recently laid draft regulations to implement the EC package travel directive. These regulations permit surcharges to be made for certain specified reasons only, such as fuel price fluctuations, exchange rate changes and certain taxes. In order to apply a surcharge, the operator must first have reserved the right to so do in his contract with the consumer. The contract must describe the manner in which the price revision would be calculated. The operator is, in addition, required to absorb any price increase amounting to 2 per cent. of the price of the package and may in no circumstances make a price increase in the period 30 days before departure. An operator who attempted to make a price increase where there has been no corresponding increase in costs would be in breach of contract.

Fossil Fuel Levy

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 1 December, Official Report, column 107-8, if he will establish a separate fund for the proceeds of the fossil fuel levy in order that the amounts applied from it to the decommissioning costs of nuclear power stations can be quantified.

Mr. Eggar: In addition to premium income from the levy, Nuclear Electric receives income from the sale of electricity. From this total income, the company must finance its current operations and make provision for decommissioning its stations. How precisely these funds are provided for is a matter for Nuclear Electric plc, subject to the safety requirements of the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate and to the scrutiny of the company's auditors.

Telephone Information Services

Ms. Abbott: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Independent Committee for the Supervision of Standards of Telephone Information Services' code in preventing the abuse of premium rate telephone services by invitations to unemployed people to make calls about non-existent jobs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: Since the Independent Committee for the Supervision of Standards of Telephone Information Services (ICSTIS) introduced its revised code of practice in February this year, the number of complaints received by ICSTIS about employment services has halved. ICSTIS remains concerned about misleading and dishonest employment services, however, and an ICSTIS working party published a review on 3 November which contains the recommendation to ban all employment services from the premium rate network, except those where the service provider or information provider is the direct organisation offering the jobs. ICSTIS has invited comments on its recommendations by 15 December.

Government Chemist Agency

Mr. Merchant: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what targets he has set for 1992-93 for the performance measures of the Laboratory of the Government Chemist agency.

Mr. Leigh: The primary performance target of the Laboratory of the Government Chemist (LGC) for 1992-93 continues to be the recovery of its full economic cost from income from customers. In addition, new secondary performance measures have been developed to supersede those agreed when the agency was originally established in October 1989. For 1992-93 these are:

completion of reports on research into the feasibility of further analysis of samples by the date agreed with customers: to increase from an average of 80 per cent. in the first quarter to an average of 88 per cent. in the last quarter; to achieve more than 85 per cent. of contract research milestones within the time scale agreed with customers;

to maintain accreditation from the National Measurement Accreditation Service (NAMAS) for the existing 15 categories of work and obtain NAMAS accreditation for a further category of work by April 1993; to acquire accreditation for LGC as a whole to BS 5750 Part 1 (ISO 9001) by April 1994.

These targets will be subject to annual review.

Sixth Landward Licensing Round

Mr. Merchant: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the sixth landward licensing round.

Mr. Eggar: I have today announced the conditional award of 22 new exploration licences for blocks in England, Wales and Scotland. The licences allow companies to search and drill for petroleum, subject to the requirements of the planning system and the technical approval of my Department.

Details of the awards have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

I am particularly encouraged to see in this round a strong continuing interest in coal-bed methane exploration by a growing number of companies. Most are new to the United Kingdom licensing scene, and bring valuable experience from coal-bed methane operations in the United States. The methods of working are significantly different from those used for conventional oil and gas exploration. The prospects for coal-bed methane have yet to be fully tested here, but it has been successfully developed in the United States and already represents about 17 per cent. of its recoverable gas reserves. If it can be successfully exploited here, it could represent a very valuable addition to our future energy supplies. The opportunities which we are now providing for licensees to test the prospects for coal-bed methane are therefore of especial importance.

The new licences allow companies to conduct seismic operations and test drill for oil and gas subject to all necessary planning permission and landowners' or occupiers' consent and, where operations involve the penetration of coal-seams, permission from British Coal. No seismic or drilling operations will be allowed until companies have provided me with evidence that they have received any necessary permission from the mineral planning authority.

Pit Closures

Mr. Hague: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the present position with respect to licensing to the private sector pits which British Coal had planned to close.

Mr. Heseltine: British Coal is statutorily responsible for licensing coal mining and must consider applications from responsible organisations seeking licences. Under present legislation, licensed coal mining is subject to statutory limits of 150 on the numbers employed underground in deep mines and 250,000 tonnes of coal from the areas specified in the licence for opencast sites.

Of the 31 pits which British Coal had intended to close, 10 are the subject of statutory consultations, which the corporation has made clear will be meaningful. I understand that the corporation does not propose entering into negotiations for the licensing of any of these pits before the consultations are complete.

The coal review is considering the prospects of the other 21 pits British Coal has proposed to close and which are not subject to the statutory consultations. I understand that British Coal does not propose to enter into commercial discussions about licensing any of these pits before that review is complete.

Licensing any of these pits while the review is continuing would be difficult in practice against the background of uncertainty about the future prospects for the industry and the market for coal. The review is considering the opportunities for the private sector in the production of coal. Its conclusions on this aspect will be included in the White Paper to be published early in the new year.

Decisions on any applications for licences to operate pits will be taken once the review and consultations are complete.

Iraq

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what responses have been made by his Department to requests and reports received from the United Nations Special Commission of Inspection in Iraq or its executive chairman, Rolf Ekeus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 26 November 1992]: The Government have made a significant contribution to the work of the United Nations Special Commission on Iraq as it seeks to implement relevant United Nations Security Council resolutions. In response to UNSCOM's requests we have supplied personnel for the UNSCOM inspection teams and some specialised equipment. It is not our practice to comment in detail on the information given to us by UNSCOM.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what provision he has made for the payment of bad debt on exports to Iraq of military and dual-use exports to Iraq in the period 1985 to 1990 covered by (a) short-term and (b) medium-term cover provided by the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 26 November 1992]: ECGD does not make separate provisions against loss for particular categories of goods. ECGD made total provisions of £695·9 million in relation to Iraq business in its 1990-91 accounts. The 1991-92 accounts are currently being audited and will be laid before Parliament in January next year.

Military Exports

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will specify what proportion of Export Credits Guarantee Department cover provided for military or dual-use exports in the period 1985 to 1990 was (a) short-term and (b) medium-term.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 26 November 1992]: It is not possible to provide figures on the basis requested, because of the way ECGD records have been structured to meet its business needs.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on claims made on (a) NCM as the potential successor company to the Export Credits Guarantee Department and (b) ECGD with respect to short-term cover on military and dual-use trade credit to Iraq in the last five years.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 26 November 1992]: Under the terms of the December 1991 privatisation of the short-term business of ECGD, NCM assumed no responsibility for the administration and payment of claims arising from any export business conducted with Iraq. That responsibility remained with ECGD.

ECGD does not maintain details of short-term claims paid or under examination categorised by type of goods. In the last five years, ECGD has paid a total of £23·2 million in respect of insured short-term export trade with Iraq. In addition, approximately £6 million of claims received are currently under examination. At this stage, it is difficult to forecast the extent to which claims paid will eventually be recovered.

Matrix Churchill

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what date he signed public interest immunity certificates in the Matrix Churchill case.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 26 November 1992]: On 11 and 26 September.

Sales Promotions

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will draw up guidelines on free-flight offers to cover (a) availability, (b) hidden costs and (c) the financial collapse of any party involved in the supply of the free flight.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 2 December 1992]: No. The British code of sales promotion practice, administered by the Advertising Standards Authority, already contains guidelines covering both availability and hidden costs.

Trade associations, such as the Association of British Travel Agents (ABTA), require that their members have protection in place for the consumer in the event of insolvency.

Charter flight passengers are protected against financial loss by the existing air travel operators licensing (ATOL) scheme. In March 1992 the DTp announced that it would be setting up a statutory financial protection scheme to reimburse scheduled passengers in the event of an airline collapsing. The Government asked the CAA to work up details of a scheme and are currently considering its proposal.

Parcelforce

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 2 December, Official Report, column 282, whether the uniform tariff he will maintain for Parcelforce after privatisation is inclusive of value added tax.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 11 December 1992]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave to him on 29 October 1992, Official Report, column 784.

Coal Imports

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he has on the price of coal imported into the United Kingdom in (a) August, (b) September and (c) October.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 14 December 1992]: The information requested is:

Average price of imported coal[1]
August to October 1992

August[2]	31·93
September	33·91
October	35·12

[1] The average price is for all grades of coal and includes the cost of insurance and freight.
[2] The figure for August 1992 has been revised since my previous answer of 29 October (Official Report, column 784).

Terrorism

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the answer of 8 December from the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Official Report, column 558, to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, if he will be meeting the Manchester chamber of commerce and industry to discuss the problems facing owners of commercial property for whom insurance cover against terrorist attacks is becoming unavailable; if he will list the other interested parties to which his right hon. Friend referred in his reply; and if he will make a statement on the progress of his consideration of the representations he has received.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 11 December 1992]: No. I have received a number of representations from industry, commerce and the insurance industry which are under consideration, but none as yet from the Manchester chamber of commerce.

Government Stock

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the occasions instalment payments were allowed in sales of Government stock held under the control of his Department; and if he will list the occasions when full payment of such stock was demanded.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 14 December 1992]: For privatisation by flotation and secondary share offers held under the control of my Department or its predecessors, the occasions on which payment for shares was by instalments and those on which full payment was asked for are listed at 1 and 2 respectively of the table.

Privatisation by flotation and secondary share offers under the control of DTI or predecessor departments.

Sellafield

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what factors not considered at the public inquiry are causing the delay in starting the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply. The thermal oxide reprocessing plant cannot start the commercial reprocessing of oxide fuel until the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate is satisfied with the safety of the plant and the regulatory authorities have no objections on waste management grounds.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total administrative cost of social fund payments for the last 12-month period for which figures are available, for (a) community care grants, (b) budgeting loans and (c) crisis loans; and if he will provide separate figures for each district office.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 16 November 1992, c. 75]: The latest information on social fund administration costs is for the year 1990-91 and is in the Library.

Income Support

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will change the rules to allow income support to be backdated to the date of entitlement of disability living allowance or attendance allowance for claimants and their carers in cases where a delay of more than 12 months occurs.

Mr. Burt: Time limits form an accepted and necessary part of the social security system. It is not envisaged that claims will take more than 52 weeks to decide.

Income support may be backdated for up to 52 weeks in appropriate circumstances. We have no plans to change the current rules.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the total cost of uprating the level of income support received by people aged 18 to 24 years to the level enjoyed by those aged 25 and over.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 9 December at column 684.

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 24 November, Official Report, column 595, if he will now show how many (a) women and (b) men were dependent upon income support in May 1991, either as claimants or as the spouses or partners of claimants; of these totals how many (a) women and (b) men were above pension age; and how many were below pension age.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table.

	Numbers
Females dependent on income support
Total of claimants and partners	3,248
of which: under age 60	1,909
over age 60	1,339
Males dependent on income support
Total of claimants and partners	2,001
of which: under age 65	1,723
over age 65	278

Note: All figures are thousands, rounded to the nearest thousand.

Income Statistics

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures for the latest date available showing for people above state pension ages, the number of (a) husbands, (b) wives, (c) single men and (d) single women, with weekly incomes excluding national insurance benefit, income support, family credit, housing benefit and community charge benefit as appropriate, in the following income bands (a) under £5, (b) £5 to £10, (c) £10 to £15, (d) £15 to £20, (e) £20 to £30, (f) £30 to £40, (g) £40 to £50, (h) £50 to £60, (i) £60 to £70, (j) £70 to £80, (k) £80 to £90, (l) £90 to £100, (m) £100 to £150, (n) £150 to £200, (o) £200 to £300, (p) £300 to £400, (q) £400 to £500 and (r) over £500 respectively.

Miss Widdecombe: Information is not available in the form requested. The requested distribution was in some cases too detailed to give a reliable number of sample cases to be taken into account. Certain ranges have therefore been merged in order to ensure estimates are based on at least 20 sample cases. In addition, the nature of the survey techniques used in the family expenditure survey means that the separate incomes of husbands and wives within a couple cannot be identified reliably. The answer therefore categorises single people (male and female) and couples only. The available information is in the table.

Overseas Pensioners

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing those countries in which British state retirement pensioners are entitled to have their pensions uprated annually in the same way as if they were still residing in the United Kingdom together with the date upon which each country was added to the list of those so entitled and the cost to the taxpayer of pensions payable in those countries, for the most recent 12 month period.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is in the table. The cost of these pensions is met from the national insurance fund.

Table of overseas countries where annual pension increases are paid, the dates from which annual upratings were first applied and the total amount of pensions paid in the year ending 5 April 1992

Housing Benefit

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the annual cost of reducing the housing benefit taper to 20 per cent. for all claimants.

Mr. Burt: We estimate that the cost of reducing the housing benefit taper to 20 per cent. for all claimants would be approximately £2 billion. Estimate based on data obtained from the 1987, 1988 and 1989 family expenditure surveys modelled at 1992-93 prices and benefit levels.

This does not include any estimate of the behavioural effects of a 20 per cent. taper.

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what consideration has been given to paying housing benefit in respect of interest on building society top-up loans for house improvements;

(2) what is his estimate of the annual cost of allowing claims for housing benefit in respect of interest on building society top-up loans for house improvements.

Mr. Burt: Housing benefit is payable only to meet a commercial rent liability. In income support, assistance can be given with the interest on loans that are taken out for improvements to the home's fitness for occupation providing they are reasonable in the family's circumstances. This help is available to tenants as well as owner occupiers, provided they qualify for income support.

The total amount included in income support for help with housing costs in 1991—(the latest year for which figures are available—was £949 million. No information is available separately on top-up loans for house improvements.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many non-dependant deductions for housing benefit have been made since April 1992; and of these what proportion have been at (a) £4, (b) £8, (c) £12, and (d) £18.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not yet available. Information on non-dependants since April 1992 was first collected in May 1992 and is unlikely to be available until later in 1993.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of paying housing benefit to people aged under 25 years at the full rate currently paid to people aged 25 years and over; and what proportion this figure is of total housing benefit expenditure.

Mr. Burt: The estimated cost of paying housing benefit to people aged 18-24 at the full rate currently paid to people aged 25 years and over would be approximately £360 million[1].

This represents approximately 5 per cent. of the planned 1992-93 housing benefit expenditure of £7·05 billion announced by the Department in February 1992.

Note:

[1] This estimate is based on data drawn from the 1987, 1988 and 1989 family expenditure surveys and the 1991 annual statistical inquiry modelled at 1992-93 prices and benefit levels.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's estimate of the cost of extending the successor fund to the independent living fund to cover people over retirement age.

Mr. Scott: The estimated cost of extending the successor fund for new cases to cover people over retirement age is £2 million in 1993-94, £6 million in 1994-95 and £9 million in 1995-96.

Source: based upon the level of applications to the existing independent living fund.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many recipients of help there were from the independent living fund in each region in the United Kingdom in 1991-92; and how many people are expected to be helped by the successor fund to the independent living fund in each region in the United Kingdom in 1993-94.

Mr. Scott: The number of people, in each region of the United Kingdom, in receipt of awards from the independent living fund, as at 31 March 1992, is in the table.

It is expected that, nationally, around 1,500 of the most severely disabled people of working age will receive cash payments to supplement services provided by local authorities. It is not possible to estimate a regional breakdown of this figures.

Region	Number	Percentage of total
England	9,402	68·8
Northern Ireland	1,321	9·7
Scotland	2,288	16·7
Wales	659	4·8

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) under the proposed arrangements for replacing the independent living fund for new applicants how many people he estimates will be provided for by local authorities only and how many he estimates will be eligible for assistance from the new proposed trust fund; what funding he will make available to local authorities to meet the additional costs; and if he will ensure such funding is ring-fenced;

(2) what proportion of severely disabled people requiring provision from the local authority he estimates will require a cash payment from the new trust fund under the proposed new arrangements for providing personal assistance to severely disabled people following the closure of the independent living fund; what average percentage of their total cost of personal assistance he estimates this will represent; and how many people will lose entitlement to cash that they would have received had the independent living fund continued.

Mr. Scott: From April 1993 local authorities have the primary responsibility for community care. All disabled people, including around 11,500 severely disabled people who might otherwise have looked to the independent living fund for cash help, will look to their local authority for help to live in the community. Additional funding for local authorities was announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health on 26 November. This funding will be within the ring-fenced special transitional grant for community care.

We expect that around 1,500 of the most severely disabled people who get help from their local authority will also be able to get a cash payment from the new fund. For these cases, the local authority will be expected to pay for services up to the cost of residential or nursing care, with the new fund providing a cash payment in addition. The size of the cash payment will vary according to the circumstances of the individual. Payments from the current independent living fund are entirely discretionary: there is no entitlement to any payment from the fund, which is a charitable trust.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what provision will be made under the proposed arrangements for replacing the independent living fund for severely disabled people seeking personal assistance provision following the winding up of the independent living fund and before the start of the new scheme in April 1993.

Mr. Scott: Local authorities have statutory duties to help disabled people. Help from the independent living fund (ILF) has always been in the form of a discretionary top-up to local authority services and the vast majority of ILF beneficiaries—and potential beneficiaries—are already getting help from their local authorities. Severely disabled people who would have applied to the ILF between now and April 1993 will, of course, be able to apply to the new body.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of the budget of the independent living fund in 1991-92 was taken up in administration costs.

Mr. Scott: The administration costs of the independent living fund during 1991-92 were approximately 4 per cent. of total expenditure.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people over retirement age received help from the independent living fund in (a) 1991-92 and (b) from April 1992 until the fund was closed.

Mr. Scott: (a) the only age breakdown available for 1991-92 is for November 1991. At that time, 37 per cent. of those receiving help were over 60.

(b) Figures for the current financial year show the position as at 30 November 1992 as being:

1. Number of independent living fund (ILF) clients over 60 (both sexes)—7,435—this figure represents 40·6 per cent. of the total caseload.
2. Number of ILF clients over 65 (both sexes)—6,218—this figure represents 34 per cent. of the total caseload.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much the median and mean payments from the independent living fund were in (a) 1991-92 and (b) in 1992 until the fund was closed.

Mr. Scott: Data on median payments are not available. The mean award for 1991-92 was £88 per week. For the period to 31 October 1992 the mean award was £104, but this figure may change because awards are still being processed.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Canterbury (Mr. Brazier) of 2 December, Official Report, column 233, what right of independent appeal there will be for an applicant refused help under the arrangements to replace the independent living fund.

Mr. Scott: Arrangements for appeal will be a matter for the trustees of the successor body. I understand that under the current scheme any disagreement with a decision is considered by two trustees or, exceptionally, by the whole body of trustees.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Canterbury of 2 December, Official Report, column 233, how much of the budget of £4 million for the successor fund to the independent living fund is for administration costs.

Mr. Scott: It is estimated that the administration costs of the successor fund for new cases will not exceed 10 per cent. of the total provision of £4 million.

Women's Pension Rights

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the rights of women to a pension from their husband's former employer if the husband divorces his wife before retirement age.

Miss Widdecombe: Under the present law, the courts have powers to take account of occupational pension rights in divorce settlements. The Pensions Management Institute currently has a working party looking at all aspects of occupational pensions and divorce with the aim of producing a report in March 1993. When that report is published we will give careful consideration to its recommendations.

War Pensions

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 4 December, Official Report, column 424, if he will list the different rank differential payments for each rank under war disablement pension arrangements.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is contained in schedule 1, parts I and II of the Naval, Military and Air Forces etc. (Disablement and Death) Service Pensions Order 1983, a copy of which is in the Library.

Social Fund

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to allow social fund grants and loans to be applied for the purpose of rent bonds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Social fund budgeting and crisis loans can be paid to provide help with rent in advance. Assistance with deposits is specifically excluded from the social fund. There are no present plans to change these arrangements.

However, I am always ready to consider proposals for improvements and hold regular discussions with the voluntary and other organisations involved. I shall also be looking with interest at the outcome of a pilot deposit scheme in west London currently being sponsored by the Department of the Environment.

EMPLOYMENT

Published Papers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list for the last 12 months the titles of papers published by the Employment Service.

Mr. McLoughlin [pursuant to his reply, 27 October 1992, c. 589]: The chief executive of the Employment Service has written further to the hon. Member.

Letter from M. Fogden to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 14 December 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, you may recall the Secretary of State asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question in October about the papers published by the Employment Service in the last 12 months. This was because it was a matter which fell to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Unfortunately, my reply of 27 October contained an error in the attached annex of papers we had published. The "Revised Administrative Assistant Interview Plan, Guidance and Rating Form" and the "Revised Administrative Officer Interview Plan, Guidance and Rating Form" should not have been included in the annex. These documents give guidance to my managers so that they can make effective use of the structured interviews used for selecting people for positions in the Employment Service. If potential candidates were to obtain copies of this material it would provide them with an advantage over other potential candidates. I am sure that you will agree that this would not be right and as a consequence these documents are not available to the public.

I am sorry this mistake was made and regret any inconvenience caused.

I have attached a corrected annex and a copy of our booklet "Competent to Recruit?", which describes in general terms how our recruitment process was developed and how it operates.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Unfair Dismissal

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many full-time employees in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) each standard planning region are not covered by the right to appeal against unfair dismissal.

Mr. McLoughlin: I regret that the information is not available as there is no statutory definition of what constitutes full-time employment for the purposes of unfair dismissal.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many part-time employees in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) each standard planning region are not covered by the right to appeal against unfair dismissal.

Mr. McLoughlin: I regret that the information is not available as there is no statutory definition of what constitutes part-time employment for the purposes of unfair dismissal.

Career Development Loans

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in each region and for Great Britain as a whole are (a) currently on a course which has been supported by a career development loan, (b) have obtained jobs at the end of their period of study supported by a career development loan, (c) are repaying a career development loan and (d) have had to defer repayments on their career development loan because of hardship, what is the average amount of loan taken out; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The table sets out for each English region, Scotland and Wales, information on the number of people currently in trained supported by a career development loan (CDL) and the number of people currently repaying a loan. Information on number of trainees in work following training is obtained from a sample number of trainees. On the basis of the sample, 74 per cent. of trainees supported by a CDL find work following training. No information is held on the number of trainees who have had to defer repayment of loans due to hardship. At the end of October 1992, the average loan amount for loans taken out in the current financial year was £2,745.

Youth Training

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the level of youth training allowance, or equivalent, for 16 and 17-year-olds for every year between 1978-79 and 1993-94 (a) in cash prices and (b) at 1978-79 prices.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 7 December 1992]: Information about actual allowance levels is not available. The following tables show minimum allowance levels; providers of youth training can pay more.

Travel-to-interview Scheme

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if she will tighten up the travel-to-interview scheme in order to provide early payments to claimants; and if she will make a statement about the inception and operation of the scheme including take-up in the last 12 months;

(2) if she will amend the travel-to-interview scheme to enable applicants to claim for losses incurred in attending a second interview; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. Cooper to Mr. Elfyn Llwyd, dated 15 December 1992:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, it is the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the Agency's Chief Executive to answer Parliamentary Questions about relevant operational matters. In his absence, I am replying to your questions about the Travel to Interview Scheme (TIS).

TIS was introduced in 1986 to help with travel costs for unemployed people to attend job interviews beyond daily travelling distance of their home area, thus widening the applicant's jobsearch, improving their chances of obtaining work and encouraging labour mobility. From October 1991 to September 1992 the scheme helped 38,000 applicants. A few basic conditions must be met before assistance can be granted, to ensure that the limited funds available are concentrated on those unemployed people in most need.

Assistance is normally given to clients in the form of a British Rail travel warrant, which they receive before attending the interview. Where clients choose to travel by car or are entitled to help with overnight subsistence costs they are reimbursed on their return from the interview. Payment is usually made in cash by our local Jobcentre or, if the amount to be reimbursed is quite large, then a girocheque will be sent to the client from our Regional Finance Offices. The Finance Office in Cardiff have a target of repayment within seven days and I am pleased to say that in almost all cases payment is made within five.

You have asked about amending TIS to help applicants with assistance for second interviews. Whilst we realise it would be popular with jobseekers if help was available to cover the cost of repeat interviews, it could in practice be very costly. It may, for example, lead to the available funds having to be concentrated on a smaller number of people. We therefore limit the assistance to one interview per job. Where the selection process is a lengthy one we have to rely on the employer being sensitive to costs likely to fall on the applicant and offer help towards them.

You may like to know that the scheme is currently under review and the eligibility conditions are being looked at to see whether, within the limited resources, there are ways of helping more people. The possibility of helping with second interviews is included in the review. As you will appreciate the recommendations for a change in the eligibility rules of the scheme are subject to Ministerial and Treasury approval. I hope that the decisions on this issue will be taken in the very near future.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Professional Footballers

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government on the application of articles 7 and 48 of the treaty of Rome, as amended, to the employment of professional footballers.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 14 December 1992]: It is the policy of Her Majesty's Government that articles 7 and 48 of the treaty of Rome, as amended, apply to the employment of all nationals of the European Community working in the United Kingdom, including professional footballers.

Unemployment Statistics

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people aged 16 and 17 years in the Liverpool travel-to-work area are not in employment, not on a youth training scheme and not in full-time education.

Mr. McLoughlin: In October 1992 there were 297 unemployed claimants aged 16 and 17 years in the Liverpool travel-to-work area.

Changes to the benefit regulations in September 1988 coincided with the extention of a guaranteed YTS (now YT) place to all those aged under 18 not in full-time education or employment, which meant that those who declined an offer of a YTS place were no longer entitled to benefit. However, there are still a small number of under 18-year-olds entitled to benefit due to special circumstances, such as severe hardship or by virtue of their being orphans.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was (a) her Department's budget expressed in 1987-88 prices, (b) the average number of unemployed people and (c) a figure for (a) divided by (b) for each year since 1987-88.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The figures requested are as follows:

Year	(a) Department's budget (£ million)	(b) Average number of unemployed people (Great Britain)	(a)/(b) (£s)
1987-88	3,903	2,674,858	1,459
1988-89	3,592	2,142,008	1,677
1989-90	3,307	1,702,250	1,943
1990-91	3,041	1,757,266	1,730
1991-92	2,756	2,448,791	1,125

(i) Figures for years to 1989-90 include a public corporation the National Dock Labour Board.

(ii) The 1991-92 figures exclude the amounts transferred to the Scottish Office (mainly for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise) which is responsible for delivering the main training and enterprise programmes in Scotland.

Construction Sites

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful prosecutions took place in each of the last five years as a result of investigations into deaths and serious injuries on construction sites in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many deaths and serious injuries have occurred on construction sites in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole in each of the past five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The numbers of deaths and major injuries occurring in the construction industry in Strathclyde and Scotland in the past five years are provided in the table.

Questions about the work of police forces are for my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Lough Shore, Greyabbey

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment has been made of the adequacy of the foul sewerage system for the additional homes proposed at the Lough Shore, Greyabbey, planning application No. 0772.

Mr. Atkins: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has not yet concluded the assessment of the adequacy of its foul sewerage system to serve the proposed construction of 53 houses on land adjacent to Islandview road, Greyabbey.

Non-fossil Fuels

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration has been given to encouraging electricity generation from non-fossil fuel sources in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement regarding the future application of the non-fossil fuel obligation to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: The Department of Economic Development and NIE plc have jointly commissioned a study into the potential for renewable energy in Northern Ireland and plan to publish its findings next spring. No decisions on a non-fossil fuel obligation for Northern Ireland can be made until then.

Community Relations Council

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many staff are employed by the Community Relations Council; and how many are (a) Roman Catholics and (b) Protestants.

Mr. Hanley: The Community Relations Council employs 16 staff, eight of whom are Roman Catholics and eight Protestant.

Newtownbreda Bombing

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many interim payments of £10,000 or more have been issued by the Compensation Agency to householders whose homes were damaged by the IRA bomb at Newtownbreda on 23 September.

Mr. Mates: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Compensation Agency under its chief executive, Mr. J. Robinson.

I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J. Robinson to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 14 December 1992:

I refer to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning the criminal damage resulting from the bombing of the Forensic Science Laboratory at Newtownbreda on 23 September. The Secretary of State has asked me to respond.

In the case of householders a total of 111 claims are valued at £10,000 or more and 64 interim payments of various amounts have been made. Three have been for more than £10,000. In addition four offers of settlement over £10,000 have been made.

I hope this is helpful.

Housing

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he is taking to ensure that the Northern Ireland Housing Executive introduces an effective new build and improvements to purpose-built stock programme following the publication of the annual housing statistic report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Following the announcement on 8 December of its public expenditure allocation the Housing Executive will prepare its 1993-94 budget for approval by Government. I am confident that this budget will provide for the continuation of effective new build and IPBS programmes.

School Examinations

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he will take to ensure that secondary school students from Northern Ireland can continue to undertake examinations set by examining boards in England and Wales at both GCSE and A-level; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: There is no change to the arrangements whereby NI schools may choose A-level syllabuses offered by examining boards in England and Wales.

At GCSE, pupils commencing courses in key stage 4 in September 1993 in English, mathematics and science, business studies, drama and home economics must follow the statutory programmes of study in those subjects and the Department of Education will approve only those GCSE syllabuses which confirm to the programmes of study. The Department invited examining boards in England and Wales to submit syllabuses for approval, in these subjects, but none has done so for courses commencing in September 1993, although interest has been expressed in offering syllabuses for approval for 1994. Schools may offer GCSE syllabuses in all other subjects set by examining boards in England and Wales for courses commencing in September 1993.

Home Helps

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many home helps have been employed in west Belfast during each of the last five years.

Mr. Hanley: The information is not available in the form requested. The number of home helps employed in the North and West Belfast community unit of management of the Eastern health and social services board at 30 September of each of the last five years was as follows:

Year	Number of home helps	Whole-time equivalents
1988	1,519	477·87
1989	1,392	440·54
1990	1,343	404·86
1991	1,142	389·58
1992	1,039	346·26

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many home helps are currently employed throughout west, east, north and south Belfast.

Mr. Hanley: The information is not available in the form requested. The number of home helps employed in the North and West Belfast, and South and East Belfast community units of management at 30 September 1992, the latest date for which information is available, was as follows:

Community unit of management	Number of home helps	Whole-time equivalents
North and West Belfast community unit	1,039	346·26
South and East Belfast community unit	1,429	315·68

Single Parents

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many single parents are claiming social security benefit in (a) west Belfast and (b) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. Wylie to Dr. Joe Hendron, dated 11 December 1992:

As I am responsible for Social Security operational matters your recent Parliamentary Question on the number of single parents claiming social security benefit has been passed to me for a reply.

Information available on the number of single parents claiming social security benefit is as follows:

Income support

West Belfast Area	Numbers of lone parents in receipt of income support
Andersonstown Social Security Office	2,570
Falls Road Social Security Office	2,398
Shankill Social Security Office	1,139
Total	6,107
Northern Ireland Total	33,183

Other Benefits

Information is not available for specific areas and the figures supplied are for Northern Ireland as a whole. Some single parents may be getting more than one of these benefits.

Benefit	Numbers of lone parents in receipt
Family Credit	5,500
One Parent/Child Benefit	28,000
Widowed Mothers Allowance	2,500
Sickness and Invalidity Benefit	400

I hope you find this information helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report and copies will be placed in the Library.

Military Complaints Procedure

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to announce the appointment of an independent assessor of military complaints procedures.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I am pleased to announce that I have appointed Mr. David Hewitt as independent assessor of military complaints procedures. Mr. Hewitt is a respected legal figure in Northern Ireland and will bring considerable experience to the post. The main role of the assessor will be to provide an independent audit of the operation of procedures for handling non-criminal complaints against HM forces. His terms of reference are set out in section 60 and schedule 6 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991. This appointment reaffirms the Government's commitment to maintaining public confidence in the attainment of the high standards of behaviour required from the security forces. Mr. Hewitt will take up his duties early in the new year.

Race Relations

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about race relations in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: Earlier this year, the Government, in responding to the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights second report on "Religious and Political Discrimination and Equality of Opportunity in Northern Ireland" (Cm 1107), indicated that they would bring forward in 1992 a consultative document to examine the scope for race legislation in Northern Ireland. This consultative document will be published later today. It will examine the need for and possible scope of legislation on race relations in Northern Ireland and the possible form and content of any such legislation. The consultative document also reviews a range of departmental policies and programmes which affect ethnic minority groups.

The document will also seek views about legislation to make discrimination in the provision of goods, facilities, services and premises on the ground of religious belief or political opinion unlawful.

SCOTLAND

Local Rail Services

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy that any reorganisation of Scottish local government should provide a structure to maintain the integrity of local rail services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 December 1992]: Regional and islands authorities are required to secure the provision of such passenger transport services as they consider appropriate where these are not being provided by the market and to formulate general policies as to the services they propose to secure. There are no plans at present to change this. The Government's consultation paper on local government reform invites views on the most appropriate arrangements for enabling the provision of public transport services in Scotland.

After-school Care

Mr. Chisholme: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money has been given to Scottish Enterprise for after-school care provision by local enterprise councils.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 December 1992]: It is for Scottish Enterprise and local enterprise companies to deploy the funds available to them, subject only to the broad budget block structure set out in the Supply Estimates and to the rules on virement between budget blocks. However, I have written to the chairman of Scottish Enterprise and to local enterprise company chairmen indicating that they will be expected in 1993-94 to support the piloting of after-school and holiday child care initiatives, in line with the Government's election manifesto commitment to introduce a new child care grant throughout Great Britain. The substantial increase in funding for the Scottish Enterprise network's enterprise activities for 1993-94 will clearly be very helpful in enabling the network to undertake this task.

Housing

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage change in right-to-buy receipts he has assumed in setting out his planned provision for housing in 1993-94.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 December 1992]: Estimates of right-to-buy receipts in 1993-94 will be included in the provisional housing revenue account capital allocations to local authorities for 1993-94 when these are issued later this month.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what account he has taken of changes in housing stock between 1992-93 and 1993-94 in his planned provision for expenditure on council housing for 1993-94.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 December 1992]: The local authority housing stock in Scotland is expected to change from an estimated total of 695,655 dwellings at 30 September 1992 to an estimated total of 668,537 dwellings at 30 September 1993. These estimates, which have been agreed with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, will be reflected in the calculation of housing support grant for 1993-94. The allocations to local authorities for capital investment in council housing in 1993-94 will also take account of these estimates.

Water Quality

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what are the additions or reductions of each of the chemical constituents of water and their percentages to or from the existing supplies in the areas served by each of the water authorities in Scotland which are required in order to meet the new EC water standards; and if he will provide a breakdown by (a) chemical constituent of water, (b) each water authority and (c) each supply point;

(2) what changes to the chemical analysis of water are envisaged as a consequence of implementing new EC water standards compared with the existing chemical analysis employed by Scottish water authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 14 December 1992]: There are no new EC water standards. The EC drinking water directive (80/778/EEC) of July 1980 came into force in July 1985. The Water Supply (Water Quality) (Scotland) Regulations 1990 adopted the standards set in the directive, together with a number of additional national standards on quality.

There are over 700 water supply zones in Scotland taking water from more than 800 different surface and groundwater sources. The raw water quality varies with location and time of year. The water treatment carried out to meet the requirements of the regulations is equally varied. Water quality information is available from authorities' public registers and this is summarised in their annual reports. The Scottish Office publishes an annual overview of water quality in Scotland. The last, "Drinking Water Quality in Scotland 1990", is in the Library and a more detailed report for 1991 will be published shortly.

Scottish Natural Heritage

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much Scottish Natural Heritage is paying out in the current financial year in management agreement; and whether he will list each current management agreement and its cost.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 14 December 1992]: I have asked Scottish Natural Heritage to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much Scottish Natural Heritage paid out in compensation payments in the current financial year under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981; and if he will list each individual amount.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 14 December 1992]: I have asked Scottish Natural Heritage to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of claims for compensation under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 that are currently outstanding in Scotland, their county and the amount that has been claimed.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 14 December 1992]: I have asked Scottish Natural Heritage to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list grants given by Scottish Natural Heritage for the purchase of land in Scotland for nature conservation purposes, their location and the organisations that received them in the current financial year.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 14 December 1992]: So far in 1992-93 Scottish Natural Heritage has paid £500 to Kilmuir Village Woodlands Association under section 9 of the Natural Heritage (Scotland) Act 1991. SNH estimates that a further £175,000 may be paid to voluntary bodies for land purchases in this financial year. The details remain confidential until negotiations are completed.

Skye Bridge

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place a copy of the Skye bridge toll concession agreement in the Library.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 December 1992]: The development agreement regulates the design and construction of the scheme and the concession agreement regulates the operation and maintenance thereafter. These are commercial agreements and as such are confidential. However, certain key provisions of the agreements are required to be made public under provisions in the New Roads and Street Works Act 1991. These were published in an assignation statement at the time of publication of draft orders for the scheme. My right hon. Friend has arranged for a copy of the published assignation statement to be placed in the Library.

Transport Users Consultative Committee

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he has taken on each of the recommendations of the Transport Users Consultative Committee for Scotland contained in its 1991 annual report.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 December 1992]: The committee's recommendations on railway issues are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. The committee's recommendations on shipping issues relate directly to the operational responsibilities of Caledonian MacBrayne. I understand that the company's existing arrangements for consultation on the design of new vessels, and changes in the pattern of services or timetables are fully in accord with the committee's recommendations.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Foreign-owned Trawlers

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the numbers and types of United Kingdom-Spanish trawlers or Spanish-owned trawlers and United Kingdom-Dutch-owned trawlers fishing within the United Kingdom quota system and the number and type of licences each of these vessels have; if he will express this as a percentage of the United Kingdom fleet; and if he will list the aggregate tonnage and aggregate horsepower in kilowatts of each of these vessels.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport gave to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 19 October 1992 at column 200. All the vessels listed in this reply hold United Kingdom fishing licences. I also refer to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 24 November 1992 at column 576 on the subject of beam trawl licences held by Anglo-Dutch vessels. I regret that it is not possible to provide the other information requested except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many fishing vessels of other European community member states are operating inside the United Kingdom quota system.

Mr. Curry: Only vessels which are registered in the United Kingdom are entitled to fish against United Kingdom quotas.

Fisheries

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost of policing and administering fisheries in the United Kingdom for the years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91; and what are the expected costs for 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Curry: The cost of policing and administering sea fisheries in the United Kingdom was as follows:

	£ million
1988-89	20·5
1989-90	21·7
1990-91	23·4
1991-92	23·8
[1]1992-93	25·4

Fishermen (Effort Limitation)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the conservation measures and effort limitation measures which have been applied by him and which affect British fishermen only.

Mr. Curry: After consultation with the fishing industry the United Kingdom introduced on 1 June 1992 a package of conservation measures which complemented EC measures brought into force on the same day. The United Kingdom measures included a one-net rule, the use of square mesh panels in all nephrops fisheries and for whitefish in the area west of Scotland south of 56°N southwards to the southern edge of the Irish sea, and an anti-ballooning provision for all whitefish fisheries. We also, along with the Irish Republic, retained the 27 cm minimum landing size for whiting. A ban on the use of twin and multi-rig trawls in certain nephrops fisheries as requested by the industry will come into operation early next year. Also, while the EC limit in relation to cod and haddock fisheries of 135 days at sea, set for 1992, applied mainly to United Kingdom vessels, we were able to negotiate a gear option for vessels prepared to use 110 mm and 120 mm mesh nets.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information his Department has about prevailing limitation of fishing effort by curtailment of days at sea operated by each member country of the European Community.

Mr. Curry: EC regulation 3882/91 requires certain vessels of over 10 m length, fishing for cod and haddock in the North sea and to the west of Scotland, to be tied up for 135 days during the period 1 February 1992 to 31 December 1992. Member states affected by this have been able to obtain full or partial exemptions from this requirement on the basis that they would not catch quotas, or the use of alternative arrangements.

The available information for each member state is summarised as follows:

The United Kingdom is operating limited tie-up regime under EC Reg. 3882/91, such that vessels may opt to use certain technical measures instead of tying up for the full 135 days (partial exemption from Reg 3882/91).

Belgium, Denmark, Germany and Ireland have also obtained exemptions from Reg. 3882/91.

France, Spain and Portugal have no regime of days at sea limitation as far as we are aware.

Greece and Italy have national regimes.

Netherlands—most Dutch vessels are limited to 150-165 days at sea under national legislation.

Common Agricultural Policy Subsidies

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the value of common agricultural policy subsidies (a) in total and (b) for each agricultural product paid to United Kingdom farmers in the last financial year; and what was (a) the average and (b) the median value of subsidy paid to each farm.

Mr. Curry: Details of public expenditure under the common agricultural policy, including expenditure on national grants and subsidies, are published in table 9.1 in "Agriculture in the United Kingdom", an annual publication produced by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Copies are placed in the Library. Statistical information is not retained recording the average and median values of subsidy received by individual farms.

Radioactive Discharges

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what division within his Department is currently dealing with the application by British Nuclear Fuels plc for the authorisation of radioactive discharges for the thermal oxide reprocessing plant.

Mr. Curry: The divisions dealing with these applications are: emergencies and food protection division, for the disposal of radioactive gaseous waste and waste oil; and marine environmental protection division, for disposal of radioactive liquid waste. Appropriate scientific support is provided by the Ministry's food science division and directorate of fisheries research.

Surplus Butter

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his oral answer of 3 December, Official Report, columns 384-85, what records it is compulsory for organisations distributing EC butter to keep.

Mr. Curry: Designated organisations must ensure that records are kept of the produce received and distributed. Details of records that are required to be kept are set out in annex B of leaflet LP46 entitled "Surplus Food Scheme".

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his oral answer of 3 December, Official Report, columns 384-85, what methods his Department uses to contact recipients of EC surplus butter in order to carry out checks.

Mr. Curry: It is a requirement that all designated organisations receiving produce for distribution must notify the local office of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food at least one week in advance of a distribution to eligible recipients. This enables official visits to be made on a random basis.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his oral answer of 3 December, Official Report, columns 384-85, whether he will consider the production by his Department of standard advertisements, posters or leaflets which could be used or adapted by voluntary organisations participating in the scheme for the distribution of EC surplus butter.

Mr. Curry: The Intervention Board executive agency produces and distributes a standard poster listing the eligible groups under this scheme. Detailed publicity of the timing and location of individual distributions is best left to designated orgnisations.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his oral answer of 3 December, Official Report, columns 384-85, what checks are carried out by his Department on organisations which apply to take part in the scheme for the distribution of EC surplus butter, prior to their acceptance as distributors.

Mr. Curry: Organisations are required to certify that they are charitable or non-profit making; preferably already involved in the provision of goods and services to the most needy; and not concerned in the production, wholesaling, storage or retailing of butter and/or beef. Applications must also be supported by an independent referee such as a justice of the peace, minister of religion or a prominent citizen of the local community.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his oral answer of 3 December, Official Report, columns 384-85, how many organisations which have participated in the scheme for the distribution of EC surplus butter have been barred from participation in a following year by his Department.

Mr. Curry: Applications from six organisations which had participated in the 1991 scheme were refused for the 1992-93 distribution.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his oral answer of 3 December, Official Report, columns 384-85, how many of the voluntary organisations distributing EC surplus butter are visited by staff from his Department to observe distribution.

Mr. Curry: It is planned that 30 per cent. of the 1,300 designated organisations will be subject to official inspection on a random basis.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his oral answer of 3 December, Official Report, columns 384-85, what instructions are issued to voluntary organisations distributing butter as to the details of recipients of butter which they are required to record.

Mr. Curry: Designated organisations are required to keep records of the number of recipients, the quantity of butter and beef each received, and how eligibility was established. Documents that organisations may accept as proof of eligibility are listed in annex C of leaflet LP46, entitled "EC Surplus Food Scheme", copies which are available in the Library of the House.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date his Department received applications from British Nuclear Fuels plc for authorisation of discharge from the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield, of (a) low-level liquid waste from the marine pipeline, (b) gaseous waste, (c) radioactively contaminated waste oil and (d) low-level liquid waste from the facility sewer.

Mr. Curry: The dates these applications were received are as follows:

(a) low-level liquid waste from the factory sewer	21 January
(b) low-level liquid waste from the marine pipeline	5 May
(c) gaseous waste	5 May
(d) radioactively contaminated waste oil	5 May

Farmers (Early Retirement)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations he has received calling for the implementation of a pension scheme to assist early retirement among farmers in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: Since the EC scheme for early retirement was agreed in May, my department has received 29 representations from Members of Parliament and members of the public about its possible application in the United Kingdom.

Wool Prices

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect of the discontinuance of the guaranteed price for wool; and what plans he has to reconsider his decision.

Mr. Curry: Termination of the wool guarantee will give the industry financial responsibility for its own affairs, allowing it to respond more directly to market forces. Although there will be some short-term impact on producers' returns, their total returns from wool amount to only approximately 5 per cent. of the total return from sheep production. The Government have no plans to reconsider this decision, which will be implemented by means of the Agriculture Bill.

Suckler Cow Premium Scheme

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect on the industry of the refusal of top-up payments for the suckler cow premium scheme; and what plans he has to reconsider his decision.

Mr. Curry: Substantial increases in the EC-funded element of the suckler cow premium from 1993 onwards mean that rates of premium will be higher in 1993 than this year, despite the removal of the national top-up. I have no plans to reconsider this decision.

HEALTH

Homoeopathic Medicines

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many prescriptions for homoeopathic medicines have been made (a) in the out-patient clinic of hospitals, (b) in in-patient clinics, (c) from general practitioners' surgeries and (d) in total in the last calendar year.

Mr. Sackville: The number of preparations dispensed by community pharmacists, dispensing doctors and prescriptions submitted by prescribing doctors for items personally administered in England in 1991 was 161,000. The remaining information is not available centrally.

Community Health Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much funding is allocated to community health councils for training purposes in each regional health authority; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not held centrally.

We have asked regions to ensure that adequate arrangements are made for the development of community health council staff.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what sums were expended by her Department in respect of European Drug Prevention Week, additional to those in existing annual programmes; and for what specific purposes.

Dr. Mawhinney: Since 1985 the Department of Health has run a series of campaigns against drug misuse, using mass media advertising and other media. As the main thrust of the 1992-93 campaign, European Drug Prevention Week was financed using existing allocations. The purpose of the week, consistent with previous campaigns, was to raise awareness of the dangers of drug and solvent misuse, especially among young people, their parents and other concerned adults.

Warner Report

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to implement the recommendations of the Warner report; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Brecon and Radnor (Mr. Evans) on 7 December at column 526. Local authorities have been asked to report progress by 8 April 1993 on the implementation of recommendations for improving employers' personnel practices. We are consulting widely on other important recommendations, for comment by 26 February 1993.

Newchurch Hospital, Warrington

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent on resettling the residents and patients of Newchurch hospital, Culcheth in Warrington; on what was the money spent; and what was the average cost per patient.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. D. Hannah, the chairman of Warrington health authority, for details.

Kidney Patients

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health is she will publish the number of patients in each standard age group who received kidney dialysis in the most recent available year; and what information she has on the proportion these numbers represent of kidney patients in each age group.

Mr. Sackville: According to information provided by the European Dialysis and Transplant Association, there were 9,087 patients in the United Kingdom receiving dialysis as at the end of 1991, the latest date for which information is available. The table shows the estimated numbers by age group and the proportion they represent of all patients receiving renal replacement therapy at that time.

Under 15	109 (1·2)	0·5
15-34	1,263 (13·9)	6·5
35-44	1,145 (12·6)	5·9
45-54	1,636 (18·0)	8·5
55-64	2,108 (23·2)	10.9
Over 65	2,808 (30·9)	14·5

General Practitioners

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will review the system for making deprivation factor payments to general practitioners to give a greater role to family health service authorities; and if she will make a statement on the effectiveness of the present system in targeting resources where they are most needed.

Dr. Mawhinney: The deprivation payments system recognises the higher workload faced by doctors in deprived areas. As up-to-date data become available from the 1991 census, there will be opportunities to improve the targeting of the payments: we shall need to consider this with the profession and with national health service management, taking account of experience to date.

Health Services

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to encourage health providers to manage their contacts, and treatments provided, more evenly over the financial year.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is the responsibility of local managers to schedule their contracted work evenly over the financial year. The vast majority are doing this successfully. Where there are isolated problems, these are being resolved by local managers with help, where appropriate, from their regional health authority.

Sefton General Hospital, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement about the future of Sefton general hospital, Liverpool.

Mr. Yeo: On 27 October 1992, Liverpool health authority commenced public consultation on proposals to replace outdated in-patient services for the rehabilitation of the elderly and people with acute mental illness, currently at Sefton general hospital, with a wide range of modern, purpose built facilities at Broadgreen and Mossley Hill hospitals. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. D. H. Tod, the authority chairman, for more details.

Redundancies

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy on compulsory redundancies within the NHS.

Dr. Mawhinney: Employing authorities in the NHS decide their own policies on matters such as redundancy, taking into account the Advisory Conciliation and Arbitration Service code of practice, employment legislation and the procedures governing the eligibility to benefits outlined in sections 45 and 46 of the General Whitley Council handbook.

Regional Hospital Authorities

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will indicate for each regional hospital authority (a) the cash allocation for hospital and community health services spending in 1993-94 and (b) the region's resident population in 1993-94 in each age band in the national capitation funding formula, and to subdivide the cash allocation for each region by the population in each age band in proportion to the age-related weightings in the capitation formula in such a way as to show the amount of money allocated per person in each age band in each region for HCHS in 1993-94.

Mr. Sackville: Table 1 shows for each region the main revenue allocation for resident population in 1993-94. These were based on an across the board increase of 0·4 per cent. above inflation with a similar sum distributed to bring regions closer to their population shares. They do not therefore equate to weighted capitation shares.

Table 2 shows the projected births and resident population in each age band used in the weighted capitation formula.

The formula does not make allocations in respect of specific age groups. It weights the crude population for:

Age, using the expenditure weightings in table 3;
Standardised mortality ratio, all causes under 75;
London weighting and market forces factor;
Thames regions addition.

Table 4 shows the successive effects of each of these weighting factors on each region's population shares.

The age weightings reflect past estimated national spending on these age bands and cannot be used in isolation to produce meaningful information in the form requested.

Camberwell Health Authority

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will review the appointment of the chairman of Camberwell district health authority.

Dr. Mawhinney: No.

Medicine Expenditure

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 26 November, Official Report, column 810, what assessment she has made as part of her Department's review of the measures being taken throughout Europe to limit medicine bills of the current spend per head on medicines in European countries; and if she will give the figure for the United Kingdom and the corresponding figures for Germany, Italy, France, Belgium and Holland.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department monitors the range of measures being taken in all countries to limit spending on medicines and notes the different factors in each country which influence levels of spending. These include countries' different policies on the range of drugs for which reimbursement of cost is available, making simple per capita comparisons potentially misleading.

The latest year for which figures are available for all the countries mentioned is 1989.

In that year, spending on drugs per capita was converted into sterling on the basis of purchasing power parity:

United Kingdom	47
Germany	99
Italy	79
France	83
Netherlands	42

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 26 November, Official Report, column 810, what assessment she has made as part of her Department's review of the measures being taken throughout Europe to limit medicine bills of the proportion of the growth in national health service spending on medicines in 1991, which was due to the cost of new medicines introduced in the past five years; and what comparable figures are available for Germany, France, Holland and Belgium.

Dr. Mawhinney: "New medicines" include both those based on active substances being introduced to the market for the first time and new presentations of medicines based on active substances which may have been introduced earlier. Under this definition, figures for England only, show that the net ingredient cost of national health service drugs dispensed by chemists grew by £207 million in 1991. Of that growth, £150 million, or 72 per cent. was spent on new medicines introduced in the previous five years.

No comparable figures are available for the other countries.

High Blood Pressure (Treatment)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has to extend the proposed new limited list regulation to cover national health service medicines for the treatment of high blood pressure.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Drug and Therapeutics Bulletin

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money her Department has given to support the publication and distribution of the "Drug and Therapeutics Bulletin" in each of the last 10 years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is readily available only from 1987-88.

	Expenditure £
1987-88	608,625
1988-89	660,642
1989-90	723,482
1990-91	750,863
1991-92	827,305

Note: —Figures for the years to 1990-91 include expenditure for the Adverse Drugs Reactions Bulletin which was issued quarterly with the Drugs and Therapeutics Bulletin. This was discontinued in June 1990.

Medicines (Prescription-Pharmacy Classification)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if (a) the Medicines Commission or (b) the Committee on Safety of Medicines advises her on the change of legal status of medicines from a prescription-only medicine to a pharmacy-only classification;

(2) if she will make it her policy to consult with the appropriate advisory body on any proposed changes of legal status of medicines from prescription-only to pharmacy-only in the 10 new therapeutic categories to be covered by the limited list regulations.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Medicines Act 1968 requires Ministers to consult, and take account of, the advice of the appropriate advisory committee or the Medicines Commission before making any changes to the Medicines (Products Other Than Veterinary Drugs) (Prescription Only) Order 1983 (SI 1983 No. 1212) as amended, restricting medicines to supply on prescription only. It is normal practice for Ministers to consult both the Committee on Safety of Medicines and the Medicines Commission on proposed changes of legal status of medicines from prescription-only to pharmacy classification.

NHS Spending

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total level of hospital and community health services net capital expenditure in 1990-91 and 1991-92 in (a) cash, (d) constant prices adjusted by the gross domestic product deflator and (c) constant prices adjusted by the changes in input unit costs.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 20 November 1992 at column 436.

NHS Estate

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list for each regional health authority in England the amount needed to bring the estate to an overall condition which exhibits only minor deterioration for 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92;

(2) if she will list for each regional health authority the amount spent on repairs and maintenance in 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Sackville: For the estimate of the cost to bring the estate to a condition which exhibits only minor deterioration for 1989-90, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my predecessor to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 12 July 1991 at columns 500-504; and for 1990-91 to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 17 November 1992 at column 179. Information in the same form is not held centrally for 1988-89, and the figures for 1991-92 are not yet available.

Rationalisation schemes and the replacement of old and unsuitable stock with modern buildings are the principle means of reducing the backlog, and also provide better and more efficient facilities for health care. Some 670 building schemes, each costing over £1 million, have been completed since 1979, and around £1·5 billion will be invested in new buildings this year.

The amount spent on repairs and maintenance is shown in the following table; data for 1991-92 are not yet available.

Notes:

1. The figures included for engineering maintenance are limited to expenditure incurred on the maintenance of general engineering services and plant. Total expenditure incurred on the maintenance of medical and surgical, X-ray and laboratory equipment or incurred within specific departments such as laundries, boilerhouses, etc is not fully identifiable in health authority accounts.
2. Information for 1991-92—derivable from financial returns rather than annual accounts—is not yet available.

Severely Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has held with the Association of Directors of Social Services on the motion passed by its conference urging the Government to empower local authorities to make direct payments to severely disabled people to make their own personal assistance arrangements; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The association discussed its views with officials recently. We have no current plans to amend legislation in this way. Our policy guidance to local authorities makes it clear that disabled people should be fully involved in the decisions about the services to be provided. Where a disabled person wants to take on the day-to-day management of his or her carers, this can be written into contracts with the providers of the service.

Hospital Closures

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list, by district health authority, hospitals which have (a) partially and (b) wholly closed during 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Health Charges

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will bring forward consultative proposals to simplify forms AG1, AG2 and AG3 in order to make it easier for the public to claim assistance with health charges.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are carefully considering the recommendations made following the review of the administration of the national health service low income scheme. In reaching final decisions on the measures necessary to further improve a service which already provides help to a large number of people on low incomes, we shall need to take account of current public expenditure constraints. Changes to forms AG1, AG2 and AG3 which may be required in the light of those decisions will be discussed with the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux and the other interested groups who contributed to the review.

Human Growth Hormone

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the standards with respect to the strength, purity and quality of pituitary-derived human growth hormone used in clinical trials and Medical Research Council-funded research.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Medical Research Council (MRC) working party on human growth hormone issued batches of human growth hormone for use in the trial after deciding that they were of an acceptable quality for clinical use. The MRC steering committee for the human pituitary collection issued stringent criteria for the collection and inclusion of pituitary glands that were used for the production of growth hormone preparations.

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what licences or certificates were granted in respect of clinical trials for pituitary-derived human growth hormone; and if she will list in each case (a) the date of issue, (b) the holder, (c) dates of renewal applications made and granted, (d) action taken by the licensing authority and (e) recommendations made by the Medicines Commission or Committee on Safety of Medicines.

Dr. Mawhinney: I understand from the Medical Research Council that no clinical trial certificates were issued for pituitary-derived growth hormone, according to the available records.

Medical Negligence

Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost to regional health authorities in 1991-92 of legal claims against (a) doctors and (b) dentists in the NHS for medical negligence.

Mr. Sackville: Figures for 1991-92 are not yet available. In 1990-91 medical negligence claims cost the national health service an estimated £53 million, including legal costs and damages. Figures are not collected separately on claims against doctors and dentists.

Departmental Reports

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to provide members of the Health Select Committee with confidential advance copies of her Department's reports a few days before publication.

Mr. Sackville: We supply as a courtesy to Members of the Select Committee on Health confidential advance copies of command papers responding to reports of the Committee a day or two before publication, depending on the printing timetable.

Asbestos

Mr. Alan Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing (a) asbestos-related deaths and (b) asbestos-related disorders, by region for each year since 1979.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 9 December 1992]: The available information is given in the tables. The figures for discharges and deaths in hospital from 1979 to 1985 are based on very small sample numbers and may not be completely accurate.

EDUCATION

Cumbria

13. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received from educationalists in Cumbria on the quality of education provision.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend receives such representations from time to time.

Further Education Funding Council

14. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received about the role of the Further Education Funding Council.

Mr. Boswell: The establishment of the Further Education Funding Council has been widely welcomed. Further education institutions in particular are looking forward to meeting the challenges of institutional independence and diversity which will characterise the further education sector from 1 April 1993.

School Transport

15. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has for putting all school transport out to private contractors.

Mr. Forth: We have no such plans, although the decision to apply compulsory competitive tendering to school transport may lead to private contractors winning more work in this field.

Examination Results

16. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will take steps to arrange for the publication in school tables of earlier year GCSE candidates' passes, at the same time as their main results; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The comparative tables of GCSE and A/AS level results recently published by the Department included the results achieved over a two-year period by all candidates of the appropriate age as defined by the regulations.

Higher Education

17. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will estimate the number of young people entering higher education in each of the next 10 years.

Mr. Boswell: The public expenditure proposals announced by my right hon. Friend on 12 November assumed that the proportion of young people entering higher education—which is now well over one in four—would remain broadly constant over the next three years. Beyond that, the Government have made no detailed assumptions about the number of entrants each year.

Nursery Education

18. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what priority he is giving to the provision of nursery education.

Mr. Forth: It is for local authorities to determine the scale and form of provision for the under-fives in collaboration with other providers. A total of 604,000 under-fives attended maintained nursery and primary schools in England in 1991, an increase of 175,000 over the figure for 1979.

23. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of children were in nursery education in Lancashire in the last two years.

Mr. Forth: In 1990 and 1991 the age participation rate for the maintained sector was 48 per cent. The rates for nursery schools and classes specifically were 17 per cent. in 1990 and 18 per cent. in 1991.

Further Education

19. Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he is taking to encourage more 16-year-olds to attend colleges of further education.

Mr. Boswell: The Government's expenditure plans for further education allow for a 25 per cent. increase in student numbers between 1993-94 and 1995-96. The participation of 16-year-olds in education and training is expected to rise to over 90 per cent. by 1995-96.

Access Funds

20. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received in respect of access funds.

Mr. Boswell: Few. The access funds are a valuable addition to an already generous system of student support from grants and loans.

Learning Difficulties

21. Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to review the Education Act 1981's definition of learning difficulties.

Mr. Forth: The Education Bill currently under consideration in Standing Committee embodies the results of a review of legislative provision for children with special educational needs. The definition of a "learning difficulty" contained in section 1(2) of the Education Act 1981 has been carried forward into clause 139(2) of the present Bill. Clause 140 of that Bill provides for a code of practice. Subject to the passage of the Bill and secondary legislation, that code will contain criteria for the making of assessments and statements to which authorities will need to have regard in deciding whether children have learning difficulties.

Ministerial Powers

22. Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the extent of increase in the powers which can be exercised by the holder of his office since 1979.

Mr. Forth: The Government's policy on education is not to increase the powers of my right hon. Friend. It is to devolve the maximum possible power to the individual institutions with responsibility for providing education: schools, colleges of further education and universities.

The contents of the Education Bill now in Standing Committee reflects this aim, as the most appropriate way to secure higher standards of education.

National Curriculum

25. Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on progress in implementing key stage 3 of the national curriculum.

Mr. Forth: Children are now studying the national curriculum in all 10 subjects at key stage 3. Fourteen-year-olds will be tested for the first time in 1993 in English, mathematics, science and technology.

Student Incomes

26. Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he expects to receive the report of the inquiry into student incomes.

Mr. Boswell: I expect the findings of the student income and expenditure survey to be available late in 1993.

Open University

27. Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the funding for the Open university from 1 January 1993, following the visiting committee's recommendations.

Mr. Boswell: My Department will pay grant to the Open university from January to March 1993 as part of the estimates which Parliament has already approved for 1992-93. From April 1993, the Higher Education Funding Council for England will be responsible for determining the university's grants.

Special Needs

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are his plans regarding integration of children with special needs into mainstream schools.

Mr. Forth: The Education Bill currently before the House provides that authorities should secure the education of pupils with special educational needs in mainstream schools so long as such education meets specified conditions and is compatible with the wishes of parents.

Hearing Impaired Children

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Eduction if he will take steps to enhance the position of hearing impaired children in respect of (a) the planning of services, (b) the responsibility for providing support services and (c) the exercise of choice for parents of hearing impaired children.

Mr. Forth: The Education Bill will enhance the position of all children with special educational needs, including the hearing impaired. Local education authorities will remain responsible for making assessments and statements and will do so in the light of the new code of practice embodied in the Bill. To that end, LEAs will retain the necessary support services for the hearing impaired and other children.

The Bill also extends parental choice by enabling parents of children with statements to express a preference for the maintained school at which their child should be educated and to make representations as to the non-maintained special school or independent school of their choice. Parents will be able to appeal to the new SEN tribunal if dissatisfied with the LEA's placement.

Courses (Student Awards)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list those courses which previously attracted a discretionary student award but are now deemed to attract a mandatory award as a result of the change in status of polytechnics to universities.

Mr. Boswell: Full-time and sandwich courses of at least three academic years' duration provided by universities and leading to a certificate, diploma, or other award comparable to a first degree are automatically designated, as a class, for mandatory awards by the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations 1992. Similar degree-comparable courses at institutions other than universities may be specifically designated on an individual basis by my right hon. Friend under the regulations. Where such courses have not been designated, local education authorities may make discretionary awards in respect of attendance on them. There is no central list of individual courses in the former polytechnics which became automatically designated when those institutions took the title of university.

Vocational Education

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to encourage the further growth of courses of continuing vocational education in colleges and universities in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: Since its launch in 1982, the Department's professional, industrial and commercial updating (PICKUP) programme has successfully stimulated our colleges and universities to increase the quality and quantity of courses of continuing vocational education (or PICKUP) for the adult work force, usually provided at full cost and paid for by employers or individual employee. We estimate that enrolments grew by an average of 20 per cent. a year between 1984-85 and 1989-90, and were held at their record high level of nearly 1 million in 1990-91. Providing courses tailor-made to the needs of employers is now an accepted part of the mission of the great majority of colleges and universities.

We have reviewed the PICKUP programme in the light of this success and of developments such as the establishment of the Further Education Funding Council and the training and enterprise councils (TECs). We have concluded that—after more than 10 years and over £100 million of programme expenditure—the level of expertise within institutions, and the support they increasingly receive from the TECs, is such that the advisory and promotional work of the programme, including the Department's 10 PICKUP regional offices and its adult training promotions unit (ATPU), is now no longer necessary. The PICKUP regional development agents and the ATPU have been successful in putting continuing vocational education more firmly on the educational map but we judge that it would now be better to concentrate future support even more on the direct funding of institutions to enable them to continue to develop new courses and undertake the necessary related work such as marketing. The Department's regional offices and the ATPU will therefore close on 31 March 1993.

As a consequence, the resources available for the direct funding of further education colleges for the further development of PICKUP courses will nearly double, from £1·7 million in 1992-93 (currently available from within the Department's £3·5 million PICKUP programme) to £3·1 million in 1993-94. Of this £3·1 million, £2·8 million has been included in the planned funding for the Further Education Funding Council, with £0·3 million available from the Department (within a total of £0·8 million retained by the Department to complete existing PICKUP programme commitments in 1993-94). For both 1994-95 and 1995-96 the planned funding for the FEFC includes £3·7 million for PICKUP. It will be for the council itself to consider how best to deploy these resources. The Department is considering with the council the scope for it to use the expertise of the Department's regional development agents after 31 March 1993.

Funding for the development of continuing vocational education within higher education will be unaffected by our decision on the PICKUP programme. Funding is currently the responsibility of the Universities Funding Council and the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council (with respectively £10 million and £5 million made available for England in 1992-93). The Higher Education Funding Council for England will assume responsibility for funding higher education in England from 1 April 1993 and is at present consulting institutions on the future funding of continuing education as a whole.

It is clear—not least from recent HMI reports on PICKUP in polytechnics and PICKUP in further education—that a large amount of high-quality continuing vocational education, highly valued by employers, is already being provided. But this work will need to grow significantly, particularly to help employers meet the national education and training targets for lifetime learning, launched by the Confederation of British Industry in July 1991 and endorsed by the Government. The Department's PICKUP programme—and in particular the work of its regional development agents over the years—has laid the foundation: it is now for colleges and universities themselves, working with their business customers and with the TECs, and supported by their funding councils, to ensure that this work continues to grow. In so doing they will be helping to build the world class work force which our economy needs.

Under-fives

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of children aged under five years in the United Kingdom currently receive education in school.

Mr. Forth: In 1991 the age participation rate for these children in the United Kingdom was 53 per cent. At the start of the 1980s it was 43 per cent. This percentage increase is all the more noteworthy when we observe that the size of the three and four-year population increased over the period by 170,000.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many pupils attend grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Patten: It is estimated that almost 192,000 full-time pupils are currently being taught in grant-maintained schools in England.

School Classes

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of children are in primary school classes of more than 30 and in secondary school classes of more than 25 (a) nationally and (b) in the London borough of Redbridge.

Mr. Forth: In January 1992 in maintained schools in England, 25 per cent. of primary pupils were in classes of over 30 pupils taught by one teacher whilst 40 per cent. of secondary pupils were in one-teacher classes of over 35. The equivalent figures for Redbridge local education authority were 57 per cent. and 47 per cent. respectively.

Classrooms

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will estimate the percentage of schools using temporary or prefabricated classrooms; and what measures he is taking to enable local education authorities to provide permanent classrooms.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is not held centrally. However, the 1986 survey of school buildings showed that of the 392 primary and 403 secondary schools sampled, 7 per cent. of the primary and 6 per cent. of secondary teaching accommodation were in temporary accommodation.

We have provided significant capital resources for school buildings in recent years. Capital expenditure per pupil in maintained schools increased by 19 per cent. in real terms between 1978-79 and 1990-91.

It is for local education authorities to ensure that the school buildings within their responsibility are in a satisfactory condition. It is also for LEAs to determine their priorities for capital expenditure from the resources available to them. They have complete flexibility to give a high priority to the replacement of temporary accommodation if they wish.

Schools (Decoration)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will estimate the number of schools which have had no internal or external decoration for (a) five years, (b) 10 years and (c) more than 10 years.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is not held centrally.

Local education authorities and school governors are responsible for the state of maintained school buildings, and for deciding expenditure levels and priorities from the recurrent and capital resources available to them. Under local management of schools, governors have the flexibility to give a higher priority to repairs and maintenance work delegated to them if they wish.

Discretionary Grants

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the number of people unable to pursue higher education because discretionary grants have not been awarded.

Mr. Boswell: Under the Education Act 1962, most students on courses at first degree or comparable level—which constitute the greater part of higher education—are eligible for mandatory awards. Discretionary awards are accordingly confined to students on further and higher education courses who are not eligible for mandatory or postgraduate awards. Higher education student numbers continue to grow, and I have seen no evidence of significant numbers failing to enter because they have not obtained discretionary awards.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Citizens Charter

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list and describe briefly each of the initial commitments in the citizens charter to which he referred in his oral statement of 25 November, Official Report, column 869, and give against each of these commitments the level of performance currently being achieved.

Mr. Waldegrave: The citizens charter is a major programme of improvement to our public services. The aim is a comprehensive and durable change in the way that the services are managed and delivered, so that the citizen always comes first. Initial commitments were set out in the original "Citizen's Charter" White Paper of July 1991, Cm. 1599. The bulk of these, and much more, have already been delivered, as the "Citizen's Charter First Report: 1992", Cm. 2101 shows. The table summarises the original specific commitments and how they have been met or put in hand. References are to Cms. 1599 and 2101 where fuller descriptions can be found.

The Government's position is one of openness and constant improvement, and progress against remaining Cm. 1599 commitments, the new commitments in Cm. 2101, and the further commitments we shall be making will also be published from time to time.

Research and Development

Mr. Mans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement about international comparisons of research and development spending.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Office of Science and Technology is today publishing a report on international comparisons of research and development spending. Copies are being placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

HOME DEPARTMENT

London Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of reported incidents at each of the London prisons as from 1 January to 1 December.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There has been a total of 1,471 reported incidents in Prison Service establishments in London from 1 January 1992 to 1 December 1992 inclusive. The table shows a breakdown of these incidents:—

Establishment	Major	Minor	Total
Belmarsh	56	178	234
Brixton	22	142	164
Feltham	29	210	239
Holloway	32	150	182
Pentonville	31	121	152
Wandsworth	24	249	273
Wormwood Scrubs	18	209	227
Total	212	1,259	1,471

Major and minor incidents are defined in CI 18/1988, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Crime Statistics, Warwickshire

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which areas of North Warwickshire are most affected by burglary and incidents of violence and car theft.

Mr. Jack: The information is not collected centrally. Information for areas within Warwickshire is published in the annual report of the Chief Constable for Warwickshire; a copy of which is available in the Library.

Bogus Callers

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are being taken to alert the elderly to the dangers of allowing into their homes thieves posing as officials or trades people.

Mr. Jack: Individual police forces continue to develop crime prevention initiatives to reflect the needs of their areas, including measures to combat the risks posed by bogus callers. Several forces are known to have launched recent initiatives in this area working with local utility companies or crime prevention panels. For example, in November 1990 the Metropolitan police set up a dedicated unit operating in selected areas under the title of Operation Worker specifically to detect bogus callers. So far, more than 3,000 of these crimes have been cleared up throughout the areas covered by the project, representing a 58 per cent. clear-up rate for these offences.

The Home Office publication "Practical Ways to Crack Crime" and the poster and leaflet "Be Safe Be Sure" contain advice on dealing with callers at the door and have been widely distributed. Supplies are available free of charge to members of the public or, in support of local campaigns, to police forces and other agencies. The Association of British Insurers has also produced a helpful leaflet "The Knock Code" giving similar advice which has been distributed through the insurance industry and citizens advice bureaux. More than 2 million copies of the leaflet have been distributed so far.

Organisations such as Help the Aged and Age Concern through their local offices and often working in conjunction with the police and other organisations such as victim support groups, also provide practical help and advice. For example, Help the Aged ran a campaign in 1990 called "Who's There?" specifically to address the problem of bogus callers. It produced publicity material including videos for use by its local offices, which in turn arranged seminars and publicity campaigns. This material is still being used. Age Concern, through its nationwide network of 1,000 groups, has provided "security cards" with advice and local contact points, for distribution to the vulnerable.

Bullwood Hall

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he is making to the report by Judge Stephen Tumin on Bullwood Hall.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I made a statement on Judge Tumin's report on 1 December when the report was published. I shall send the hon. Member a copy.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints he has received on conditions at Bullwood Hall during the last 12 months.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Four complaints about conditions at Bullwood Hall have been received by the area manager during the last 12 months.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for improving the conditions of prisoners serving life sentences at Bullwood Hall; and for how many hours each day they are currently locked in their cells.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The governor and her staff are constantly striving to improve life for all prisoners in Bullwood Hall as resources allow. New staff attendance systems will be in place by January to meet the recommendation of the chief inspector of prisons that prisoners should spend at least 12 hours each day out of their cells.

Prisoners are currently locked up for either 14 and a half hours per day with evening association or 16 and a half hours without. Evening association is currently provided on an average of four nights each week.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will arrange for children's visits to Bullwood Hall to be allowed at weekends.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Every Monday afternoon Bullwood Hall provides visits solely for children and their carers. Children may also visit Bullwood Hall on any domestic visit on every Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday afternoon. The governor hopes that she will be able to provide special children's visits at the weekend in the future.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase the recreational, educational and language learning facilities for female prisoners at Bullwood Hall.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The gymnasium has recently been refurbished. There are plans to repair and enclose the swimming pool which will enable it to be used all year round. Money has been allocated to complete the conversion of workshops to an education and activity centre. Facilities for learning languages are already available to prisoners on an open learning basis as required.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide facilities for prisoners at Bullwood Hall to telephone their lawyers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: All prisoners in Bullwood Hall can use the card telephone system to contact their lawyers if they wish. In addition, urgent telephone calls at public expense will be allowed if necessary.

Assaults on Women

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many violent assaults, including rapes, were committed against women in each police area in each calendar year since 1981 inclusive and in the 12 months ended June 1992.

Mr. Jack: The available information by police force area is in terms of notifiable offences recorded by the police, with the most appropriate offence categories available being rape—offence category 19—and indecent assault on a female—offence category 20. Other types of assault do not distinguish between male and female victim. These figures are published annually in table 3.1 of "Criminal Statistics, Supplementary Volume 3", copies of which are in the Library. Statistics for the 12 months ended June 1992 are given in the table:

Car Crime

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement concerning his policies to combat car crime.

Mr. Jack: Our strategy to tackle crime consists of two main strands—promoting and encouraging practical ways to reduce this type of crime; and ensuring that car criminals are dealt with effectively under the criminal law.

It is important that we should do what we can to tackle car crime by adopting measures that reduce the opportunities for them occurring in the first place.

We have, therefore, been actively encouraging the motor manufacturers to improve the security of their vehicles. Many of the manufacturers are now responding positively, and more new cars are being fitted with advanced security equipment.

It is equally important to tackle the second-hand car market and to upgrade the security of vehicles already on the road. Central to this is making the public more aware of the cost of car crime and providing them with the information they need to make their cars more secure and to reduce the risk of crime happening to them. This has been a major feature of our Car Crime Prevention Year campaign, which has been running throughout most of this year. A review of this has shown a greater awareness during the year, allied with increased sales of security equipment.

We are also pressing the insurance industry to provide incentives for both manufacturers and the public to adopt appropriate security measures. Some insurers have now begun to take greater account of the risk of car crime and the presence of security features when setting premiums. This development is welcomed.

The police, too, have developed many impressive car crime prevention initiatives during the year, including the "Sold Secure" initiative in Essex and the national "Secured Car Parks" scheme. The Government will, of course, continue to support and encourage the police in these efforts.

Progress to date is encouraging. The recorded crime statistics for the most recent quarter—April to June 1992—show a reduction in car crime of 2·5 per cent. on the corresponding quarter of 1991. Of course, we cannot draw too many conclusions from a single quarter's figures; we hope, however, that this downward turn is the start of a welcome trend.

To help maintain the momentum in continuing with this strategy, I recently formed a specialist committee comprising people who are actively involved in all areas of car security and car crime prevention to advise me on these matters. I envisaged this body playing an important part in enhancing and taking forward the initiatives that we have been developing.

Our strategy for tackling car crime does, however, go much wider than improving vehicle security, essential though this particular factor is. It is also most important to tackle offending behaviour itself. We are therefore giving every encouragement to local probation services, the police and voluntary groups to work effectively to counter motor offending.

The Government have also announced their intention to tackle the problem of people who commit offences—often vehicle related—while on bail.

We are also committed to giving the courts the support and powers that they need, such as in the Aggravated Vehicle-Taking Act which came into force on 1 April, which deals firmly with those who take cars and cause damage, injury or death. My right hon. and learned Friend also announced on 16 July our intention to increase the maximum penalty for causing death by dangerous driving to 10 years, when parliamentary time allows.

Police Road Blocks

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis listing (a) the location of each road block recently set up by the Metropolitan police in the Greater London area, (b) the total number of people who have to date been stopped, (c) of that number, the number of members of ethnic minority groups and (d) the numbers of people who have refused to stop;

(2) what specific discussions his officials had with the Metropolitan police in advance of the setting up of road blocks in parts of London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The decision of the Metropolitan police, acting within their legal powers, to set up road checks in London is an operational one and as such falls within the discretion of the Commissioner. Officials in my right hon. and learned Friend's Department were not consulted in advance of the recent operations and there is no reason for him to call for a report from the Commissioner in relation to the matters listed in the question.

Winson Green Prison

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will conduct an inquiry into the circumstances that led to a man's death from dehydration in HMP Winson Green in July 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No prisoner died from dehydration at HMP Winson Green in July 1992.

The hon. Member may be referring to the death of John Joseph Ryan in July 1987 at Birmingham prison. The coroner found the causes of death to be electrolyte imbalance due to water depletion and to bronchopneumonia. The jury returned a verdict of lack of care, and Mr. Ryan's family is currently pursuing a civil action against the Home Office. It would therefore be inappropriate for me to comment further.

Prisoners

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) sentenced prisoners, (b) remand prisoners and (c) fine defaulters were received into Leeds, Liverpool, Birmingham, Durham, Brixton and Lewes prisons, respectively, each week from the beginning of September to date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest readily available information is given in the table.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was (a) the total prison population, (b) the sentenced prison population, (c) the remand prison population and (d) the number of imprisoned fine defaulters on each Friday from the beginning of the September to date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information is given in the table which relates to Prison Service establishments in England and Wales and does not include prisoners in police cells. The data on the unsentenced population include inmates remanded in custody by magistrates courts, committed for trial in the Crown court and also those who have been convicted but not yet sentenced. Information on fine defaulters is currently only available for 30 September when the total was 256.

Police Supernumerary Posts

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will allow police authorities to hold supernumerary posts to deal with problems of crime in city centres and town centres, on housing estates and in the community generally.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. Supernumerary police posts are considered only where there is a special commitment which is temporary. Supernumerary posts would not be considered for normal aspects of policing a force area.

Highpoint Prison

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the incident at HMP Highpoint on 24 November; and what plans he has to review security procedures in the light of the incident.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: An inquiry is currently being conducted into the disturbances at Highpoint prison. The inquiry will review security procedures and systems.

Racial Incidents

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many recorded racial incidents occurred in each London borough in each of the last 12 months.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information in the form requested is not available. The information supplied is for racial incidents recorded by the police by Metropolitan police area. The following table gives details of reported racial incidents for the 12 months to June 1992, the last month for which figures are presently available.

Prison Visitors

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he will take to encourage persons from ethnic minorities to join the membership of prison boards of visitors.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In making appointments to a board of visitors, consideration is given to the abilities of the individual candidate to discharge the duties effectively and the desirability of maintaining, so far as possible, a representative balance on the board in terms, for example, of age, sex, and social and ethnic background. No fewer than two members of the board are required to be justices of the peace. The membership of individual boards is reviewed every three years.

Advice on the selection and appointment of new members forms part of the training of chairmen of boards and is also included in the "Notes for the guidance of Chairmen" in the "Handbook for Members of Boards of Visitors", a copy of which is in the Library.

Chairmen are encouraged to seek members from the ethnic minorities wherever possible and to advertise as necessary.

The current ethnic make up of boards is as follows:

Ethnic origin	Percentage of members in post on 14 December 1992
Asian	2·52
Black	3·69
White	64·35
Other	0·18
Not known	29·26

Prison Education

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will continue to employ prison education officers at every prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under present arrangements, each prison establishment has an education officer, usually employed by the local education authority. Following the current competitive tendering exercise, each prison establishment, from 1 April 1993, will have an education co-ordinator employed by the successful contractor. The education co-ordinator will be an on-site manager accountable to the governor for ensuring that the educational services required of the contractor are discharged effectively and efficiently.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to improve the morale of prison education personnel in Wakefield prison following the report of Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons for 1991-92.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The report of Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons, published in July 1992, related to an inspection of Her Majesty's prison Wakefield undertaken in October 1991. The education programme was then described as lacking in imagination and breadth with an absence of a team approach, a lack of openness, poor communications and unfilled potential.

Since then, there have been changes in staff. It is also hoped, in due course, to provide improved accommodation for classes.

One of the purposes of the current competitive tendering exercise is, of course, to stimulate new and better ways of carrying out tasks. More detailed specification by the Prison Service of its requirements, establishment by establishment, and more rigorous monitoring should improve standards of education provision and the morale of the staff delivering it.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were employed in prison education within (a) individual prisons and (b) all prison establishments for each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is not held centrally. The Prison Service currently obtains most education services for prisoners through local education authorities. It is generally the local education authorities which employ the full and part-time salaried staff and sessionally paid teachers required. The Prison Service reimburses local education authorities for the expenditure incurred and pays a small additional charge for administrative costs.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how the prison education service will be publicly accountable in terms of services provided and overall budget, following compulsory competitive tendering;

(2) if teachers working in prisons will continue to be paid at the same level and conditions as non-prison teaching staff;

(3) which national agency will have responsibility for managing personnel in the prison education services following the introduction of compulsory competitive tendering;

(4) how administrative fees for the prison education service will alter following compulsory competitive tendering.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In the current competitive tendering exercise, the Prison Service has specified what educational services it requires to be provided and the contracts will provide for payment for all the services which the contractor undertakes to supply. The pay and conditions of service of the staff to provide those services and responsibility for their management and career development is a matter for their employer. The Prison Service will wish to assure itself of the adequacy of the arrangements the employer has made and also to monitor the quality for delivery of the service for which it has contracted.

This requirement that the Prison Service should specify, establishment by establishment, the services it requires and that the provider should be contractually liable if he fails to deliver is directed to improving effectiveness, public accountability, and value for money.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how recommendations in the report of Her Majesty's inspector of prisons for 1991-92 will be implemented for education following the introduction of compulsory competitive tendering within the prison education system.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The arrangements for responding to recommendations from Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons will not change. The chief inspector makes an annual report to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, as required by section 5A(5) of the Prison Act 1952. He also publishes reports of inspections of individual prisons, in which recommendations may be directed to the Secretary of State, the Director-General of the Prison Service, the responsible area manager or to the governor. These recommendations will continue to be considered and, where appropriate, implemented in respect of educational services bought in from contractors on and after 1 April 1993, as they are now in respect of services bought in from local education authorities.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the budget for prison education for each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Total expenditure on education services in prisons in England and Wales since 1979 was as follows:

1979-80	6·5
1980-81	8·6
1981-82	8·6
1982-83	9·9
1983-84	11·0
1984-85	11·9
1985-86	12·3
1986-87	14·8
1987-88	16·9
1988-89	19·5
1989-90	22·9
1990-91	25·5
1991-92	29·5

Prison Complaints Procedure

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to speed up the request and complaints procedure between prisoners and the prison service headquarters.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Seventy-one per cent. of Prison Service headquarters replies are already within the time target set. Prison Service management will be considering what can be done to improve on that proportion.

Prisons (Suicide Prevention)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to encourage greater staff training and awareness in suicide prevention in the prison service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A training package in suicide awareness forms part of the induction training for all new prison officers, and is also available to all prison establishments for local delivery. It is for individual governors to determine what priority such training should have, taking into account other staff training needs at different times.

Staff awareness is maintained by the suicide prevention management group within the establishment and by line managers. Prison Service headquarters provides active encouragement through the work of the national suicide awareness support unit. The unit issues regular newsletters as a way of sharing good practice within the Prison Service. It published an information paper in August 1992 which gives more details of national and local initiatives in this important area—my answer of 27 October, at column 580, refers.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many prisons suicide prevention management groups are established; and how he will encourage the involvement of the Samaritans.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Suicide prevention management groups are established in all prisons in England and Wales.

The Samaritans are already extensively involved in prisons. Local branches are represented on almost all suicide prevention management groups. The nature of their involvement varies according to local needs, but many include regular surgeries for prisoners; confidential befriending of suicide prisoners by visit, phone and letter; and training and support of prison staff and prisoner befrienders. This work is co-ordinated by the national prison liaison and development officer for the Samaritans. The Prison Service is funding this post for a two-year period. In conjunction with the Samaritans, the Prison Service also issued, in January 1992 guidelines to prisons on the role of the Samaritans and how it can be developed.

Prison Roofs

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the maintenance costs for (a) flat roofs and (b) pitched roofs in prison establishments for the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not possible to provide the information requested, as maintenance costs are not recorded in such detail as to allow work to various types of roofs to be readily identified.

Prisons (Fire)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many outbreaks of fire have occurred within prison establishments in the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information on the number of fires occurring in prison establishments in England and Wales is as follows:

	Number
1988	435
1989	313
1990	421
1991	555
[1]1992	642

[1]To 13 December 1992.

Prison Inspections

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken to speed up the publication of inspection reports for Her Majesty's prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Director-General of the Prison Service has been giving priority to securing speedier publication of the chief inspector's reports on individual prison establishments. Forty of these reports have been published to date this year, including some that had been delayed by staffing and operational difficulties last year. The time taken to clear for publication reports submitted by the chief inspector on his 1992 inspections has as a general rule now come down to under four months in the case of full inspections and under three months in the case of short inspections. The inspectorate's own preparations for publication normally take an additional month.

Action to implement the chief inspector's recommendations starts as soon as we know what his findings are and is not delayed until the publication date.

Prison Accommodation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the certified normal accommodation system for prison capacity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Prison Service has no plans to review the system for certifying normal accommodation. Section 14 of the Prisons Act 1952 provides that cells may only be used where they are certified by an inspector. This function is carried out by Prison Service area managers.

The certification process enables the Prison Service to establish the total capacity of the estate. For 1993-94 the Prison Service will be providing additional help to area managers in taking stock of the accommodation available in each establishment.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he will take to improve prison reception areas.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The standard design specifications for new prisons require a self-contained unit for the reception and discharge of prisoners in humane conditions, and in a logically ordered and efficient manner. Where practical, these specifications are also used for designing improvements to existing prisons.

Between 1991-92 and 1993-94 improved reception and discharge facilities have been opened or are being provided at 17 prisons.

In addition, an admissions guide on good practice in the management of arrangements for the reception and induction of prisoners has recently been issued to all Prison Service establishments. This is intended to enable staff to identify how best to provide prisoners with the support and information they need. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ensure that self-catering facilities are available to all long-term prisoners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Facilities to enable long-term prisoners to cook their own food and prepare additional meals in the evenings are provided in a number of establishments, particularly dispersal prisons. The provision of similar facilities will be considered elsewhere when resources allow.

Police Cells

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he will take to ensure regular HMI inspection of police cells.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Her Majesty's inspectors of constabulary already visit police stations, including the custody areas, during their regular inspection programme and will comment on any deficiencies.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many occasions of suicide and attempted suicide took place in police cells during 1991-92.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There were 10 cases of deaths in police custody areas in England and Wales during 1991 in which an inquest verdict of suicide was returned. A further two cases have been reported in 1992, to date. Figures for attempted suicide are not recorded centrally.

Prisons (Disabled Access)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action has been taken to improve access for disabled persons within prison establishments.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The current design specifications for the construction of new prisons reflect the needs of disabled prisoners, staff and visitors. Wherever practical, these are used as the basis for modernisation work in existing buildings. The specifications require that circulation routes should be suitable for wheelchairs and provide for access ramps and for lifts in certain buildings together with lavatories for use by the disabled.

Between 1990-91 and 1993-94, a total of 18 schemes within the programme for modernising existing prisons have or will result in improvement specifically for the benefit of disabled people. In addition, other improvements have been made by local management, of which there is no central record.

Schengen Agreement

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the effect on the United Kingdom of the Schengen agreement coming into force on 1 January 1993.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is now clear that the Schengen convention will not come into effect on 1 January 1993.

Life Prisoners

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he will make a statement about the changes in the procedures for reviewing the cases of persons sentenced to life imprisonment.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I intend to bring the procedures applying to prisoners subject to a mandatory life sentence more closely into line with those which, since 1 October 1992, have applied to prisoners who are either "discretionary life sentence prisoners" as defined in section 34 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 or prisoners who have been certified under paragraph 9 of schedule 12 to that Act as prisoners to whom section 34 would have been applied if it had been in force at the time that they were sentenced. These new arrangements will also apply to any prisoners sentenced to life imprisonment for an offence for which life imprisonment is the maximum penalty who are not "discretionary life sentence prisoners" and to any who have not been certified under paragraph 9 of schedule 12.

The effect of these changes will be that in respect of all Parole Board reviews of the cases of mandatory lifers that commence in their local establishment after or on 1 April 1993, subject only to exceptions that may be necessary to safeguard the interests of third parties or the welfare of prisoners, or where disclosure would otherwise be against the public interest, all the papers that are before the board will be made available to those prisoners, in advance of the board's consideration. They will also be provided with the reasons for Parole Board recommendations and ministerial decisions regarding release. An implementation date of 1 April 1993 has been chosen in order to give Prison Service staff sufficient time to arrange for the necessary preparation and disclosure of the relevant papers to prisoners and for the Parole Board to provide the necessary training for its members.

Lebanese Nationals

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy towards Lebanese nationals applying for asylum: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: All applications for asylum are carefully considered on an individual basis in full conformity with the provisions of the 1951 United Nations convention and 1967 protocol relating to the status of refugees, and refugee status is granted where appropriate.

In addition, for some years Lebanese nationals who have expressed a fear of return to Lebanon, but who could not demonstrate that they were refugees within the meaning of the 1951 convention, have generally been allowed to remain here, exceptionally, outside the immigration rules.

The Lebanese civil war ended last year and the situation there has now improved significantly. Following consultation with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary has decided that in all the circumstances this concession is no longer justified. Asylum applications made by Lebanese nationals from today will be assessed on their individual merits in the same way as those from nationals of most other countries. The United Kingdom will, of course, continue to honour fully its obligations under the 1951 convention and 1967 protocol.

Shops Act 1950

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the European Court of Justice judgment relating to the Shops Act 1950 to be delivered; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

The European Court of Justice has today held that the prohibition in article 30 of the EC treaty does not apply to national legislation prohibiting retailers from opening their premises on Sundays. The Court thus accepted the argument that the relevant local authorities and I advanced on behalf of the United Kingdom that the Shops Act 1950 is compatible with article 30. The House of Lords and other courts that referred cases to the European Court will now apply its ruling.

Parliament has given to local authorities the primary role in enforcing the law about Sunday trading in their areas. Cases in progress can proceed and local authorities can continue to issue summonses or seek injunctions.

I have considered whether I should also take action to enforce the law, but I have decided that the public interest does not require intervention by me at present. I shall continue to keep the position under review.

Questions of policy are for my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary. He announced the Government's proposals to the House on 26 November and said that the Government will be bringing forward a Bill to enable Parliament to consider the options as soon as is practicable.

Crime Prevention

Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to introduce the crime prevention measures recommended by the committee chaired by James Morgan.

Mr. Jack [pursuant to his reply, 18 June 1992, c. 645]: My right hon. and learned Friend and I have carefully considered the recommendations in the report and the views of those organisations that submitted comments on it. I welcome the report's endorsement of the partnership approach to crime prevention, which is now the cornerstone of the Government's policy. Also accepted are its general findings on the valuable contributions that each of the local partners can and do make to creating safer communities. However, I have concluded that the future development of effective crime prevention partnership groups and schemes does not depend on the report's recommendation that local authorities are given a statutory crime prevention role. In forming this view, I am mindful of not adding new burdens to local authorities and the fact that a great deal in this field can be done within the existing statutory framework. In this respect, the Government's view is that the lead on crime prevention should, for the most part, be determined by local circumstances. Nor am I persuaded that the appointment of local authority crime prevention co-ordinators requires central funding.

I am grateful to the Morgan working group for the effort it invested in its task. Its report, and earlier Home Office guidance, has stimulated the growth of local crime prevention action groups across the country.

I have placed in the Library of the House a copy of the Department's response to the recommendations in the report which are directed at the Home Office.

HEALTH

Medical Care Abroad

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action she has taken to ensure that medical care provided by Spanish hospitals under United Kingdom holiday insurance schemes is administered by suitably qualified personnel;

(2) what steps she has taken to ensure that medical treatment provided abroad by British holiday insurance companies for British holidaymakers is of a standard consistent with that provided within the British Isles;

(3) what steps she is proposing to take to prevent British holidaymakers to Spain, who fall ill, from receiving unsolicited and unwarranted treatment in the course of private hospitalisation paid for by holiday insurance companies.

Dr. Mawhinney: The standard of health care supplied abroad under commercial holiday insurance is a private matter between the insurer, the insured person and the service provider.

NHS Trusts (Contracts)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list each contract made with NHS trusts by (a) Her Majesty's Government and (b) regional health authorities for the most recent available year.

Dr. Mawhinney: The National Health Service Management Executive contracts centrally with units providing designated supra-regional services. For information on individual contracts I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) on 23 October at column 394.

Detailed information is not available centrally on contracts placed by regional health authorities.

Wellhouse Trust

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what allocations in the current financial year were made by the North West Thames health authority directly to reduce the projected deficit of the Wellhouse Trust; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Health authorities do not make allocations to trusts. North West Thames has however agreed to allocate £1·4 million to Barnet district health authority, the principal purchaser of services from the Wellhouse Trust. This is to enable it to increase the value of its contract for patient services during 1992-93.

Orthopaedic Services

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library the statistical information used in the preparation of the Tomlinson report relating to the percentage of patients waiting longer than one year for admission to hospital for elective orthopaedic surgery in (a) inner London, relative to England as a whole and (b) the four Thames regions, relative to the national average.

Mr. Sackville: Information about waiting times by district health authority and specialty is given in the publication "Hospital Waiting List, In-Patients and Day Cases"—ISBN 1 85839 003 6, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from the British Orthopaedic Association on the provision of orthopaedic and trauma services in inner London; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list (a) the hospitals in inner London which provide a comprehensive orthopaedic and trauma service and (b) the total number of beds available to London orthopaedic surgeons for carrying out elective and traumatic surgery.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Nurse Prescribing

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the reasons for delaying the introduction of nurse prescribing; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Competing priorities in the last public expenditure survey obliged us, very reluctantly, to postpone implementation of nurse prescribing. We will introduce nurse prescribing as soon as resources permit.

Hospital Readmissions

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of patients discharged from the acute departments of NHS hospitals were readmitted to an NHS hospital within a month in the last 12 months period for which there are figures; and what were the comparable proportions for the comparable periods 10 and 20 years ago.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally.

Romanian Adoptions

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent discussions have been held by her Department with the Romanian Committee for Adoptions; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: A meeting, originally scheduled for December, to review the working arrangements of the adoption agreement will take place early in the new year.

NHS Premises (Fire Safety)

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to provide extra funding to the national health service with a view to bringing NHS premises up to the standards required by fire safety legislation; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to the hon. Member for Bristol South, (Ms. Primarolo) on 3 November at columns 179-80.

Casualty Departments

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what training and information is given to hospital managers and doctors to guide them in the preparation of policies and care philosophies for patient-centred management of casualty departments.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is for provider hospitals to determine the pattern of local services and to develop training programmes that provide staff with the requisite skills.

Patient Discharges

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her Department's policy in respect of the extent to which a nurse manager in charge of a ward should be able to override a consultant's decision to discharge a patient.

Dr. Mawhinney: Guidance was issued by the Department, in health circular HC(89)5, a copy of which is available in the Library. It makes it clear that no patient should be discharged from hospital without the authority of the doctor holding responsibility for that patient, unless there are clearly agreed protocols for this authority to be delegated.

Transplants

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has made of the number of organ or eye donations that could have been used for transplants and the actual numbers of transplants in the latest period for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: The table gives the number of organs and corneas donated and the number of organs transplanted in the United Kingdom for the latest period for which information is available. The principal reason why donated organs are not used is because of clinical unsuitability. The United Kingdom Transplant Support Service Authority collects data on and publishes the reason for not using organs, in its annual report, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Period—1 January 1992 to 30 November 1992 United Kingdom[1]

Organ	Number donated	Number transplanted
Kidney	1,532	1,473
Heart	286	254
Heart/Lung	52	43
Lung	90	73
Pancreas	47	23
Cornea	3,518	2,187

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many castrophic leaks of ozone-depleting substances have occurred within her Department's buildings in the last five years;

(2) how many refrigeration and air conditioning systems in her Department are equipped with automatic leak detection systems;

(3) what quantity of HCFC 22 is purchased by her Department per annum;

(4) if she will provide details from the maintenance and servicing record of the quantity and type of ozone-destroying chemicals used annually in her Department's refrigeration and air conditioning equipment for servicing and in leakages; and what proportion is removed for recycling;

(5) what are the latest available figures for her Department's total purchase of CFCs and HCFCs;

(6) how many CFC and HCFC installations are contained within her Department's buildings;

(7) how much funding has been allocated or spent to specifically deal with measures to reduce her Department's consumption of ozone-depleting substances;

(8) how many chlorofluorocarbon domestic fridges are contained within her Department's buildings;

(9) to ask the Secretary of State for Health, what proportion of her Department's consumption of ozone depleting substances becomes controlled waste in terms of section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990;

(10) what is the quantity of ozone-depleting substances recycled within her Department and returned to the manufacturer.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will give an undertaking to purchase only ozone-friendly fridges that do not contain chlorofluorocarbons or hydrochlorofluorocarbons for her Department;

(2) what action has been taken to ensure that ozone-destroying substances consumed by her Department are identified as controlled wastes when they are no longer in use;

(3) what measures have been taken to ensure that ozone-destroying substances in use by her Department identified as controlled waste under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 do not reach the atmosphere;

(4) by what date her Department's use of ozone-depleting chemicals will conform to EC regulations on limits on these chemicals;

(5) how the departmental Green Minister has promoted protection of the ozone layer with specific policy measures; which possible measures have been considered and rejected; and on what grounds;

(6) what targets have been set for the recycling of ozone-depleting chemicals within the departmental buildings.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 30 November at columns 74-75.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which current uses of ozone-depleting chemicals by her Department are considered essential.

Mr. Sackville: Equipment in the national health service that still requires ozone-depleting agents includes refrigeration equipment and plant, which uses the less damaging hydrochlorofluorocarbons, and certain fire extinguishing systems where no alternative materials are currently available. For chlorofluorocarbons used for essential medical purposes I refer the hon. Member to the reply my predecessor gave to the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) on 12 March 1992 at column 628.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been sought and received on alternatives or substitutes to the ozone-destroying chemicals in use by her Department.

Mr. Sackville: The Department has been following technical developments both nationally and internationally and the information acquired is, and will continue to be used, in the preparation of guidance for the national health service. Guidance on refrigerants and air conditioning will be issued next year.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many portable halon fire extinguishers are contained within departmental buildings; and what measures are being taken to ensure their recycling and replacement.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is not available centrally. Guidance will be issued in spring 1993 to assist the national health service to control the use of halon in accordance with the Montreal protocol.

Limited List Prescribing

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if her Department will carry out a survey among United Kingdom pharmaceutical companies to establish how many potential new treatments for conditions covered by the proposed new limited list regulations are currently being investigated in their research and development laboratories;

(2) what positive measures her Department will take to persuade United Kingdom pharmaceutical companies to continue research projects in the 10 therapeutic categories covered by the proposed new limited list regulations; and whether such intentions would be incorporated into a revised pharmaceutical price regulation scheme.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department does not collate information from the pharmaceutical industry on current research projects, and has no plans to do so. It is for the companies concerned to determine their research and development priorities within the framework provided by the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme.

Stallington Hospital

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will establish an inquiry, following the North Staffordshire district health authority's report into Stallington hospital, into whether all similar hospitals are currently adequately staffed and resourced; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The National Health Service Management Executive issued health service guidance (HSG(92)42), on health services for people with learning disabilities, on 26 October 1992. A copy is available in the Library. Staffing levels in individual hospitals are a matter for local decision.

Paediatric Nurses

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many paediatric community nurses were employed by the national health service in each year since 1985.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally. The Royal College of Nursing publishes a directory of paediatric community nursing services which has been place in the Library.

Day Care

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those health authorities and national health service trusts which provide separate day care facilities for children from those provided for adults.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not held centrally.

Children

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those health authorities and national health service trusts which provide access and facilities for sick children with disabilities.

Mr. Yeo: Advice on the requirement for national health service facilities to be accessible to the disabled and the means by which access can be provided is included in all relevant policy and building design guidance issued by the Department. We are generally satisfied with compliance with these regulations, but ease of access will vary across buildings of different age and configuration.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list those health authorities and national health service trusts which provide play therapists for children.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not collected centrally.

Prison Mother and Baby Units

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to publish the report on mother and baby units in British prisons by the social services inspectorate.

Mr. Yeo: A report on the first inspection of the three mother and baby units in British prisons, carried out at the request of the Home Secretary by the social services inspectorate with medical and nursing advisers, was published in March 1992. Copies are available in the Library. A report on the second inspection, carried out in November 1992, will be published in the spring and placed in the Library.

Young Offenders

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the capital cost per place of the most recently constructed secure unit for young offenders; and what is (a) the average cost, (b) the highest cost and (c) the lowest weekly cost of placement in such a unit.

Mr. Yeo: Secure units accommodate any category of child looked after by a local authority meeting the statutory criteria for restriction of liberty, including offenders. The average capital cost per place of the two secure units opening earlier this year was £192,720.

Information about revenue costs in the form requested is not collected centrally.

Nutrition Task Force

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the nutrition task force will include a practising nutritional therapist among is members.

Mr. Sackville: No. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced the membership of the nutrition task force on 7 December.

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations the nutrition task force will have with professional organisations; and whether she expects those consultations to include meetings with the Society for the Promotion of Nutritional Therapy.

Mr. Sackville: The task force will determine its own methods of working at its first meeting on 16 December.

Hospital Staff

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the numbers of whole-time equivalent hospital staff in post in England on 30 September 1991 and 30 September 1992, subdivided by grade and sex.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 8 December 1992]: The figures for the 30 September 1992 are not yet available. The required figures for 30 September 1991 are given in the table. It is not possible for non-nursing staff to code whether they work within a hospital. The figures exclude those for medical and dental staff which are not yet available. It is not possible to give non-direct care staff figures split by grade, as these are no longer collected centrally.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

United Kingdom Goods (Purchasing Policy)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidance he gives to local authorities and other Government agencies about the advantages of buying goods manufactured in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department gives no such guidance.

Nuclear Industry

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library a copy of the full text of the EC decision of March 1990 relating to state subsidy of the nuclear industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: It has been the policy of successive Governments to treat correspondence with the European Commission as confidential.

Electricity

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will estimate the shares of electricity generated by National Power, PowerGen, nuclear power and by others.

Mr. Eggar: According to their respective annual reports for 1991-92, National Power accounts for a 43·6 per cent. share of electricity generated in England and Wales, PowerGen 28 per cent., and Nuclear Electric 18·5 per cent. Others would, therefore, account for 9·9 per cent.

European Structural Fund

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) which county councils and Scottish regional councils have made submissions seeking inclusion of parts of their area as eligible for support under objective 5(b) of the European structural fund;

(2) if he will place in the Library a map showing the parishes or wards covered by the submissions of local authorities in respect of areas for inclusion as being eligible for support under objective 5(b) of the European structural fund.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department has been approached by a number of bodies and individuals, including some county councils and Scottish regional councils, on the question of possible future eligibility under objective 5(b) of the EC structural funds.

Regional Assistance

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 27 November, Official Report, column 900, if he will give the total amount spent by his Department on (a) regional selective assistance and (b) regional enterprise grants for 1991-92 and the amount intended to be spent in 1992-93.

Mr. Sainsbury: In 1991-92 my Department spent £74,280,000 on regional selective assistance project grants and £7,278,000 on regional enterprise grants.

The amounts intended to be spent in 1992-93 are included in the 1992-93 supply estimates. For regional selective assistance project grants £98,900,000 was allocated, while for regional enterprise grants the amount was £7,760,000.

Israel

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with the European Commission on a draft competition directive covering the boycotts relating to trade with Israel.

Mr. Needham: None. No such directive is under consideration.

Japanese-owned companies

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the number of people employed in Japanese-owned manufacturing industry within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Needham: From information available to my Department, based on estimates given by companies at the time of announcing investments, it is estimated that some 50,000 direct jobs have been created by Japanese manufacturing investment in the United Kingdom.

Nuclear Reprocessing

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to require the chairman of British Nuclear Fuels plc to publish in full the contracts signed with Japanese Electrical Utilities to reprocess spent nuclear fuel at Sellafield (a) for magnox fuel and (b) for thermal oxide fuel.

Mr. Eggar: No. Details of reprocessing contracts are a commercial matter for the parties concerned.

Car Imports

Mr. Hague: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on whether the restrictions on the import of cars from Japan will be maintained in 1993.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government have decided that the United Kingdom will remain a restricted market in 1993 and 1994 for the purposes of implementing the agreement entitled the "Elements of Consensus" concluded last year between the European Community and Japan covering imports of cars after 1992. The position of the United Kingdom during the remainder of the period covered by the agreement up to the end of 1999 will be determined in the light of the circumstances at the time. I have placed a copy of the elements of consensus in the House of Commons Library.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he received the document "Plutonium: Deadly Gold of the Nuclear Age", released in December, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Department of Trade and Industry has no record of having received a copy of "Plutonium: Deadly Gold of the Nuclear Age".

Coal Mining

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to prevent large-scale voluntary redundancies at British Coal collieries pre-empting the outcome of his energy review; what discussions officials of his Department have had with British Coal about these matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: British Coal is continuing its normal voluntary redundancy policy. This is an important element in its drive to reduce unit costs and improve the industry's competitiveness and does not pre-empt the outcome of the review.

Oil and Gas Exploration

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to require the environmental implications of oil and gas exploration and production to be fully assessed before further exploration is allowed in United Kingdom coastal waters.

Mr. Eggar: It is our general and established policy, before offering blocks for licence in any part of the United Kingdom continental shelf, to consult relevant statutory and non-statutory bodies in advance of any announcement and to attach licence conditions agreed with such bodies which reflect each block's sensitivities. In the course of this consultation, the environmental implications of oil and gas licensing are assessed on a block-by-block basis.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what environmental criteria are used in deciding the number, identity and distribution of blocks to be offered in the offshore oil and gas production licensing rounds.

Mr. Eggar: The number, identity and distribution of blocks to be offered for licence are decided after consultation with a range of statutory and non-statutory bodies. The environmental implications of licensing are assessed on a block-by-block basis, principally by the Department of the Environment, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Joint Nature Conservation Committee. Their criteria include a range of environmental indicators, including the presence of significant numbers of seabirds, fish and other sea creatures, either seasonally or throughout the year. On the basis of this advice, licence conditions may be attached to individual blocks. In some cases, environmentally highly sensitive blocks may be withdrawn at the consultation stage. In the present, 14th offshore licensing round, as a result of the consultation process, about 30 blocks nominated by oil companies and located in environmentally highly sensitive areas were not offered for licensing.

Nuclear Energy

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how the decommissioning of nuclear-energy producing plants will be funded.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for the operator of the plant in question.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the annual profits and deficits for the British nuclear-generating industry for the last five years.

Mr. Eggar: Nuclear Electric plc, which is the only commercial nuclear generating company in England and Wales, has separately accounted for its operations only since 1989-80. Its annual report and accounts for the years since and including 1989-90 are available in the Library of the House of Commons. The same is true in Scotland of Scottish Nuclear Limited. Responsibility for that company rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Magnox Reactors

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what levels of public expenditure will be required to sustain safety levels throughout the remaining life span of the Magnox reactors.

Mr. Eggar: The continued safe operation of the Magnox stations is the responsibility of Nuclear Electric plc. The company must pay full regard in safety matters to the requirements of the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate. The cost of operating the stations is a commercial matter for Nuclear Electric.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what subsidy is received by Nuclear Electric for the decommissioning of old and potentially unsafe nuclear power stations.

Mr. Eggar: Nuclear Electric plc receives income from electricity sales and a premium financed by the fossil fuel levy paid by electricity consumers. From this income Nuclear Electric will meet its liabilities as they fall due, including those relating to the decommissioning of its stations. The continuing operation of these stations and their eventual decommissioning must meet the stringent safety requirements of the nuclear installations inspectorate.

Newspaper Recycling

Sir John Stanley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made with his proposed offer of financial support for investment in newspaper recycling at Aylesford, Kent.

Mr. Heseltine: Our proposal is to offer a £20 million grant under the assistance for exceptional projects facility to encourage the Swedish paper-making company SCA to invest in a newspaper recycling plant. We decided to offer this assistance because of the very significant environmental benefits which the project will provide. The plant would consume over 400,000 tonnes of newspapers and magazines, making a sizeable contribution to the Government's target to recycle 25 per cent. of household waste by the year 2000.

Our proposed grant needed the approval of the European Commission. After our discussions with the Commission, it has today announced that it can see no objection to our proposed offer. I and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment are delighted to have secured this result. The project is an important environmental project which we very much want to see happen.

The way is now clear for me to seek the authority of the House for the assistance I propose. I will lay before the House a resolution under section 8 (8) of the Industrial Development Act 1982 at the earliest opportunity. I shall then give full details about the project and the benefits it will bring.

Sizewell B

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what expenditure is required to construct the Sizewell B nuclear plant.

Mr. Eggar: The estimated cost to completion of the Sizewell B project is £2,030 million of which, at 30 September 1992, £1,725 million has been committed and £1,548 million spent—all figures are in April 1987 prices. Nuclear Electric plc remains on target to complete the project ahead of time and within budget.

Mr. Peter Butler: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the purpose of the pre-OSART mission to the Sizewell B power station undertaken by a team from the International Atomic Energy Agency in late October and early November; and what were the findings of the mission.

Mr. Heseltine: The IAEA mission, which was invited by Her Majesty's Government at the suggestion of Nuclear Electric, the operators of Sizewell B, reviewed the arrangements for operational safety at the plant. A team of experts from seven countries and from the IAEA, together with observers from a further three countries, looked in depth at nine areas relevant to operational safety.

An official IAEA report will be submitted to Her Majesty's Government in due course. However, in a press statement issued following the mission, the IAEA team leaders stated that the mission had concluded that "Sizewell B is a well-managed nuclear plant".

The mission also identified

"a number of commendable features in the programme of the power plant".

Some areas were also identified where the team made suggestions for further enhancement of existing good performance.

The IAEA's recommendations and suggestions have been welcomed by the station's management who regard them as opportunities for yet further improvement in the station's operational safety performance.

Copies of the IAEA's and Nuclear Electric's press notices have been placed in the Library of the House.

Matrix Churchill

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information he had, at the time of signing public interest immunity certificates on the Matrix Churchill case, on work undertaken on behalf of Her Majesty's Government by defendants on the case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 26 November 1992]: I have nothing to add to my responses to the hon. and learned Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) during the debate on 23 November, at column 649. The Scott inquiry has specifically been asked to look at decisions taken by those signing public interest immunity certificates.

Correspondence

Mr. Sproat: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the average time taken by the Ministers in his Department, including himself, to answer letters from hon. Members, in each of the first three quarters of 1992, measuring the time from the receipt of the letter to the dispatch of the substantive reply.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 1 December 1992]: Figures from my Department will be published in the Official Report, and be made available to the House Libraries, early next year, showing the volume of ministerial correspondence from hon. Members and members of the public in 1992, the targets set for reply and the percentage of replies sent within target.

Private Detectives

Mr. Denham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the purposes for which private detective agencies are engaged by his Department, the procedures used to authorise such engagements, and the expenditure on the engagement of private detective agencies in each of the last two years.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 14 December 1992]: The information can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Bardsey Island (Exploration)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what environmental impact assessment will be required before any further oil or gas exploration, appraisal or production takes place in block 107/1 off Bardsey Island; and if it will be made publicly available;

(2) if he required a full environmental impact assessment to be conducted before exploratory drilling for oil and gas was allowed off Bardsey Island; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what monitoring his Department is conducting to determine the environmental impact of the oil and gas exploratory drilling operation off Bardsey Island, Wales;

(4) what advice was received by his Department from the Nature Conservancy Council concerning the proposed licensing of blocks 107/1 and 107/6 off Bardsey Island, Wales during the 12th round of oil and gas production licensing.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 15 December 1992]: Licences awarded in offshore licensing rounds allow the licensee to conduct seismic survey work in the licence area. Further approvals are required before the licensee may drill in the area on either an exploration or an appraisal basis. There is no statutory requirement for an environmental impact assessment—EIA—to be conducted prior to exploration or appraisal drilling, but additional approvals and an EIA are required before a licensee may develop a viable find for commercial production. EIAs will be made publicly available.

In considering whether to offer blocks 107/1 and 107/6, off Bardsey Island, the then Department of Energy took full account of the concerns of the Nature Conservancy Council—NCC—regarding the ecological status of the area. On balance, the evidence did not justify its total exclusion from hydrocarbons exploration, but it was agreed that the blocks should be offered subject to special conditions attached to each licence. The Department of Energy accepted all the special conditions proposed by the NCC and attached these to the licences.

The licensees have observed these conditions. In addition, although no formal EIA was required before exploratory drilling was allowed off Bardsey Island, they commissioned and published an independent appraisal of the area. In consultation with local environmental advisers, such as the Countryside Council for Wales, they have also commissioned independent monitoring of the environmental impact of the well currently being drilled in block 107/01.

Sellafield

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what provisions are being considered to ensure that any workers laid off as a result of delays in the start-up of operations in the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield are assisted by local initiatives for retraining or redeployment.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

Cumbria training and enterprise council and the local Employment Service deliver a range of employment, enterprise and training measures, to help any person who becomes unemployed at the Sellafield plant.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Court Lists

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement of progress in the establishment of an electronic list distribution system to reduce delay in bringing cases to the courts.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Over a number of years, the Lord Chancellor's Department has participated in several initiatives to test the feasibility of distributing the Crown court lists electronically. Recent experiments have aimed at establishing the technical effectiveness of such a system, whether it could meet users' needs and whether there would be widespread demand.

At present the lists are being transmitted from the Central Criminal Court to a number of barristers' chambers via the legal information exchange system. Plans are in hand to extend this experimental system during 1993.

Defamation

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether he has considered the recommendations made by the Supreme Court Procedure Committee about practice and procedure in defamation.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether he has considered the recommendations made by the Supreme Court Procedure Committee about practice and procedure in defamation.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In February 1990 the Lord Chancellor invited the Supreme Court Procedure Committee to examine the rules that relate to pleadings in actions for libel or slander with a view to recommending such changes as might appear desirable in the interests of reducing the complexity of the procedure without having an adverse effect on the interests of justice. The committee accepted my invitation to set up a working group under the chairmanship of Lord Justice Neill to undertake this task. In July 1991 Lord Justice Neill presented the committee's report to me. The recommendations made by the committee have been of great assistance to me in considering reforms to this branch of the law. I should like to pay tribute to Lord Justice Neill and the other members of the working group for all their hard work in producing the report. The report contains a number of recommendations, including that:

(i) there should be a new procedure for an offer of amends defence with damages to be fixed by a judge;
(ii) judges should be empowered to rule as to whether words complained of are capable of bearing a particular meaning;
(iii) the rule in Scott v. Sampson, which prevents the defendant from proving specific discreditable acts in mitigation of damages should be abolished;
(iv) in the case of a foreign publication a plaintiff should be required to prove the relevant foreign law;
(v) generally, the limitation period should be reduced to one year; and
(vi) protection to media reports afforded by section 7 of the 1952 Act should be extended to similar reports from abroad.

I have considered these recommendations very carefully and I have decided to accept them.

The new "offer of amends" defence to defamation claims will enable a defendant to curtail proceedings, by making an offer, where he recognises that the plaintiff has been defamed and is willing to pay damages assessed by the judge.

I have also considered proposals which have been made by Lord Justice Hoffmann and others, for a new summary procedure which would enable the plaintiff to claim damages up to a fixed ceiling. Although the working group did not recommend that these proposals should be adopted, I believe that they would also provide valuable assistance to parties seeking speedy and economic disposal of defamation claims and I have therefore decided to accept them. The offer of amends defence will provide a benefit to defendants in particular, while the summary procedure would offer a counter-balancing benefit to plaintiffs. Implementation of some of these changes may be achieved by amending rules of court. I will invite the Supreme Court Rule Committee to proceed accordingly. Others, however, will require primary legislation, which will be introduced as soon as a suitable opportunity occurs.

Court Fees

Ms. Walley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what representations he has received concerning the proposed increase in court fees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The County Court Fees (Amendment) Order 1992, which revised the fees payable in the county court, came into force on 30 November 1992 in respect of general proceedings and, with effect from 1 April 1993, introduces a fee for proceedings under the Road Traffic Act 1991. There are no plans for immediate increases in other court fees. Representations on the revised county court fees have been received from eight hon. Members, the County Court Users Association and two firms of solicitors.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sheep Dips

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the names and numbers, if appropriate, of sheep dips which the veterinary medicines directorate has ordered to be withdrawn with effect from March 1993; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for this withdrawal.

Mr. Soames: The veterinary medicines directorate has not ordered the withdrawal of any sheep dip products. As part of the review of long-standing licensed sheep dips which is currently under way, companies have been asked to provide additional data on product ingredients. For the dips which contain phenols, a commercial decision not to provide the required data has apparently been taken on cost grounds. We understand that such products are therefore being reformulated so as to exclude phenols, or are being withdrawn from the market.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has yet received the report of the veterinary medicines directorate on organophosphorus sheep dips; when he will publish it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the final advice expected from the independent Veterinary Products Committee following its review of licensed sheep dip products. The companies concerned have been asked to progress the additional work requested by the committee as quickly as possible. However the review will not be complete before mid-1993 at the earliest. The findings will be published in summary form.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research has been carried out into alternative and less expensive forms of animal testing for tuberculosis; and with what result.

Mr. Soames: Alternative forms of testing for tuberculosis in cattle and deer are undergoing assessment at the Central Veterinary Laboratory, but are not yet sufficiently developed to warrant field trials. Field trials are continuing to assess the effectiveness of the live test to diagnose tuberculosis in living badgers.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the annual cost of the testing of cattle for tuberculosis.

Mr. Soames: The cost of testing cattle in Great Britain for tuberculosis in the year 1 April 1991 to 31 March 1922 was £7·2 million.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what success the Department has had in its programme for the eradication of tuberculosis in cattle.

Mr. Soames: The Department has an extremely successful record in dealing with tuberculosis in cattle. It was estimated that in 1937 at least 40 per cent. of dairy herds in this country were infected with the disease: in 1991, new cases of tuberculosis were confirmed in only 0·115 per cent. of cattle herds in Great Britain.

Dioxin, Derbyshire

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further information he has relating to the incident involving dioxin in Derbyshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I am very pleased to announce that it is now possible to lift the order under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 placed in March on a farm near Bolsover restricting its agricultural activities because of the presence of unacceptable concentrations of dioxins in milk and meat. Since this problem first became apparent in early 1991, my Department has undertaken extensive studies to investigate the extent and nature of the problem. The Department has already published two major reports giving the details of its investigations and I am pleased to announce that a further report is published today. The results in this latest report show that dioxin concentrations in meat from animals on this farm and milk from two dairy farms nearby have fallen significantly to levels which mean that these foods from the farms are safe to consume.

This announcement is possible following a full assessment of the results and I am placing a report in the Library of the House. The key findings in the report are:

- the dioxins concentrations in the milk samples obtained in August and October from the two dairy farms are below the Maximum Tolerable Concentration previously set by the Ministry and Department of Health;
- the dioxin concentrations in both muscle and liver for animals on the farm on which the FEPA Order had been placed have fallen significantly to levels similar to those found in animals from other farmers;
- the dioxins in soil samples from the farm show little change but concentrations in the herbage have fallen considerably.

These results are very encouraging, but my Department will continue to carry out some monitoring in the area to ensure that there is no recurrence of the problem. This incident also demonstrates the ability of the food surveillance programme undertaken by my Department to identify problems of chemical contamination of the food supply and our determination to ensure the fullest possible protection of the public.

At the same time, I pay tribute to the farmers whose livelihood and peace of mind have been greatly disturbed by this incident. I am very grateful for the co-operation that they have shown my Department throughout what has been a very difficult period for them.

Dietary Supplements

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the prevalence of unsubstantiated claims of health benefits made in the United Kingdom about specific vitamin, mineral and other dietary supplements, and which were not covered by existing legislation.

Mr. Soames: The Food Advisory Committee examined these issues in its recent review of food labelling and advertising and made recommendations for some tightening of controls on the claims which may be made for foods, including food supplements. My right hon. Friend is, however, expecting proposals from the European Commission shortly which will include controls on claims made on food labels, and we need to await those before deciding the way forward.

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has personally had with Ministers in other European Governments in an effort to enlist their support for his policy on the continuing availability of vitamin, mineral and other dietary supplements.

Mr. Soames: My judgment is that the personal intervention of a United Kingdom Minister would be premature at this stage. Officials have established the broad views of other member states in discussion in Brussels and will seek to persuade others of the merits of the United Kingdom view as negotiations proceed.

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he is expecting to receive from the European Commission a draft of the forthcoming directive on dietary supplements.

Mr. Soames: The timing of proposals is a matter for the Commission, but I have no information to suggest that any proposal on this subject is imminent.

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on which companies currently market in the United Kingdom vitamin, mineral and other dietary supplements in such high concentrations that they might reasonably be considered to be potentially hazardous; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The question of potentially toxic doses of vitamins and minerals is a complex scientific issue which is currently being reviewed by the European Commission's scientific committee for food. At present dietary supplements must comply with food safety requirements set out in our food legislation which also enables us to take action to prevent unsafe products being sold.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his proposals for HLCA payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I refer to the reply given to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) on 10 December, Official Report, column 757.

Farm Animals, Spain

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements he proposes to make for export of farm animals to Spain.

Mr. Gummer: As announced in the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Mr. Bowden) on 10 December, at columns 762-63, new arrangements for safeguarding the welfare of animals in transport will apply in 1993. In accordance with Community law, there will be veterinary inspection of animals for export at the start of the journey.

Under the current arrangements, licences for export of animals for rearing or slaughter in Spain have been withheld because of doubts about compliance with Community welfare legislation in that country. The licensing system will no longer apply from January 1993, but these controls will be replaced by specific safeguards for ensuring that animals exported for slaughter in Spain are slaughtered in accordance with Community welfare legislation. Under these arrangements, any animals from the United Kingdom for immediate slaughter in Spain will only be sent to slaughterhouses that have been confirmed by the Spanish authorities as meeting Community welfare requirements. These arrangements are the subject of a formal agreement between the United Kingdom and Spanish authorities and will be kept under careful review.

Beef Special Premium

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, if he will apply the 90-head limit on the beef special premiums per age group of animals, and not on a per farm basis.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to the answer, 18 June 1992, c. 626]: For the beef special premium, the most significant change in Great Britain is that the new scheme will be introduced on-farm from March 1993. This will give British beef producers the maximum possible flexibility to take advantage of the new, higher rate of premium. This can now be granted up to twice in the life of each animal: the first premium between the ages of 10 and 22 months and the second premium once it has reached 23 months. The headage limit of 90 animals per producer per year will apply separately to claims for first and second premium. Claims will also be limited by stocking density and by a regional ceiling. The exact rate of premium for the 1993 scheme year will depend on the green rate on 1 January 1993, but if currencies were aligned today the premium would be worth about £56·87.

There will be tough anti-fraud measures to ensure that we can identify eligible animals. Details will be announced early in the new year.

The current arrangements for claiming premium at slaughter and at live markets will continue broadly as they are at present until 31 March 1993.

The EC rules for the new scheme do not allow payments of premium to be made before 1 November in the year of claim, when they provide for payment of an advance of 60 per cent. of the combined value of first and second premium claims. The balance will be paid before 30 June of the following year. These arrangements will apply to claims at slaughter until 31 March 1993 as well as to claims under the new on-farm scheme.

Producers claiming premium at slaughter will be entitled to one premium claim only on each animal and this will count against the 90-head limit on claims for the first premium. Claims at slaughter until 31 March 1993 will also count towards producers' stocking density for 1993 and towards the regional ceiling.

The new suckler cow premium scheme will be largely unchanged. The three main changes are the introduction of individual quotas; stocking density limits on producers' claims; and new arrangements for the timing of payment, which will be the same as for the beef special premium scheme. The EC rules allow some flexibility in fixing the application period and this will be announced later. The exact rate of premium for the 1993 scheme year will depend on the green rate on 1 January 1993, but if currencies were aligned today the premium would be worth about £66·35.

EMPLOYMENT

Distributive Industries Training Trust

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what sums have been paid out in the form of grants by the Distributive Industries Training Trust in each year since its inception; and to what organisations these were paid.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Employment Department has no supervisory responsibilities for the Distributive Industries Training Trust. Inquiries about the payment of grants should be directed to the managing trustees.

Earnings

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will publish a table giving the proportions of full-time male manual workers, full-time male non-manual workers and all full-time male workers with earnings excluding overtime of less than (a) £190 per week and (b) £200 per week in (i) west midlands region, (ii) west midlands metropolitan county, (iii) Hereford and Worcester, (iv) Shropshire, (v) Staffordshire and (vi) Warwickshire for 1992.

Construction Site Injuries

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful prosecutions took place in each of the last five years as a result of investigations into deaths and major injuries on construction sites in the north-west.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many investigations were undertaken into deaths and major injuries on construction sites in the north-west in each of the last five years by (a) the Health and Safety Executive and (b) the police.

Mr. McLoughlin: The available information for the Health and Safety Executive's north-west region is provided in the following table.

Number of accidents, incidents and dangerous occurrences on construction sites which were investigated by HSE inspectors in the north west region (a) 1987-88—1991-92[1] (b)

Training

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make public the monthly reports of supply and demand of youth training places in each training and enterprise council area which she announced she was to receive in her press release of 7 July.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has already announced the estimated numbers of young people seeking training at the national level in a reply to my hon. Friend, the Member for Gedling (Mr. Mitchell) on 1 December 1992, Official Report, columns 127-28. Figures for the supply of places are not available. Estimates of demand for places at local level vary in precision and reliability. Changes are being introduced to improve the information we receive and my right hon. Friend will be considering what further information to make available in the light of advice on the reliability of disaggregated statistics.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many 16 and 17-year-olds in Lancashire are currently awaiting a youth training place.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced the estimated numbers of young people seeking training at national level in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member of Gedling (Mr. Mitchell) on 1 December 1992, Official Report, columns 127-28. Estimates of demand for places at local level vary in precision and reliability. Changes are being introduced to improve the information my right hon. Friend receives. In November, TECs' planned provision for training exceeded the number of guarantee young people seeking training by about 7,000.

Unemployment

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list in rank order the travel-to-work areas in the south-east region which have consistently recorded an unemployment rate above the national average for the previous 12 months.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list for each European Community country (a) the numbers of people unemployed for the latest month for which comparable figures are available and (b) the percentage of the work force which this represents.

Mr. McLoughlin: Comparable estimates on the numbers of people unemployed in European Community countries are not available on a monthly basis.

The following table provides the extent of the readily available information on rates.

Comparable seasonally adjusted unemployment rates in EC countries (OECD standardised rates)[1]

Country	Unemployment rate	Month
Spain	17·5	May
Ireland	16·6	November
France	10·3	September
United Kingdom	10·2	October
Italy	9·9	July
Denmark[1]	9·6	October
Belgium	8·1	October
Greece[3]	7·0	1990
Netherlands	6·8	September
Germany[2]	4·7	September
Portugal	4·1	August
Luxembourg[1]	2·0	October

[1] For those countries for which no OECD standardised rates are available, similar harmonised rates compiled by the Statistical Office of the European Communities (EUROSTAT).

[2] There are no reliable figures available as yet for a unified Germany. The rate quoted is for what was formerly West Germany.

[3] There are no recent comparable monthly figures available for Greece. The figure quoted is for the spring of 1990.

Enterprise Allowances

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of enterprise allowances (a) started, (b) completed, (c) carried through to start-up and (d) surviving more than 12 months after start-up in England and Wales in 1990-91 and 1991-92; and what is the equivalent information for the northern region and the Tyneside training and enterprise council.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of enterprise allowances —renamed business start-up allowances from 1991-92— started is set out in the table. The number of those carried through to start-up is not an applicable measure, as allowances are awarded on start-up. The number of completions and those surviving more than 12 months is not available.

Enterprise/business start-up allowances awarded

	1990-91	1991-92
England and Wales	54,400	45,500
Northern region	3,600	2,800
Tyneside TEC	1,215	641

Building Industry

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the companies prosecuted since 1987 in the building and construction industry under health and safety legislation, where injuries or fatalities have resulted, by the size of the companies in terms of the number of employees employed in the building and construction industry.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps are being taken by the Government to reduce the number of deaths at the workplace in the building and construction industry.

Mr. McLoughlin: Prime responsibility for health and safety at workplaces, including those in the building and construction industry, rests with employers and others on site.

The Government and the Health and Safety Commission—HSC—recognise the need to promote long lasting changes in the construction industry. Indeed, the HSC was preparing proposals to improve the management of health and safety in the industry well before the European Commission began to develop its temporary or mobile construction sites directive. Following adoption of this directive in June of this year, the HSC published a major consultative document on proposed new Construction (Design and Management) Regulations and an approved code of practice, a copy of which is in the Library. The proposals affect everyone who can contribute to the improvement of health and safety standards on site and their coming into force at the end of next year should reduce significantly the numbers of deaths and injuries at the workplace in the industry.

The Construction (Head Protection) Regulations 1990 which require the wearing of suitable head protection at construction activities came into force on 30 March 1990 and have already resulted in a significant reduction in head injuries.

Health and Safety Executive inspectors continue to make visits to construction activities for a variety of purposes, including preventive inspection and the investigation of accidents, and take whatever action is necessary to ensure compliance with the relevant health and safety legislation. There is a programme of initiatives, most recently including the roofwork campaign.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the number of prosecutions undertaken for breaches of the health and safety legislation in the building and construction industry for each year since 1970.

Mr. McLoughlin: The available information is provided in the following table. Analysis of prosecution action taken, by industrial sector, is not available for years prior to 1981.

Prosecution action taken by HSE's factory and agricultural inspectorates for all breaches of health and safety legislation occurring in the construction industry, 1981 to 1991-92[4]

[3] Informations laid relate to single breaches of Health and Safety legislation.

[4] Provisional.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many workers in the building and construction industry have died while in the workplace (a) in 1987-88 and (b) 1991-92.

Mr. McLoughlin: The statistics requested are provided in the table.

Number of fatalities occurring within the construction industry[1] during the years 1987-88 and 1991-92[3] as reported to enforcement authorities[2]

	1987-88	1991-92[3]

Health and Safety

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the companies which have been prosecuted for breach of health and safety regulations since 1987 distinguishing those in which fatalities have resulted, and those in which injuries have occurred.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is not available in the form requested. However, between 1987-88 and 1991-92[1] 12,037 information were laid by the Health and Safety Executive for breaches of health and safety regulations, with a further 2,814 laid by local authorities between 1987-88 and 1990-91; figures for 1991-92 not yet available.

[1] Provisional.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which leaflets published by the Health and Safety Executive are available in languages other than English; and if she will list the languages in which they are available.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 places the responsibility for the provision of necessary information to employees upon employers. This reflects the need for information to relate to the work in hand and the practical difficulty of providing information about hazard in the numerous minority languages spoken in the workplace.

The Health and Safety Executive has recently published a booklet "Health and Safety in Great Britain"; it is available free in all European Community Languages. A Welsh language version of the poster "Health and Safety Law—What you should know" is available in Welsh and three leaflets in the agricultural series have also been produced in Welsh. The HSE has undertaken to produce its booklet "HSE and you", which is addressed to the citizen, in a number of minority languages.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations she has received from British Sikhs concerning possible exemptions to headgear regulations under the Personal Protective Equipment at Work Regulations; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received a number of representations from Sikh organisations and others on this issue, to which she and Ministers of this Department have responded individually.

Postal Ballots (Funding)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when she consulted trades unions about her proposal to end funding of postal ballots and to drop funding of training through the Trades Union Congress.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Trade unions have been given as much notice as possible of the decision to end public subsidy of trade union ballots and training of officials, and the grants are being phased out gradually to allow the trade unions time to adjust and plan accordingly. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State wrote to the general secretary of the TUC to inform him of the decision on 10 December and met him and other representatives of the TUC on 14 December to listen to their views on this matter.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when she decided to end funding for trade union ballots and training; and how much expenditure she expects to save.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The final decision to end public subsidy for trade union ballots and the training of officials was taken after this year's Autumn Statement. Expenditure for the two schemes together will amount to some £5·6 million in 1992-93. Full savings will not be made immediately, as the schemes in question are being phased out over three years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what the cost has been each year to public funds of trade union ballots and of trade union training.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is set out in the table.

Cost to Public Funds of Trade Union ballots and of Trade Union Training

[1] (anticipated).

Notes:
1. All figures rounded to nearest £1,000.
2. The Trade Union Education and Training grant was funded jointly by Department of Employment and Department of Education and Science (DES) until, and including, 1987-88. Figures quoted for the relevant years cover total Government expenditure.
3. All details of Department of Employment payments were taken from the Department's Appropriation Account for the relevant year. Details of DES TUET expenditure were provided by the DES.
4. TUET payments began in 1976-77, and TUBFS payments in 1981-82.

Pit Closures

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is her estimate of the national multiplier effect on (a) industry related and (b) service sector jobs, per redundant miner, as a consequence of the pit closure programme.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department's views on the effects of the possible pit closures on employment levels in other occupations are set out in a memorandum for the Employment Select Committee which has been placed in the Library.

Home Workers

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) when she proposes to publish leaflets containing advice and guidance for home workers; and in what languages she intends to publish them;

(2) when she intends to publish advice and guidance for employers of home workers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Advice to home workers and their employers is given in the Department of Employment booklet "Be Flexible—A Guide to Flexible Working", which was published in March 1992. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to issue versions in other languages.

Scottish Projects

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, further to her answer of 8 December, Official Report, columns 619-20, if she will list the successful Scottish projects, including the one in Strathclyde which was awarded the sum of £142,336.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The projects which were successful in Scotland under the NOW initiative are as follows:

COTHROM
"COTHROM"
Save the Children Fund
"The Gate Programme"
Stirling Womens Technology Centre
"Telematics and Telecommunications"
Central Regional Council
"The Power Project"
Telford College
"Women in Construction"
Jewel/Esk Valley College

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Debt Reduction

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish for 1989, 1990 and 1991 a breakdown of the write-offs and debt reduction instruments given in note 2 of "British Aid Statistics 1987-88 to 1991-92", identifying each element separately and including (a) debt write-off, (b) debt rescheduling and (c) bank reserves held as provision against bad debts.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The requested breakdown of the figures in note 2 of "British Aid Statistics" is:

Write-offs	1,280	2,650	230
Debt reduction instruments	—	2,930	850
Write-offs and debt reduction instruments	1,280	5,580	1,080

Debt rescheduling does not affect the net banking flows, as no net repayment is involved.

Bank reserves held as provision against bad debts also do not affect the net banking flows, as loans are reported gross of such provisions.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the amount of food aid currently available to feed the people of Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The main problem in Somalia is not the amount of food aid potentially available for famine relief, but the difficulty of delivering this food to starving people in the midst of continuing war and civil conflict. It was in explicit recognition of this problem that the United Nations decided recently to dispatch troops to Somalia to help with the humanitarian relief operation. Food aid is now being released from Mogadishu for distribution under the protection of United States troops. Food aid commitments to Somalia since January 1992 total some 500,000 tonnes, of which nearly 60 per cent. has been already delivered. A further 20 per cent. is en route to Somalia to be delivered as soon as the right conditions for distribution prevail.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the effectiveness and efficiency of the European Community and British food aid effort in Somalia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Continuing security problems have hampered the effectiveness and efficiency of all donor activities in Somalia. The recent deployment of United Nations troops in Somalia is accelerating delivery of humanitarian relief, hitherto blocked by the actions of local warring factions, including food aid funded under British and European Community programmes.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 9 December, Official Report, column 675, what representatives he has sent to regions other than the south and centre of Somalia in order to assess the current needs within the situation of relative stability and to prepare proposals for a specific British contribution to reconstruction.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have already made it clear that we are prepared to contribute, principally through British non-governmental organisations, to reconstruction and rehabilitation work in the north of Somalia, through our humanitarian assistance programme and subject to being satisfied over the security situation. We also expect to be involved in such work in other parts of the country once conditions allow, as part of a comprehensive and integrated rehabilitation and construction plan that will need to be drawn up by the international community for a post-conflict Somalia.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 9 December, Official Report, column 675, what specific contribution Her Majesty's Government have offered to make towards the United Nations plan for rehabilitation and institution rebuilding in the north of Somalia (Republic of Somaliland).

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 15 December 1992]: The United Nations has not been able to develop its proposed strategy for rehabilitation and institution building in northern Somalia because of insecurity in the region and elsewhere in the country. We hope implementation of Security Council resolution 794 will enable it to do so. We have made it clear to United Nations agencies and NGOs operating in the north that we are ready to help.

Bosnia

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make Mr. Tim Lankester's report on Bosnia, dated 30 November, available to voluntary organisations concerned with aid to Bosnia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The report by Mr. Tim Lankester is available to any interested party from ODA's information department. It was also covered in The Independent newspaper of 11 December.

Sudan

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the amount of financial aid given to Sudan in each of the last three years; and for what assistance or projects this aid has been spent.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The table shows bilateral development and humanitarian aid to Sudan for financial years 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92. In January 1991 British bilateral development assistance to Sudan was terminated for political and economic reasons including Sudan's record on human rights. There was, however, some residual expenditure in 1991-92.

British aid to Sudan

	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
Bilateral development aid	17,768	15,962	3,038
Humanitarian assistance	7,675	8,281	14,423
Total	25,443	24,243	17,461

Development projects have been funded principally in renewable natural resources, energy, railways, and education.

Forests

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he will take to ensure that there is a reduction of deforestation in third world countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: To help forestry in developing countries we have over 200 projects either under way or in preparation at a total cost to the aid programme of about £160 million. We are also working to improve the effectiveness of the International Tropical Timber Organisation and the tropical forestry action programme in promoting the sustainable use of tropical forests, and to ensure that the statement of principles on the sustainable management of the world's forests agreed at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in Rio last June is followed up with effective action and an international review process.

Angola

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much Government aid has been given to Angola in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 15 December 1992]: Bilateral Government aid to Angola in each of the last five years was as follows:

	£ million
1987-88	0·471
1988-89	1·140
1989-90	0·731
1990-91	1·530

So far this financial year we have spent £1·075 million. Our aid is mainly in the form of English language teaching, training awards, small projects, electoral assistance and emergency relief; £0·5 million has been pledged for the repatriation of Angolan refugees.

The security situation is affecting our work. At present we have no long-term aid personnel in Angola and do not contemplate sending any, other than for relief work, until the security situation improves.

Non-governmental Organisations

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the non-governmental organisations in receipt of grants from his Department for each year since 1990; and what was the size of each grant.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [pursuant to his reply, 16 November 1992, c. 60-62]: The details of all grants to non-governmental organisations for 1991-92 are set out in the table.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Intergovernmental Agreements

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the proposal by Mr. Jacques Delors that the European Court could oversee intergovernmental agreements under the Maastricht treaty; what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to Mr. Delors on his proposal; and if he will place in the Library a copy of the relevant documents.

Mr. Goodlad: In a recent speech on the occasion of the 40th anniversary of the European Court of Justice, the President of the Commission expressed the hope that extensive recourse would be had to the possibility of conferring on the court jurisdiction regarding the interpretation and application of international conventions in the field of justice and home affairs. Article K.3(2)(c) of the treaty on European union allows such jurisdiction to be conferred on the Court in relation to a convention concluded under title VI of the treaty if the convention so stipulates.

This will, therefore, be a matter for member states to consider when negotiating any such convention. Unanimity would be needed to include such a provision. No representations have been made to the President of the Commission on this matter. A copy of the speech in question has been placed in the Library of the House.

UNESCO

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the sum total of UNESCO expenditure in the United Kingdom (a) during 1991 and (b) since 1985 to date.

Mr. Goodlad: According to UNESCO statistics, the total of the organisation's expenditure—to the nearest thousand pounds—in the United Kingdom in 1991 was £4,780,000, and from 1985 to 1991 inclusive was £30,626,000. No figures are available for 1992. They include UNESCO coupons redeemed in the United Kingdom, but not payments to United Kingdom nationals employed by UNESCO.

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what account he has taken of the report by the Secretary-General of the United Nations, "An Agenda for Peace", in considering when to put forward the United Kingdom's application to rejoin UNESCO.

Mr. Goodlad: We do not believe there is any direct link between the Secretary-General's report and our consideration of UNESCO membership. It has, therefore, not figured in our thinking on any resumption of United Kingdom membership.

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, which of the nine objections put forward in the United Kingdom's notice of withdrawal from UNESCO in 1984 by the then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs are still held by the British Government.

Mr. Goodlad: We acknowledge progress made by UNESCO towards reform. However, we believe that scope remains for further programme concentration—point (i) of the then Secretary of State's letter of 5 December 1984 to the then director-general of UNESCO.

We continue to be concerned at weaknesses in UNESCO's evaluation of programmes—point viii. Much remains to be achieved on decentralisation—point ix.

Rape

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with Governments of the Western European Union to make rape a war crime in the conventions of international law; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: No such discussions have taken place within the WEU. Under the fourth Geneva convention, women are to be especially protected against any attack on their honour, particularly against rape, enforced prostitution and indecent assault. All parties to the Geneva conventions are already under an obligation to ensure that criminal sanctions are available against those who commit grave breaches of the conventions.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussion he has had with governments of member states of the Western European Union to provide financial funding to give counselling and assistance to women and girls who have been raped in the countries of the former Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: There have been no discussions in the WEU. The European Council at Edinburgh strongly condemned the systematic detention and rape of Muslim women in the former Yugoslavia. The EC will send a mission of experts to the former Yugoslavia to investigate the allegations and to report urgently to Foreign Ministers.

Turkey

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to Turkey about the rights of minorities and people of non-Turkish origin in Turkey and about the death penalty.

Mr. Goodlad: The Government have regular contact with the Turkish Government on the subject of human rights.

The issue was most recently discussed during the visit of the Turkish Prime Minister in November. During the visit Mr. Demirel reiterated his Government's commitment to its programme of reforms which aims at improving human rights and increasing democratisation in the country.

We welcome this commitment on the part of the Turks and look forward to the early implementation of the Government's programme.

Kurdistan

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will make it their policy to recognise Kurdistan as an independent country.

Mr. Goodlad: No. The Kurdish population of the middle east is spread throughout a number of independent states whose territorial integrity we support.

Hong Kong

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards discussing the Governor of Hong Kong's proposal for the 1995 Legislative Council elections with the People's Republic of China.

Mr. Goodlad: The Government fully support the Governor's proposals. The Governor has said many times that these are proposals not firm decisions. We are ready to talk to the Chinese Government about them at any time and to discuss any alternative ideas they may have for the 1995 elections, which meet the criteria of fairness, openness and acceptability to the people of Hong Kong.

The proposals will be put to the Hong Kong Legislative Council in the form of draft legislation early next year. The council passed a motion in support of the Government's proposals last month and they have been strongly supported within the community.

EDUCATION

School Governors and Head Teachers

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will set out the respective responsibilities of school governors and head teachers.

Mr. Forth: The roles of school governors and headteachers are set out in different pieces of legislation, and brought together in detail in the articles of government of individual schools. In general terms, the conduct of the school is under the direction of the governing body while the head teacher has responsibility for the internal organisation and management of the school.

Science and Technology

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the current standard of science and technology facilities in state secondary schools.

Mr. Forth: Evidence from visits by Her Majesty's inspectorate shows that most schools have satisfactory facilities for science and technology. Where there is room for improvement, schools are being helped by the programme of grants for education support and training, which this year supported £30 million of expenditure on books and equipment.

Temporary Teachers

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will estimate the number of schools which rely on temporary appointments to maintain an adequate teaching staff.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is not available. In January 1992 19,700 full-time teachers in England were employed under temporary contracts compared with 334,300 on permanent contracts. Temporary contracts do not necessarily imply recruitment difficulties; they may be made for a variety of reasons.

Parents Charter

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish the costs to his Department of (a) publication of the appropriate ring files and subsequent updating of the national curriculum folders and (b) publishing, producing and distributing the parents charter booklet.

Mr. Forth: The total cost to the Department since 1988 of publishing and distributing ring binders containing attainment targets and programmes of study for the national curriculum is estimated at £8·77 million.

The cost of publishing, producing and distributing the parents charter—including advertising—was £1,957,500.

Examination Results

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish a list of secondary schools in Derbyshire in order of their examination results, together with the amount spent per pupil in each school.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is set out in the table.

Research Assessment

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what has been the cost to public funds of the higher education research assessment exercise.

Mr. Boswell: The Universities Funding Council has asked participating universities and colleges for estimates of the costs incurred in the 1992 research assessment exercise, which has only just been completed and is due to be published very shortly. Information on the total costs of the exercise is likely to be available early next year.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the number of employees in his Department, and their total salary costs, who are engaged in (a) liaison with the Grant Maintained Schools Centre, (b) providing information to prospective grant-maintained schools and (c) questions concerning ballots in schools seeking grant-maintained status.

Mr. Forth: Liaison with the Grant Maintained Schools Centre occupies in aggregate about one full-time equivalent—FTE—at a cost of some £20,000 this year; providing information to prospective grant-maintained schools about six FTE at a cost of some £105,000; and questions concerning ballots about five FTE at a cost of some £102,000. In addition the staff concerned are able to draw when required on the services of the Department's professional staff—including lawyers and information officers.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list those schools which on achieving grant-maintained status or since have applied to him to change their admissions policy to allow some form of selection on the basis of ability or aptitude in any part of the curriculum.

Mr. Forth: The following schools have applied for and had approved admission arrangements which involve the selection of 10 per cent. or less of pupils on the basis of their aptitude in music, sport, art or drama:

King's School, Peterborough
Westland High School, Kent
Bishop's Stortford School, Hertfordshire
Heathside School, Surrey
Langley Park School for Boys, Bromley
Beaverwood School, Bromley
Dame Alice Owen School, Hertfordshire

This list does not include those schools which have published statutory proposals for a significant change in character; none of the proposals involving selection have so far been approved.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education on how many occasions head teachers of grant-maintained schools have been paid by his Department to attend meetings at schools which were considering whether to have a ballot for grant-maintained status.

Mr. Forth: The Department does not pay head teachers of grant-maintained schools to attend meetings at prospective grant-maintained schools.

Grants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much in grant will be given by his Department in 1992-93 to (a) the Pre-school Playgroups Association, (b) the Church of England Board of Education, (c) the National Association of Governors and Managers, (d) the National Children's Bureau, (e) the Family Welfare Association, (f) the Girls' Brigade, (g) the National Association of Women's Institutes and (h) the Grant Maintained Schools Centre.

Mr. Forth: The grants to be given by the Department for Education in 1992-93 are as follows:—

Maintained Schools

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on capital allocations for local education authority maintained schools for 1993-94.

Mr. Forth: Local education authorities have today been informed of their annual capital guidelines—ACGs—for schools which will total £443·5 million in 1993-94. They have also been informed of their allocations for capital spending by the governors of voluntary aided and special agreement schools in their areas—the overall grant to be made available in 1993-94 is £131·7 million. Provision for both sectors reflects the increasing rate of transfer of local authority schools to the grant-maintained sector; and the removal of sixth form colleges from local authority control.

Annual capital guidelines do not represent the full total of funds available to local education authorities for capital expenditure. Authorities are also able to spend additional sums from capital receipts and from their revenue budgets if they so choose.

Local education authorities will be able to take advantage of the relaxation of the rules governing the permitted use of capital receipts announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor in his autumn statement. This removes for a period the requirement that 50 per cent. of such receipts should be used for debt redemption rather than capital spending.

Local education authorities have received considerable resources in the last few years for building work at schools. The substantial sum available in 1993-94, together with the new flexibility on capital receipts, should enable local education authorities to continue to make significant progress in improving the school building stock.

In distributing annual capital guidelines, I have again given priority to the second and third year expenditure on work covered by annual capital guidelines in earlier years, projects to provide new school places in areas of growing demand and cost-effective projects to remove surplus places.

I have also been able to make a substantial contribution towards work to put right deficiencies in existing school buildings and for the effective delivery of the national curriculum.

Of the total of £131·7 million grant for voluntary aided schools, £47·7 million has been set aside for repairs. The remainder—£84 million—is to be provided for capital work. Some £30 million of this will support new work to provide for new school places, cost-effective removal of surplus capacity as well as a range of improvement and replacement projects. Forty-nine major projects have been authorised to start and a further 24 to proceed to initial design work. My right hon. Friend and I look to local education authorities and school governors to ensure that this grant is fully and effectively utilised.

A total of £21 million of the total will be allocated in the form of supplementary credit approvals—SCAs—to LEAs and of grant aid for governors of voluntary aided schools for successful bids under the technology schools initiative, the results of which were announced yesterday by the Baroness Blatch.

Lists of ACGs and grant allocations to individual local authorities are as follows:

Teacher Training

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many students were recruited to courses of initial teacher training in 1992.

Mr. Patten: Overall recruitment to initial teacher training courses has increased by more than 10 per cent. for the second year in succession. A survey undertaken by my Department shows that 31,980 students entered courses of initial teacher training in 1992, an increase of 3,188 over 1991.

Intakes to secondary courses overall were 9 per cent. above the very high levels achieved last year, and recruitment in all the main shortage subjects was above the targets set by the Department. Recruitment to primary courses was 13 per cent. higher than last year and 41 per cent. above the Department's target.

I am placing in the Library the principal results of the survey.

National Curriculum Technology Order

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he will publish proposals for a new national curriculum technology order; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and for Wales are publishing tomorrow proposals for a revised technology curriculum tomorrow as the basis for extensive consultation. These are based on the recommendations for attainment targets and programmes of study incorporated in the accompanying report of the review group, led by Her Majesty's inspectorate.

As required by the Education Reform Act 1988, the Secretary of State will ask the National Curriculum Council to conduct the consultation exercise in England. All schools, education authorities, professional organisations and others will have until 31 March 1993 to submit their views and make representations to the NCC. A parallel consultation will take place in Wales. Subject to advice from the NCC and the Curriculum Council for Wales, my right hon. Friends then intend to publish a draft Order for further consultation later in 1993.

Copies of the report, the proposals and the Secretary of State's letter to the chairman of the National Curriculum Council will be placed in the Library of the House.

Girls

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what action he intends to take on the HMI report on the preparation of girls for adult and working life.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 15 December 1992]: The main findings of the report are under consideration by my right hon. Friend. No action is planned at present.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Tourism

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what measures are being taken to promote domestic tourism in England.

Mr. Key: The promotion of domestic tourism in England is undertaken by the English tourist board, ETB, which is grant-aided by my Department, and by the regional tourist boards, which receive funding from the ETB. Grant in aid to the ETB totals £15·4 million during the current financial year. Details of the boards' promotional and other activities appear in the ETB's annual report for 1991-92, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many tourists have visited Britain in each year since 1981.

Mr. Key: Information on overseas tourism in the United Kingdom is published regularly in the quarterly and annual "Business Monitors" MQ6 and MA6 "Overseas Travel and Tourism", which may be obtained from the Library of the House.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what are the 10 most popular English tourist resorts for domestic holidaymakers taking their annual holidays; and what is their average length of stay.

Mr. Key: Information is not currently available from the domestic travel surveys on the most popular tourist resorts. The United Kingdom tourism survey, sponsored by the statutory tourist boards, showed that in 1991, the average number of nights per trip in the United Kingdom was 4·2.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what five (a) European and (b) non-European countries are responsible for the highest number of tourists visiting England.

Mr. Key: The available information is shown in the table:

Number of visits to England by overseas residents in 1991

Country of residence	Visits (thousands)
(a) Top five European countries[1]
Germany	1,770
France	1,747
Netherlands	847
Italy	671
Spain	590
(b) Top five non-European countries
United States of America	2,128
Canada	468
Australia	434
Japan	430
Republic of South Africa	167

[1] Figures for visits by residents of the Irish Republic to England are not available.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the average length of stay for overseas tourists visiting England.

Mr. Key: According to the international passenger survey, the average length of stay of those overseas residents who stayed at least one night in England in 1991 was 11·1 nights.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what are the 10 most popular day trip resorts in England; and how many people visited each of them in the year 1991.

Mr. Key: The 10 most popular local authority districts in terms of day trips were:

Local Authority visited	Number of trips (millions)
Birmingham	11
Manchester	8
Blackpool	6
Bristol	5
Chester	5
East Lindsey	5
Leeds	5
West Derbyshire	5
Bradford	4
Brighton	4

Note: The table excludes Greater London, to which there were about 68 million trips.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the five overseas countries whose tourists spend the most money per individual when visiting England, with the amount listed.

Mr. Key: The information is shown in the table:

Expenditure by overseas residents who visited England in 1991
Top five countries of residence

Country of residence	Average expenditure per visit £
Kuwait	1,685
Nigeria	1,285
Saudi Arabia	1,218
Libya	1,210
Turkey	1,209

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what measures are being taken to promote England as a destination for overseas tourists.

Mr. Key: My Department funds the British Tourist Authority, which has responsibility for promoting Britain overseas. The authority undertakes, with tourist industry support, a wide range of marketing and promotional activities to attract overseas visitors to all parts of Britain. It works closely with the English regional tourist boards to encourage visitors to all parts of the country.

Tourism

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much money overseas tourism has generated for the United Kingdom economy in each year since 1981, with the figures adjusted for inflation.

Mr. Key: The available information is shown in the table:

Expenditure by overseas residents visiting the United Kingdom and estimated fares revenue from overseas visitors travelling on United Kingdom ships and aircraft, at constant 1985 prices.

National Children's Play and Recreation Unit

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the cost of the grant through the Sports Council for its National Children's Play and Recreation Unit for the financial years 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Brooke: In 1991-92, the Sports Council provided funding to the National Children's Play and Recreation Unit totalling £1,134,747. The approved budget for 1992-93 is £830,000.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what studies he has commissioned into the effectiveness of the National Children's Play and Recreation Unit.

Mr. Brooke: No such studies have been commissioned.

TRANSPORT

Rail Freight

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the value to British Rail of its freight operation in each year since 1981 with the figures adjusted for inflation.

Mr. Freeman: Information on the financial performance of British Rail's freight operation is published each year in its annual report and accounts. Copies are available from the Library.

West Coast Main Line

Mr. Marlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will give priority to upgrading of the west coast main line in his consideration of future major investment by British Rail;

(2) if he will make a statement on the criteria used for obtaining non-user benefit grants that may be available for the investment in infrastructure necessary for the upgrading of the west coast main line;

(3) if he will discuss with British Rail the necessary investment in the west coast main line being financed in partnership with the private sector.

Mr. Freeman: It is for British Rail to determine its investment priorities within available resources. I understand that it intends to commence work soon on renewing infrastructure on the west coast main line. The precise timing will be decided in the spring, when British Rail has completed its next corporate plan. A project of this size will take a number of years to complete.

Under our privatisation proposals, responsibility for railway infrastructure will pass to Railtrack, a public sector track authority. Infrastructure investment will be financed largely from charges to operators, but, as stated in the White Paper "New Opportunities For The Railways", the Government may provide direct support for investment schemes not earning an adequate financial return but which have satisfactory cost-benefit returns when wider social and economic benefits are taken into account.

Our proposals will also encourage greater private sector participation in financing railway investment, both in infrastructure and rolling stock. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the Chancellor of the Exchequer's autumn statement.

A1

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the most recent data on traffic volume and flows on sections of the A1 road north of Morpeth which have been prepared by the A1 steering group.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Traffic flows on the A1 are being continuously monitored. The annual average daily flows during 1991 which are the most recently collected figures are listed in the table.

	Number
Newcastle to Morpeth	25,000
Morpeth Bypass	15,600
Morpeth-Alnwick	11,800
Alnwick to Browniside	7,300
Browniside-Belford	7,800
Belford to Scremerston	9,300
Berwick Bypass	6,600
Berwick Bypass to National Boundary	8,200

Railway Accident (Walton-on-the-Naze)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects publication of the full report of the inspector of railways into the railway accident at Walton-on-the-Naze which occurred on 12 August 1987.

Mr. Freeman: The Health and Safety Executive expects to publish the inspector's report on 21 December.

Chelmsford Rail Services

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people commuted to work by rail from Chelmsford to Liverpool Street in each calendar year from 1985 to the latest available date; and what was the percentage increase or decrease in each year.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail estimated that the figures are as in the table.

Year	Number of commuters from Chelmsford to Liverpool Street	Percentage change from previous year
1985	4,534	[1]8·7
1986	5,153	[1]13·7
1987	6,062	[1]17·6
1988	6,589	[1]8·7
1989	6,216	[2]5·7
1990	5,501	[2]11·5
1991	5,522	[1]0·4
1992	5,259	[2]4·8

[2] Decrease.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current target for completion of the programme for resignalling on the Liverpool Street/Bethnal Green/Chelmsford line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail is currently reviewing the timetable for the Great Eastern resignalling programme. I will write to my hon. Friend when this exercise is completed.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for ensuring that consumers of rail services are adequately represented after privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: We believe that an effective voice for consumers is vital. The current system of consumer representation by the consultative committees works well and we are committed to ensuring that none of the benefits of this system are lost. We have today published a document called "Railway Privatisation: Providing a Voice for the Passenger" which describes the Government's proposals for achieving this in the privatised railway. I am placing copies in the Library.

Street Works Regulations

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to amend the Street Works (Sharing of Costs of Works) Regulations 1992.

Mr. Freeman: I have received representations from the National Joint Utilities Group that the regulations are unfair to the utilities in their treatment of major transport works, particularly with regard to tramways. It may be that the regulations are not satisfactory as they stand. I am arranging for the Department to undertake public consultations as soon as possible, as a basis for a further decision.

Route Guidance Systems

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for licensing route guidance systems in the London area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: We have received an application from GEC for a pilot licence to operate a system called TIGER—traffic information and guidance on European roads. TIGER will provide a route guidance system for London which responds to changing traffic conditions. I now propose to hold discussions on this proposal with the London Boroughs Associations, the traffic director and the police.

The pilot Autoguide system proposed in 1989, based on the use of roadside beacons, had similar objectives. However, the technology is developing very quickly. GEC now takes the view that cellular radio is more appropriate in this case. I have therefore decided to close the 1989 competition. It is accordingly open to other potential operators to come forward with proposals for other systems based on any technology they consider appropriate.

During the Second Reading of the 1989 Road Traffic Act the then Minister for Roads and Traffic assured the House that representatives of interested parties such as the local authorities and the police would be involved in the monitoring of the Autoguide pilot. I shall arrange for the establishment of an assessment group to implement this undertaking for the TIGER project if a licence is granted.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Debt Interest Payments

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the level of debt interest payments and other remittances paid to the United Kingdom by (a) African countries, (b) all developing countries and (c) other countries in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Nelson: Receipts are paid to the Overseas Development Administration, to the Commonwealth Development Corporation, and under bilateral debt rescheduling agreements to the Export Credits Guarantee Department. The following data relate to receipts received by each agency (a) in total and (b) from African countries. There is no definitive definition between developing and other countries. Figures for ECGD and ODA are for financial years, while those for CDC are for calendar years. For 1992-93, the data for ECGD are to the end of November 1992, while the ODA has supplied an estimate of the receipts it expects for the entire year. These are the most comparable latest figures available. Producing data for earlier years would entail a disproportionate cost.

Council Tax

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the rate of VAT needed in 1993-94 to raise an equivalent amount of money to the amount raised by the council tax after taking into account expenditure savings on the costs of introducing and administering the council tax.

Sir John Cope: The amount to be raised in council tax for 1993-94 will depend on decisions, which local authorities have not yet taken, about council tax levels. Accordingly, the calculation requested is not yet possible.

Tobacco

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the losses to the Exchequer arising from the introduction of the European single market (a) through the increased allowances on importation of EC-produced cigarettes and tobacco products and (b) through increased smuggling of cigarettes and tobacco products.

Sir John Cope: The "Financial Statement and Budget Report" published on 10 March 1992 estimated a full-year loss of £250 million from increased cross-border shopping. The bulk of this is expected to concern cigarettes and other tobacco products. It is very difficult to estimate the likely extent of smuggling.

Nuclear Power Station Closures

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of the closure of the seven Magnox nuclear power stations on the public sector borrowing requirement.

Mr. Portillo: It is not possible to provide reliable estimates of the net effects.

Twyford Down

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what correspondence, conversations or meetings officials of his Department have held with representatives of Winchester college relating to the compulsory purchase of the college-owned area of Twyford Down; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: None.

Overseas Life Companies

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make an announcement about the outcome of the consultations between the life assurance industry and his officials about the taxation of United Kingdom branches of overseas life companeis authorised in his 1991 Budget.

Mr. Dorrell: Insurance industry representatives and Inland Revenue officials have held a series of meetings and significant progress was made. I am grateful to the Association of British Insurers for its constructive approach in these discussions.

Legislation in recent years has made major changes to the taxation of life insurance companies. Overseas life offices operating in the United Kingdom through branches need adaptations of the recent reforms to meet their special circumstances. But there are other equally important reasons for reforming the rules under which these United Kindom branch operations are taxed. First, many such branch operations presently have the major part of their taxable investment income determined by reference to apportionment rules which have changed little since the first world war. For a number of reasons, these have become increasingly inappropriate as a basis for measuring United Kingdom branch income. Second, in a number of respects, the current rules under which they are taxed lead to disparities of treatment as against the United Kingdom resident life offices. Some of these presently work to the advantage of the United Kingdom branches; others do not. Our goal is to ensure that, as far as possible, United Kingdom life offices and the United Kingdom branch operations of foreign life offices are able to compete for United Kingdom business on terms which are not distorted by tax considerations.

The main proposals are as follows:

the present apportionment rules in section 445 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988 will be repealed. The branch income, gains and expenses will instead be ascertained as a matter of fact. The normal rules for measuring the taxable profits of a United Kingdom branch operation in section 11 of the ICTA 1988 will apply to all categories of life insurance business, but with two modifications to reflect the unique characteristics of life and other long term insurance business;

—where the assets held by the branch to back the life insurance policies it administers are less than the assets which a United Kingdom resident company with the same portfolio of policies would be expected to hold, income from, and gains on, assets which are held outside the branch will enter into the computation of branch profits. For the purposes of this comparison the United Kingdom branch will be treated as though it were a distinct and separate enterprise dealing at arm's length with the other parts of the company. The assets to be attributed will be those which have a particular connection with the United Kingdom branch activities. If the value of any such assets is insufficient to support a fair comparison between the United Kingdom branch and a United Kingdom life office writing the same business, a proportion of the worldwide income and gains of the overseas company will also be brought into charge to United Kingdom tax;

—the scope of Section 11 of the ICTA 1988 will be extended so that gains on assets situated outside the United Kingdom and used or held for United Kingdom branch purposes will become chargeable gains;

—distributions from shareholdings in United Kingdom companies which are held as part of the branch activities will carry an entitlemenbt to tax credit. The overseas company will be able to treat distributions as though they were profits chargeable to corporation tax, against which management expenses and various other deductions can be set;

—new rules will enable the necessary figures to be established direct from the company's records where a regulatory return of the United Kingdom branch activities does not provide the information required;

—double tax relief will be available for foreign tax paid on the United Kingdom branch income of the company's long term business fund assets.

The new rules will apply for accounting periods beginning on or after 1 January 1993. I am today depositing a copy of the draft clauses in the House of Commons Library. Copies are also being sent to each of the companies known to be affected by the new proposals, and to the Association of British Insurers. Further copies are available on request from the Inland Revenue to whom representations on the clauses should be sent by 28 February 1993.

Civil Servants (Travel Expenses)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes have been made in the rules on travel expenses for civil servants.

Mr. Dorrell: As part of our ongoing programme for delegating to departments and agencies greater responsibility for managing personnel management policies, Departments and agencies have been given the freedom to determine the conditions on which advances of salary to assist civil servants in the purchase of bicycles for home-to-office travel are made.

European Community

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is his estimate of the increase in the United Kingdom's net contribution if the EC budget is increased under the Delors proposals by each multiple of £1,000 million up to £25,000 million;

(2) what is his estimate of the net cost to the United Kingdom of the cohesion fund as proposed by the Commission for each of the years 1993 to 1997; and if he will make a statement on the expected benefits to the United Kingdom of agreeing to such a proposal.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 11 December 1992]: The European Council at Edinburgh on 11 and 12 December agreed a financing package for the Community for the next seven years, including the cohesion fund: this would allow an EC budget at a level of £62 billion in 1999, at 1992 prices. A copy of the conclusions of the European Council, including the details of the package, has been placed in the Library. The forecast annual addition to the United Kingdom's net public sector contribution arising from this package would be some £200 million, in 1999, above the underlying cost of Community spending given the present ceiling on own resources, estimated at £2,800 million in 1999, all at 1992 prices. The agreement on the Community's finances at Edinburgh made possible agreements on other important issues such as subsidiarity, openness, resolution of Danish difficulties with the Maastricht treaty, a package of measures to promote European economic growth, and the enlargement of the Community.

Coin Sizes

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received recently about the size of coins now in circulation; what weight he gives to the views of pensioners and disabled groups who may be concerned about small coins; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 14 December 1992]: A small number of representations have been received. The new, smaller 5p and 10p coins were introduced in response to public demand for a lighter coinage and followed extensive research and consultation. The views of pensioners and disabled groups were taken fully into account. The coins were given a coarse milled edge specifically to help the visually handicapped.

Inward Investment

Mr. Peter Shore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the official estimate of United States and Japanese direct investment in the United Kingdom as a percentage of direct investment in all EC countries in each year from 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Lamont [holding answer 14 December 1992]: Fully comparable information on direct inward investment in the European Community from outside the EC is not available. However, the following estimates for the years 1985 to 1991 have been prepared based on the most readily available sources.

Value of stock of direct investment in United Kingdom as a percentage of that in all EC countries

	United States	Japan
1985	39·4	31·7
1986	35·9	31·2

High Street Banks

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he intends to take as a result of his meeting with representatives of the high street banks, on 11 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 15 December 1992]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor did not meet with the representatives of the high street banks on 11 December, but he plans to do so over the next few days.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Recycling

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what progress is being made towards ensuring that all stationery of the House is produced on recycled paper.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: In June 1991, the Services Committee agreed that, in addition to stationery or archival quality, items of stationery made from recycled material should be made available to Members on a permanent basis. Since then the Serjeant at Arms has made arrangements to ensure Members are aware of the availability of this recycled range. For large orders it may be obtained from the Serjeant at Arms' stores, but where a particular local demand has been identified, it is also available from stationery cupboards. Although, for the forseeable future, there will continue to be a need for stationery of archival quality, recycled stationery is becoming increasingly popular with Members.

The Serjeant at Arms and HMSO have a continuing responsibility to monitor the development of this range of stationery and to report any significant change to the Administration Committee.

Select Committees (Travel Costs)

Mr. Hutton: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what was the total expenditure for travel by members of Select Committees, divided into fares and subsistence, for each parliamentary Session since 1987-88 in (a) cash and (b) 1991-92 prices.

Mr. Beith: The information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, for the year 1991-92, the expenditure for travel and subsistence by members of Select Committees was £462,883·68. Costs for visits by individual Committees are set out in the appropriate Sessional Returns.

Library Research Staff

Mr. Dafis: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, how many research staff have been employed by the Library in each of the last 10 years; and what plans he has to increase the numbers of Library research staff.

Mr. Beith: Numbers of research staff on the establishment of the Library in each of the last 10 years —that is, deputy assistant librarians and library clerks, including the international affairs and defence section, are set out in the table in full-time equivalents.

	Number
1983	22
1984	22
1985	22
1986	23
1987	23
1988	26
1989	27
1990	28
1992	32

These figures exclude support staff. I understand that proposals for an increase in the establishment of the research division are in preparation, and will be considered by the House of Commons Commission in accordance with its usual practice.

Advisory Committee on Works of Art

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will set out the membership and terms of reference of the Advisory Committee on Works of Art.

Mr. Beith: I understand that Madam Speaker has appointed the following Members to the Advisory Committee on Works of Art: the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks), the right hon. Member for Southend, West (Mr. Channon) and the hon. Members for Stockton, North (Mr. Cook), for Staffordshire, South (Mr. Cormack), for Warley, East (Mr. Faulds), for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel), for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan) and for Windsor and Maidenhead (Mr. Trend).

The terms of reference of the committee, which have been approved by the House of Commons Commission, are:

> to advise the Speaker generally on matters relating to works of art, including acquisitions; and to advise the Accommodation and Works Committee on the policy on, conservation of, and curatorial management of the collections of pictures, statues, murals, historic furniture and furnishings and decorative interior of the Palace; and advise on the decorative interiors of other buildings in the Parliamentary Estate when requested by that Committee.

Early-day Motions

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Lord President of the Council what estimate he has made of the cost within Government Departments of preparing briefing on early-day motions for Session 1991-92 and for Session 1992-93 up to the summer adjournment.

Mr. Newton: No estimate has been made of the costs involved to Government Departments in preparing briefing on early-day motions.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Beith: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will set out, for each Session since 1987-88 (a) the number of motions to annul statutory instruments tabled each year, (b) the number considered in Standing Committee, (c) the number considered on the Floor of the House and (d) the number which were not considered, broken down in each case into those standing in the name of (i) the leader of the Labour party, (ii) the leader of the Liberal Democrats or predecessor parties, (iii) Conservative Members, (iv) other Labour Members and (v) other hon. Members.

Mr. Newton: The information is set out in the table.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Lord President of the Council when was the last occasion on which a motion to approve a statutory instrument was defeated on a Division in the House; and when a prayer to annul a statutory instrument was last carried on a Division in the House.

Mr. Newton: The last occasion on which a motion to approve a statutory instrument was defeated on a Division in the House was 24 July 1978. The last occasion on which a prayer to annul a statutory instrument was carried on a Division in the House was 24 October 1979.

SCOTLAND

Water Privatisation

14. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received in support of privatising the water industry in Scotland; how many he has received opposing water privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

26. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many submissions he has received so far in the consultation on the future of Scottish water and sewerage.

31. Mrs. Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the current consultation on water and sewerage in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro: To date, we have received 366 responses to the consultation paper, 3,702 pre-printed postcards and 977 other representations, many of which arrived before the consultation paper was published. Detailed analysis of the responses will be completed only after the end of the consultation paper.

Agricultural Marketing Boards

15. Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries in Scotland has received about the agricultural industry marketing boards; and what steps he intends taking to ensure the future economic prospects of the sectors of the agricultural industry involved.

Sir Hector Monro: My Department received a number of comments both on the Scottish milk marketing boards' proposals for conversion to voluntary co-operatives and about the Potato Marketing Board.

The Government's policy is to ensure that these sectors can flourish within an open and competitive structure, while retaining the best features of the existing marketing schemes where appropriate.

Transport Infrastucture (Lanarkshire)

16. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to upgrade the transport infrastructure in Lanarkshire; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Lanarkshire is a focal point in the central Scotland motorway network and is well served by the M8, M80 and M74. A £40 million extension of the M74 to Cambuslang is under construction and the M80 Stepps bypass opened to traffic earlier this year. My right hon. Friend was able to include in his recent plans major improvements to upgrade the A8/M8 route to serve new development in north Lanarkshire including the Mossend rail freight depot.

Homelessness

17. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate how many people in Scotland will be homeless on 25 December.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A forecast of the number of homeless would be very difficult to assess at any given time. The Government are devoting very substantial resources to local authorities whose responsibility it is to deal with this problem.

28. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for rehousing the homeless.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government provide resources to local authorities so that they can carry out their statutory duty of providing accommodation, or advice and help in finding accommodation, for those assessed as homeless. These resources have included extra allocations of nearly £23 million in 1991-93.

The Government also provide funding for Scottish Homes, which issued a policy statement on homelessness on 12 November. Scottish Homes' target for 1992-93 is to secure the provision of accommodation for 1,750 households assessed as homeless by local authorities.

Hospital Treatments

18. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) in-patients and (b) out-patients were treated in national health service hospitals in Scotland in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what the figures were in 1979.

Mr. Stewart: A total of 920,144 patients were treated as in-patients in national health service hospitals in Scotland in the year ending 31 March 1992 compared with 737,816 in 1979—a 25 per cent. increase. Out-patient numbers rose to 6,005,131 in 1992 from 5,206,078 in 1979.

Rent-to-Mortgage

20. Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications are in the pipeline under the rent-to-mortgage scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: At 30 November 1992, a total of 618 rent-to-mortgage sales had been completed in Scotland. A further 513 applications were being processed at that date.

Governance

21. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many public speeches he has made on the future government of Scotland since 9 April.

Mr. Lang: My concern that the future government of Scotland should reflect Scotland's needs has been a prominent theme in many speeches I have made since the general election.

22. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to complete his stocktaking exercise on the governance of Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Our review of arrangements for the government of Scotland is progressing well and we will announce the outcome in the early part of next year.

Local Authorities (Competitive Tendering)

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received following publication of the Scottish Office evaluation of compulsory competitive tendering for Scottish local authority services.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has received no representations since the publication, on 19 November 1992, of the Scottish Office central research unit report "Evaluation of Compulsory Competitive Tendering for Scottish Local Authority Services".

Scottish Enterprise

23. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about Scottish Enterprise's budget.

Mr. Stewart: Details of the 1992-93 budget for Scottish Enterprise are published in the supply estimates. Last month my right hon. Friend announced an additional £6 million for Scottish Enterprise for 1992-93 as part of the Government's measures to help boost the economy. Details of the 1993-94 budget will be published later. My right hon. Friend announced on 2 December planned gross provision for Scottish Enterprise for 1993-94 of £441 million. In addition to that figure, local enterprise companies are expected to secure receipts from the European regional development fund next year of towards £20 million. Overall planned resources from public sources therefore exceed this year's plans.

Road Building

24. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria he uses for deciding priorities in the road building programme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend's primary duty as roads authority for trunk roads is to cater for the needs of through traffic. Priorities are therefore to support economic activity with good, quick and reliable inter-urban road links and to provide good accessibility to all parts of Scotland.

Cancer Clusters

25. Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 258, what information he has on cancer clusters within the west of Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: At present, there are several studies being carried out to investigate whether cancer clusters might exist in the west of Scotland, but data are not yet complete.

Water Industry

27. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further representations he has received on his consultation on water; and if he will place copies of all representations received on the water industry consultation document in the Library.

Sir Hector Monro: To date, 66 responses have been received to the consultation paper on water. Copies of responses will be placed in the Library following the end of the consultation period, unless respondents have specifically requested confidentiality.

Subsidiarity

29. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he had on the question of subsidiarity as it applies to Scotland with the representatives of member states during the EC summit in Edinburgh.

Mr. Lang: None. The principle of subsidiarity, as defined in article 3b of the new EC treaty agreed at Maastricht, and as discussed at the Edinburgh European Council, refers specifically to the relations between the Community as a whole and individual member states. It is up to individual member states to order their own constitutional affairs at the national and sub-national level.

34. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to apply to Scotland the principle of subsidiarity set out in the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. Lang: Article 3b of the new EC treaty agreed at Maastricht, which sets out the principle of subsidiarity, refers specifically to the relations between the Community as a whole and individual member states. It is up to individual member states to order their own constitutional affairs at the national and sub-national level.

Rural Economy

30. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he is taking to revive the Scottish rural economy by creating new employment opportunities.

Mr. Stewart: The main instruments for promoting the full range of the Government's training, employment and economic development initiatives in rural areas as elsewhere in Scotland are Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise and their associated networks of local enterprise companies. The Government have provided the Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise networks with a combined budget this year of some £540 million. A broadly similar level of resources is planned for 1993-94. In addition, the networks have at their disposal their own resources and European Community funding. All of this is available to encourage economic development, to help create new employment opportunities and to help people secure jobs.

All areas of Scotland benefit from having local enterprise companies which are able to tailor their activities to the needs of the local economy; and local enterprise companies are also able to plan better than in the past for the distinctive needs of rural communities, even where the area for which they are responsible is not predominantly rural.

Whisky Distillers

32. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many whisky distilleries are currently in operation in Scotand; and what was the number in operation in 1987 and in 1982.

Mr. Stewart: There are currently 103 distilleries operating in Scotland. The figures for 1982 and 1987 were 124 and 90 respectively.

Alcoholism

33. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the Scottish Council on Alcohol to discuss problems relating to alcoholism in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has had no recent meeting with the Scottish Council on Alcohol. Scottish Office officials regularly meet Council representatives to discuss matters relating to the work of the organisation and to the Government's response to alcohol misuse more generally. Our determination to tackle this serious problem is reflected in our policy statement "Scotland's Health: A Challenge To Us All", which was published in July and describes the initiatives we are taking on a broad front to make progress towards our target for the year 2000 of reducing by 20 per cent. the number of men and women whose alcohol consumption exceeds recommended sensible levels.

New Town Housing

36. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sums have been allocated for anticipated capital consents to be allocated to local authorities for the transfer of new town housing stocks.

Mr. Stewart: The additional capital consents required by the local authorities will be allocated when the extent of their successful bids for new towns housing stocks is known.

Health Spending

37. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on levels of health spending in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: Net expenditure on the health service in Scotland in 1993-94 is planned to be £3,766 million, up by £150·7 million—4·2 per cent. over the 1992-93 plans. The 1993-94 figure represents a real-terms increase of 1·4 per cent. above original 1992-93 plans. In 1993-94 the overall increase in health spending since 1979-80 will be 47 per cent. in real terms.

Scottish Charities (Eastern Europe)

38. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the work of Scottish charities in eastern Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has received no specific representations on this matter, but he is aware of the work undertaken by Scottish charities, including Scottish European Aid which recently announced plans to develop a refugee camp and field hospital in Bosnia.

Skye Bridge

39. Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on progress towards the construction of the bridge to Skye.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Severe weather conditions have caused some delay to the construction programme although in spite of this the contractor has made steady progress. Subject to a suitable weather and tidal window being available, it is now planned to float both caissons out from the Kishorn dry dock and attempt the positioning of the caisson for the north pier prior to the Christmas and new year holiday period.

Scottish Economy

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet the Scottish Council (Development and Industry) to discuss the state of the Scottish economy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have regular contacts with the Scottish Council on matters concerning the Scottish economy and I look forward to a continuing exchange of views.

Training

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what budget for training he has made available in (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93.

Mr. Stewart: Training provision for 1991-92 and 1992-93 for Scotland forms part of the budgets of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprises, details of which are published in the main supply estimates for 1992-93.

Local Authorities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each Scottish local authority (a) its population, (b) its number of employees, (c) the number of employees per thousand population and (d) the political party in control.

Mr. Lang: The table lists for each Scottish local authority (a) its population, (b) its number of employees and (c) the number of employees per thousand population as at June 1991. These are the most up-to-date population figures available. The information concerning the political party in control of each local authority is at May 1992.

Schools Inspectors

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the role of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The parents charter in Scotland underlined the central role of independent inspection in assuring the quality of school education.

In carrying forward the principles of the charter, therefore, it is appropriate to affirm the important role of Her Majesty's inspectors, which was last described in a policy statement issued in 1983 by the then Secretary of State.

Reports by Her Majesty's inspectors have been published in recent years on more than half the schools and colleges in Scotland and on most colleges of education. Reports have also been published on educational matters of national significance in all sectors of education, such as aspects of the curriculum and school management. These reports have provided a basis for assessing standards, identifying needs and formulating guidance to the system. Also, in response to public concern to raise educational standards in a highly competitive world and to increase accountability, the Government have promoted a number of measures to improve and strengthen the education system in Scotland, and have pursued new policies and new programmes to this end.

It is important that we have an inspection system that is independent of the providers of the education service. Education provision in Scotland is the responsibility of local education authorities or, in the case of independent and other schools, boards of governors, who also have responsibility for the allocation of resources. Her Majesty's inspectors will remain directly accountable to me. These arrangements will allow the inspectorate to continue to make and to publish independent and objective assessments of the standards and quality of education provision in Scotland. The effectiveness of their contribution rests firmly on their ability to offer such impartial judgments. Their appointment by royal warrant underscores their independent status.

The parents charter in Scotland undertakes that parents and the public will be kept fully informed of the state of the education service, the performance of individual schools and the progress of pupils. It commits the Government to ensuring that those responsible for providing education report regularly on their performance and on their standards. The approach to quality assurance in the charter envisages regular planning, internal review and public reporting every two years by each school to its school board. The inspectorate has recently published guidance on how it assesses the quality of education in a school so as to assist authorities, teachers and parents to interpret how well a school is performing. Each school will be required to set out in a school development plan its educational achievements, including examination results, over the previous two years and its plans for a two year period ahead. This plan will be available to the parents of all existing and prospective pupils. It is an important objective that all those involved in education should be part of the total effort to maintain and improve quality.

I look to Her Majesty's inspectorate in Scotland to monitor and report on the implementation of these commitments, in the first instance through its inspection and audit of the school system. I look to its reports to provide frank and clear assessments of the strengths and weaknesses in schools and colleges, in teaching and learning, in attainment, in aspects of the curriculum and in management. The first priority of its reports will be to assess the standards being achieved and the arrangements made to monitor and improve these standards. They will identify good performance, and where performance is not good enough they will say what has been done; and they will assess value for money, in collaboration with the Accounts Commission as appropriate.

To further the aims of the charter the conduct and outcome of inspection will be made more public and more open. Henceforth, there will be discussion with the school board early in each inspection so that the views and concerns of parents are ascertained and can be taken fully into account in the inspection. Also, arrangements will be made to let local business men and women know through their local enterprise company and chamber of commerce of the intention to inspect a secondary school in their area and to give them an opportunity to offer the inspectors their views in advance; they will also receive copies of the relevant report. The practice of publishing a full report on each school inspection will be retained, but, in addition, a short summary of the report will be published for the convenience of parents. The action those responsible for provision intend to take in response to inspection recommendations and a report on the subsequent follow-up inspection visit will also be made available to parents and school board members. Steps are being taken to recruit as Her Majesty's inspectors people who have substantive, relevant experience gained beyond education and to involve lay people in inspections, with the objective of having lay participation in all inspection teams from school session 1994-95.

It will be a function of Her Majesty's inspectorate—through its newly formed audit unit—to monitor the performance of all schools and colleges through scrutiny of school and college development plans, examination results, attendance and truancy figures, the destination of leavers, costs and the findings of its inspections. I will expect it to identify elements requiring attention and improvement in individual institutions and in the system as a whole. These findings, which will be published, will also be used in structuring future inspection programmes. The first audit unit report "Examination Results in Scottish Schools 1990-92" was published on 16 November 1992.

Comprehensive revision and extension of evaluation and reporting arrangements in this way will improve the capacity of the inspectorate to observe performance and progress and to discern and publicise good practice and report weaknesses and omissions which need to be put right. I look for improvements of this type in monitoring and reporting generally to provide a better basis and sharper focus for institutional inspections, and thus a more efficient and effective use of Her Majesty's inspectors in the field. I will fix a target number of inspections of schools and colleges to be completed each year. In 1993-94 I expect to see reports published on around 150 full inspections and the same number of follow-up inspections.

The inspectorate will play a central role in ensuring that the Government's aim of strengthening and improving the education system in Scotland is realised. The senior chief inspector will have direct access to me enabling him to provide frank and objective advice independent of the Scottish Office Education Department. I will expect to receive his professional views about how the Government might best achieve their objectives for education in a sound, coherent and practicable manner, and I will look to the inspectorate to ensure that new initiatives are imple-mented effectively.

It will be important for the inspectorate to maintain close contact with those concerned with the products of the education system, for example, employers and parents, to ensure that their views are known and taken fully into account in the work of the inspectorate, and with those in the wider community who should contribute towards improvements.

The distinctive and central role of HM inspectorate in Scottish education and the value of its work to the education system in the past has been widely recognised. I endorse its role as primarily responsible for independent and objective evaluation of the standards of the education system.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what provision he will make for the Government's proposals for limitation of fishing effort for fishing vessels which have already cut capacity through licence aggregation.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 1 December 1992]: A vessel whose licence entitlement stems from an aggregation entered into since 1991, and does not therefore have a track record of days at sea for that year, will have its days at sea entitlement calculated from the entitlements of the donor vessels.

Cleaning Contracts, Strathclyde

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will use his powers under the Local Government Act 1988 to intervene in respect of the procedures adopted by Strathclyde regional council in awarding cleaning contracts to its own direct labour organisation;

(2) what representations he has received from Initial Cleaning concerning the competitive tendering process operated by Strathclyde regional council.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 15 December 1992]: It is not the Scottish Office Development Department's practice to reveal the identity of either individuals or companies who put forward complaints about the operation by local authorities of the compulsory competitive tendering process. However, my officials have received a complaint about the award by Strathclyde regional council of contracts for building cleaning to Cleaning Direct, the council's direct services organisation and have written to the council seeking their comments on it. Once the council's response is received, my right hon. Friend will consider whether it would be appropriate to exercise his sanction powers under the Local Government Act 1988.

KS Properties Ltd

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what investigations he has made into grants and assistance given by the Scottish Development Agency to K S Properties Ltd.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 December 1992]: This involves what was an operational matter for the former Scottish Development Agency. I shall therefore ask the chairman of Scottish Enterprise, as the SDA's successor body, to write to my hon. Friend setting out the details.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sites of special scientific interest were (a) damaged and (b) destroyed in Scotland in each of the last five years to date.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 11 December 1992]: Figures are not yet available for the present year. The information for the five years to 1991-92 is as follows:

	Sites damaged
1987-88	25
1988-89	19
1989-90	23
1990-91	30
1991-92	20

No sites of special scientific interest were destroyed in Scotland during this period.

In 1991-92, the area damaged was 2,852 hectares which represents 0·35 per cent. of the total area of sites of special scientific interest in Scotland in that year.

Water Quality

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated level of capital investment required to meet the water supply quality regulations for (a) each of the next 15 years and (b) the next 15 years in total; and if he will provide a breakdown by each water authority.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 14 December 1992]: The capital expenditure to meet the requirements of the Water Supply (Water Quality) (Scotland) Regulations 1990 is estimated at over £1·5 billion. A breakdown in the form requested is not available. However, estimated capital expenditure by authority to meet the requirements of the regulations is given in the table. On top of this, it is estimated that additional works of renewal and refurbishment of cast-iron mains will add some £247 million and that a further £55 million capital expenditure will be incurred by the Central Scotland Water Development Board in connection with the regulations.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated level of capital investment required to refurbish, repair and maintain the infrastructure of (a) water supply, (b) sewerage and sewage treatment and (c) total water and sewerage in (i) each of the next 15 years and (ii) the next 15 years in total; and if he will provide a breakdown by water authority.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 14 December 1992]: Details of capital expenditure requirements are not available in the form requested. However, for 1992-93, renewal, renovation and replacement of water mains, sewers and treatment works and plant accounts for about 19 per cent. of authorities' planned expenditure on water supply; and for about 27 per cent. of planned expenditure on sewerage and sewage treatment.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated level of capital investment required to meet the water supply quality regulations for the years 1989-90 to 1992-93 inclusive at (a) current prices and (b) constant 1991-92 prices, using gross domestic product deflator; and if he will provide a breakdown by each water authority.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 14 December 1992]: The Water Supply (Water Quality) (Scotland) Regulations 1990 came into force on 1 May 1990. The estimated capital expenditure requirements in the period from 1990-91 to 1992-93 to meet the regulations are given in the table.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated level of capital investment required which would allow (a) water supply, (b) sewerage and sewage treatment and (c) total water and sewerage to comply with EC directives in (i) each of the next 15 years and (ii) the next 15 years in total; and if he will provide a breakdown by water authority.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 14 December 1992]: Breakdowns of capital expenditure requirements are not available in the form requested. However, estimated capital expenditure needs to meet the requirements of the EC urban waste water treatment directive by the end of 2005 are given in the table. Information on investment in water supply is given in my answer to the hon. Member's earlier question.

WALES

Earnings

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the average male earnings in Wales in each year since 1979 adjusted for inflation.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is given in the table. Earnings are expressed in real terms at April 1992 prices using the retail prices index.

[1] Whose pay for the survey period was not affected by absence.

[2] Since 1983, earnings are for all those on adult rates. Figures from earlier surveys were for over-18s only and have been converted to be comparable with current definitions.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the increase in average adult earnings in Wales (a) between April 1990 and April 1991, and (b) between April 1991 and April 1992.

Mr. David Hunt: The average earnings of all full-time employees on adult rates increased by 8·7 per cent. between April 1990 and April 1991. For the period from April 1991 to April 1992 the increase was 7·4 per cent. (Source: New Earnings Survey)

Breast Cancer

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the recorded number of breast cancer cases in Wales for each year since 1981.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest information on the recorded number of new breast cancer cases for Welsh residents is given in the following table:

Year	Female	Male	Total
1981	1,354	15	1,369
1982	1,483	11	1,494

AIDS

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken to inform teenagers in Wales of the dangers posed by AIDS.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: At national level the Health Education Authority's UK HIV/AIDS mass media campaign, comprising TV and cinema productions together with radio advertising, continues to target amongst others, young people.

In Wales a wide range of health promotion literature about HIV/AIDS is made available by the Health Promotion Authority for Wales, which also specifically targets young people, through education projects undertaken from within its healthy sexuality programme.

The Welsh Office has made additional funds available to district health authorities for the appointment of health promotion officers dealing with the prevention of HIV/AIDS. These officers undertake a range of activities aimed specifically at young people, including the development of young persons clinics, visiting youth organisations, schools and higher education centres.

In schools, the national curriculum programme of study for science contains a requirement to teach secondary age pupils about HIV/AIDS. The Welsh Office makes grant available to fund teacher training and the appointment of county advisers in health education, including education and HIV/AIDS.

A guide for the education service on HIV and AIDS has been issued to all schools in Wales.

Foyer Hostel Schemes

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assistance his Department is giving directly or through Housing for Wales to the development of foyer hostel schemes in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The principal focus of attention as regards foyer-type schemes relates to the network project in Cardiff for which the Department is providing funding of £800,000 over a three-year period to support young single vulnerable homeless people with special or severe difficulties.

Document Costs

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the costs to his Department of (1) publication of the appropriate ring files and subsequent updating of the national curriculum folders (2) publishing, producing and distributing the parents charter booklet (3) reproducing the Welsh version of the national curriculum mathematics document, of correcting mistakes in the original version (4) producing and distributing the document to explain about schools opting out of local education authority control and (5) publishing information on the work of school governors to encourage parents to take up school governing duties.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not readily available. I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Sheep Premium

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what response he has received from the European Commission to his representations concerning delays involving mistakes on claim forms for sheep annual premium payments.

Mr. David Hunt: The European Commission has agreed that errors can be corrected without penalty (i) where component figures on a claim form are correct but are added incorrectly (ii) when farmers themselves contact the Department to point out an error before the beginning of the relevant retention period, or during the retention period where the correct figures can be verified from a hill livestock compensatory allowance claim form and a flock count.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 2 November, Official Report, column 9, whether he will publish a table by county of the disallowed claims for sheep annual premium for each of the years (a) 1989, (b) 1990, (c) 1991 and (d) 1992 to 30 October.

Mr. David Hunt: I will write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Higher Education

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures are being taken to promote higher education among secondary school pupils.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Programmes of careers education and guidance in schools and the local education authority careers service offer pupils advice and opportunities to discuss options for school leavers, including higher education. In addition, there are a number of specific initiatives to encourage young people to consider careers in engineering, science and technology which may involve higher education. The teaching as a career—TASC—unit promotes and publicises teaching and teacher training to potential recruits. This year TASC has been specifically targeting sixth formers.

River Dee Crossing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will allocate extra moneys to Clwyd county council's transport supplementary grant to enable the third River Dee crossing project to start in 1993-94.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The transport grant settlement will allow the authority to spend over £2 million on preparation work in 1993-94. A main works start will be made in 1994-95.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning his Department's policy on the proposed third River Dee crossing.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend announced on 14 December that funds would be made availalble to start the Dee crossing in 1994-95.

Vehicle Pollution

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will bring forward proposals for a new framework for vehicle nuisance control in Wales to include noise, smoke and gaseous pollution detection.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No. Regulations made under the Road Traffic Act 1988 on these matters are periodically updated in line with technical developments and usually in concert with our European Community partners.

Transport Supplementary Grant

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to announce transport supplementary grant for each of the counties of Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend announced the 1993-94 transport grant settlement on 14 December.

Garden Festival

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the prospective revenue, relative to budget, of sales of land for (a) housing and (b) commercial development arising from the ending of Garden Festival Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The joint venture partners of Blaenau Gwent borough council, Gwent county council and Welsh Development Agency estimate revenue from sales of land to be £5 million and £2 million for housing and commercial development respectively over the next six years.

Agricultural Training Board

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are his plans for the future status of the Agricultural Training Board in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: My ministerial colleagues and I will be considering the role and status of the Agricultural Training Board in the light of the numerous responses we have received to our consultation paper.

Development Area Status

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of farm land in Wales has the status of development area or special development area.

Mr. David Hunt: Approximately 81 per cent. of agricultural land in Wales lies within the less favoured area —LFA. Approximately 57 per cent. is classed as LFA (severely disadvantaged) and 24 per cent. as LFA (disadvantaged).

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total cost of hill livestock compensatory allowance payments in Wales in the last financial year; what is his estimate for the current financial year; and what financial provision he has made for the forthcoming financial year.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

1991-92	42·130
1992-93	[1]34·0
1993-94	[1]32·380

[1] estimate

Notes

1. Expenditure in 1991-92 was higher than normal because of a larger than usual carry over of claims from the previous year.
2. The 1992-93 forecast takes into account the changes in the 1993 HLCA payment rates announced on 10 December as far as the Department is able. Actual 1992-93 expenditure will be published in the 1992 Appropriation Accounts.
3. The 1993-94 provision will be published in the 1993-94 Main Supply Estimate Class XV, Vote 1. The actual amounts paid in 1993-94 will depend on the HLCA payment rates that will apply in that year. The HLCA payment rates and other scheme arrangements to apply from 1 January 1994 will be considered in the context of the 1993 autumn review of the economic conditions and prospects for LFA farmers.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to announce the new rates of hill livestock compensatory allowance payments which will apply in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) on 10 December 1992, Official Report, column 757, by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of farm stock in Wales which qualify for hill livestock compensatory allowance payments in development areas and special development areas.

Mr. David Hunt: The total numbers of animals which attracted hill livestock compensatory allowance in 1991 were as follows:

	Cows	Sheep
Less favoured area (severely disadvantaged)	126,344	3,372,804
Less favoured area (disadvantaged)	43,902	764,156

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to maintain the real value of hill livestock compensatory allowance payments in development areas and special development areas in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: HLCA payment rates and other scheme arrangements are determined following the annual autumn review of the economic conditions and prospects for farmers in the less favoured areas. The outcome of this year's review and the HLCA payment rates to apply from 1 Janaury 1993 were announced on 10 December 1992.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for the last financial year (a) the total amount of hill livestock compensatory allowance payments, (b) the total number of claimants and (c) the proportion of these payments which were paid to farmers farming land with the status of special development area.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

(a) £42·130 million
(b) 16,254
(c) 92 per cent.

Conservation Grant Scheme

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 2 November, Official Report, column 9, whether he will publish a table by county of the disallowed claims under the farm and conservation grant scheme for each of the years (a) 1989, (b) 1990, (c) 1991 and (d) 1992 to 30 September.

Mr. David Hunt: I will write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Rural Initiative

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has under his rural initiative for 1993-94.

Mr. David Hunt: A total of £6·6 million has been allocated for the 1993-94 round of the rural initiative capital grants scheme, an increase of 10 per cent. on the current year. Applications have already been invited from local authorities and must be received by Friday 18 December 1992. These will be considered and assessed and an announcement of successful projects made in due course.

Provision has also been made which will enable the Department, its agencies and other organisations to continue to enhance the development of the economic, social and environmental fabric of rural Wales.

Tenant Participation

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what funding his Department has provided for the Tenant Participation Advisory Service (Wales) in each year since its creation.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Funding provided each year by the Welsh Office for the Tenant Participation Advisory Service (Wales) since its inception is as follows:

1992-93	157,878
1991-92	127,597
1990-91	83,282
1989-90	59,549
1988-89	47,375

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department will set up an inquiry into solvent abuse, its implications on vandalism and its criminalisation.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I receive advice from a number of individuals and bodies in relation to drug misuse. No evidence has been presented which would justify holding a separate inquiry into solvent abuse.

Radiotherapy

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of women domiciled in Wales treated for (a) breast cancer and (b) cervical cancer who have suffered serious long-term side effects as a consequence of radiotherapy treatment undergone; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet members of the Radiotherapy Action Group Exposure to discuss the consequences to women of long-term side effects of radiotherapy treatment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend has no plans to meet this group. The treatment of cancers by radiotherapy is governed by clinical practice within a legislative framework. All patients discuss the implications of radiotherapy with the responsible consultant before the course of treatment begins.

GP Fund Holding

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the impact of general practitioner fund holding on district health authorities.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are 24 fund-holding practices —seven first wave, 17 second wave—and two smaller practices in the second wave are fund holding on a trial basis.

Only the first wave practices have completed a full year of fund holding and it is too early to quantify the impact of fund holding on district health authorities.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will itemise how general practitioner fund holders have spent the money saved on hospital budgets;

(2) what is his estimate of the financial consequences of general practitioner fund-holding savings upon (a) non-fund-holding general practitioner practices budgets and (b) the budgets of district health authorities; and if he will make a statement;

(3) which general practitioner fund holders in Wales have voluntarily returned savings made on hospital budgets to district health authorities.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Only the seven practices in the first wave in Wales have completed a full year of fund holding. Savings can only be identified when the accounts have been audited and the audit reports have not yet been received.

Until such time as savings are identified it is impossible to consider their disposition or estimate the financial consequences, if any, on non-fund-holding general practitioner services or district health authorities.

Drink Driving

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to combat drunken driving in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Government's strategy is both to change people's attitudes so that drinking and driving is increasingly seen as socially unacceptable and to encourage tougher enforcement. To that end I plan to continue in Wales with the annual summer and Christmas/new year publicity campaigns. Carefully targeted publicity campaigns and enforcement have helped to reduce the numbers killed in drink-drive incidents over the last decade by more than half.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many fatalities resulting from drink-related driving accidents were recorded in Wales in 1992; what were the comparable figures for 1990 and 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The numbers of fatalities in accidents where at least one driver gave a positive breath test are given in the table.

Information is available only where the driver was breath-tested within 12 hours of the accident occurrence. Figures exclude cases where breath test results were not available for medical or other reasons and provide no more than an indication of changes in drinking and driving patterns.

Free-range Turkeys

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what free-range turkey farms are licensed to operate in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: There is no legal requirement for free-range turkey farms to be licensed.

Flood Damage

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional resources have been made available by his Department to assist those affected by the recent flooding in Wales to restore their homes.

Mr. David Hunt: It is the responsibility of householders to ensure that they have adequate insurance for their homes and contents. I have already met the chief executive of the Association of British Insurers who has assured me that all claims submitted to members of the association will be dealt with expeditiously.

In addition, any homes so badly damaged that they now fail to meet the statutory fitness standard may qualify for mandatory home renovation grants. Discretionary assistance may also be available for certain works over and above that standard.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what issues his Advisory Committee for Wales on National Rivers Authority Functions has considered since the publication of its first annual report.

Mr. David Hunt: The committee's second annual report has been published today and I will arrange for copies to be placed in the Library of the House as soon as possible.

Valuation Tribunal Offices

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what decisions he has made on the future structure of valuation tribunal offices in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I have considered carefully the responses to my consultation paper, "Review of Valuation Tribunal Offices" and the representations made by the Valuation Tribunals Consultative Committee for Wales when my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State met the committee on 11 December. I have concluded that the valuation tribunal service in Wales must improve its efficiency and that this is best achieved by reorganising the present offices so that one office serves two county valuation tribunals. I propose that:

(a) the Mid and South Glamorgan valuation tribunals should continue to operate from their joint office in Cardiff;

(b) the Powys and Gwent valuation tribunals should be administered from a joint office in Newport;

(c) the West Glamorgan and Dyfed valuation tribunals should be administered from a joint office in Carmarthen;

(d) the Gwynedd and Clwyd valuation tribunal should be administered from a joint office in Prestatyn or another agreed location in north Wales.

I propose to set an overall staffing complement of 20 compared with the present complement of 24·6 staff. These arrangements are estimated to yield savings of £250,000 in a full year. The offices will provide a service in the Welsh language where required and tribunal hearings will continue to be held at locations convenient to appellants.

I am setting out my decisions in a letter to representatives of the valuation tribunal service. This letter and a list of those who responded to the consultation will be placed in the Library of the House.

I intend that the detailed timetable for establishing the new joint offices, arrangements for staff, and the office location in north Wales, should be settled through consultation with the valuation tribunals concerned.

My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State will shortly meet the presidents of the tribunals affected to discuss implementation.

National Health Service Funding

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what funding he proposes to make available to the national health service in Wales in 1993-94.

Mr. David Hunt: Subject to parliamentary approval, planned provision for the NHS in Wales will increase to £1,974 million net next year. Of this sum £1,465 million is earmarked for hospital and community health services—HCHS. This includes an increase in HCHS revenue expenditure of 3·9 per cent. compared to this year—well in excess of forecast inflation.

The new money that the Government are making available will provide the NHS in Wales with a increase of 5·2 per cent. on comparable expenditure plans for last year. In addition health authorities will keep an extra £17 million generated by cash-releasing cost improvements programmes and through income generation.

Over the lifetime of this Government, the resources made available for the NHS in Wales have grown by a staggering 71 per cent. over and above general inflation. Next year NHS net expenditure will increase to £684 per year for every man, woman and child in Wales—over £2,730 for an average family of four. That is a tremendous achievement.

Council Housing

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to extend competitive tendering to the management of council housing in the light of the representations received following the publication of the "Competing for Quality in Housing" consultation paper.

Mr. David Hunt: I have given very careful consideration to all the representations received. Two key issues emerged: timing relative to the proposed local government reorganisation in Wales and the apprehension that the consultation rights of tenants were not being improved.

With regard to local government reorganisation, I recognise the arguments that have been put forward for delaying the introduction of competitive tendering in housing management until reorganisation has taken place. I have therefore decided that the first contracts will be let from 1 April 1997. Nevertheless, it is my intention to charge the "shadow" unitary authorities in Wales with the task of preparing for the introduction of competitive tendering when they are established. I propose to issue further advice on timetabling, core housing management functions, contract size and the question of banding in due course.

As regards tenants' rights, over the last few years the Government have strongly promoted tenant consultation and participation. Provisions included in the Housing and Urban Development Bill would give tenants enhanced powers to influence the ways in which their homes are managed practically and continuously. The introduction of contractual and tendering arrangements will also dramatically increase the scope for tenant consultation and involvement. I look forward to responses on these issues in the light of the further consultation paper, "Tenant Involvement and the Right to Manage", shortly to be in circulation.

The issue of the client and contractor roles is a very important one. In resolving it, we shall in effect define what for many years to come may be the "core" housing functions of local authorities in respect of the homes they own. In due course, I shall publish a guidance note defining the core functions of local authority housing management not suitable for competitive tendering.

Car Leasing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many non-departmental public bodies had fully expensed executive car-leasing schemes in the year 1991-92; how many have revised them since; if he will issue updated guidelines on such schemes to all such bodies in Wales; if he will list which bodies had schemes which involve (a) free petrol and oil to executives benefiting, (b) no contribution to the leasing costs and (c) contributions of less than two sevenths of the total lease costs to the executives in the scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt [pursuant to his answer, 15 December 1992, c. 116]: I regret that the answer contained an error, the correct answer is as follows: One non-departmental public body, the Welsh Development Agency, had an executive car leasing scheme which in 1991-92 did not require repayments for personal mileage. Repayments for petrol and oil commenced from 1 April 1992. The Development Board for Rural Wales had a scheme which required no contribution to leasing costs for some executives, including the chief executive, and less than two sevenths from others. Details are given in the Comptroller and Auditor General's report on the DBRW's 1991-92 accounts, and this matter is being pursued by the Welsh Office. Guidance produced by the Treasury's central unit on purchasing on car contract hire or lease schemes was passed to Welsh non-departmental public bodies earlier this year.

ENVIRONMENT

Building Research Establishment

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 17 November, Official Report, column 119, what was the cost to the Exchequer of the visits of the chief executive of the Building Research Establishment to (a) the USA and (b) Finland during the last 12 months.

Mr. Baldry: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to Mr. Roger Courtney as chief executive of the Building Research Establishment.

Letter from R. Courtney to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 14 December 1992:

COSTS OF OVERSEAS VISITS

The Secretary of State has asked me to respond to your further question asking the costs to the Exchequer of two recent fact-finding visits abroad.

The visit to the National Institute for Standards and Technology took place on the return journey from a Board meeting in Mexico City of the International Council for Building Research Studies and Documentation (CIB). The two days that I spent in Washington entailed no extra air fare but cost £206·54 in subsistence and minor expenses.

The visit to the Technical Research Institute, Finland (VTT) was combined with attendance by invitation at a meeting of heads of national research institutes. The three day meeting cost a total of £881·09 in fares and other expenses.

Customs House, Dundee

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the contractors employed by the Government to carry out the recent refurbishment of the Customs house building in Dundee and the cost of each contract entered into.

Mr. Baldry: One contractor, Stewart McGlashen Ltd., was employed by the Property Services Agency in my Department. The total cost of the works, excluding fees and VAT, was £1·1 million.

Construction Subcontractors

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he intends to take to ensure that main contractors in the construction industry follow the Government's prompt payment policy with respect to payment to subcontractors.

Mr. Baldry: Contractual arrangements in the construction industry are particularly complex. The Government have announced their proposal for a general review of contracting and are seeking the co-operation of the industry. We are also seeking to develop improved provisions for Government contracts and already require companies, wishing to be added to the list of approved contractors for Government work, to give general undertakings on prompt payment.

Housing and Urban Development Bill

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list each consultation exercise which his Department is currently engaged in, in respect of the Housing and Urban Development Bill; and if he will in each case state the purpose of that consultation, the relevant clause of the Bill to which it relates, the bodies being consulted and the deadline for submissions to him.

Mr. Baldry: The various provisions in the Bill have been subject to extensive consultation. In addition, my Department is consulting now on the detailed operation of the proposed new right, contained in clause 109 of the Bill, for local authority tenants to receive compensation for improvements they carry out to their homes. The consultation paper, "Compensation for Tenants' Improvements", was issued jointly by the Department of the Environment and the Welsh Office on 4 December 1992. Responses are due by 22 January 1993.

My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State and the Secretary of State for Wales have today announced the publication of a further consultation paper entitled, "Tenant Involvement and the Right to Manage". This seeks views on arrangements for the proposed greater involvement of local authority tenants in housing management delegations—clause 114—and the proposed new right to manage for tenants who wish to assume direct responsibility for the management of their estates—clause 115. Responses are due by 26 February 1993. We also intend issuing consultation papers on the implementation of the proposed right to repair—clause 108—and powers relating to the provision of welfare services for tenants in local authority accommodation—clauses 110 to 112.

In addition, we are consulting on proposals for changes in the arrangements for voluntary transfers of local authority owned housing to housing associations. Should my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State decide to proceed with these proposals, legislation would be required. One option would be to provide for the latter by means of amendment to the Housing and Urban Development Bill. A consultation paper on the proposals entitled, "Local Authority Housing in England: Voluntary Transfers", was issued on 18 November 1992. Responses are due by 8 January 1993.

Lists of the bodies being consulted for each of the three current consultation exercises mentioned above have been placed in the library.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to publish a consultation paper on the new framework for tenant involvement and the right to manage in the Housing and Urban Development Bill.

Sir George Young: I have today, together with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, published a consultation paper entitled "Tenant Involvement and the Right to Manage". The consultation paper seeks views from interested parties on the Government's proposals to increase tenant involvement as part of the process of delegation of housing management to other organisations —including delegations made as a result of extending CCT to housing management—and on the new right to manage. Both proposals are fully in line with the citizens charter and represent one of the most significant enhancements of tenants' rights seen in recent times.

The Government's proposal will for the first time establish a framework—first, by good practice, but later, if need be, through regulations—for the most extensive package of consultation rights ever put before Parliament. Tenants will now be involved, through the process of housing management CCT, in drawing up the specification for the management of their estate, helping to select the managing organisation and monitoring its performance. The cornerstone of these measures is a new statutory right for council tenants to manage their own estates, which removes at a stroke, the obstacles which some reluctant authorities continue to put in the path of tenants who wish to manage things themselves.

These proposals will be seen as a watershed in the history of tenant participation in this country, and will I am sure be widely welcomed by all who read and reflect on the consultation paper.

The powers which will give effect to these proposals are contained in clauses 114 and 115 of the Housing and Urban Development Bill.

Copies of the consultation paper will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Private Rented Housing

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what initiatives he has taken during the last five years to revive the privately rented housing sector; what progress has been made as a result of these initiatives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: A number of initiatives have been taken during the past five years to revive the private rented sector.

Deregulation measures in the Housing Act 1988 were brought forward to stem the decline in the quality and supply of private rented accommodation. Landlords are now able to let property under new assured and assured shorthold tenancies at market rents. The 1990 private renters survey show that the number of new tenancies let increased by 50,000—4 per cent.—between 1988 and 1990.

The extension of the business expansion scheme to companies letting properties on assured tenancies has been very successful. It is estimated that over £1,200 million has been raised so far, providing about 20,000 additional homes to rent.

Under our housing associations as managing agents scheme—HAMA—funding over three years is being made available through the Housing Corporation's promotional and advisory grant regime, for at least 30 HAMA teams to be set up and running throughout England beginning early next year. This follows a successful pilot scheme with five associations during this year. Under HAMA a housing association provides a full management service for the property, encouraging landlords into the market by removing much of the hassle involved with lettings, and assisting local authorities in providing a good-quality, cost-effective means of executing their responsibilities to the statutory homeless. Selected housing associations were invited to put forward proposals in October. The successful housing associations will be informed in January 1993.

Our flats over shops scheme attracted bids from 210 local authorities in England applying for resources totalling £41 million in the year 1992-93, of which 57 received supplementary credit approvals totalling £5,047,500. Monitoring is now underway and the invitations to bid for a share of the £10 million available for 1993-94 have recently been issued. The Housing Corporation also provides resources in this area through its social housing over shops programme.

The "rent a room" scheme will encourage people to take in lodgers. The scheme applies to both owner occupiers and tenants who let rooms in their only or main house. Under the scheme, gross rental income of up to £3,250 a year from 1 April will be exempt from income tax.

Interim Development Orders

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department has on the number of applications for registration of interim development order permissions that have been received by each mineral planning authority in England and Wales; how many relate to sites in designated areas; what is the land area involved; and whether the permissions are active or dormant.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not held centrally. However, according to information supplied to my Department on 2 October 1992 by the County Planning Officers Society—CPOS—the national position in England and Wales is as follows.

Total applications, England	508
Total applications, Wales	86
Number of permissions dormant, England	198
Number of permissions dormant, Wales	43
Applications in designated areas, England	126
Applications in designated areas, Wales	39
Land area involved, England	[1]18,042
Land area involved, Wales	[1]2,651

[1] Hectares.

I have placed in the library of the House copies of tables supplied to my Department by the CPOS showing the above information in more detail and broken down by mineral planning authority.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department has on the number of applications for registration of interim development order permissions received by each mineral planning authority in England and Wales that have been accompanied by (a) an original, or certified true copy, certificate of interim development order permission, (b) an original, or certified true copy, plan of interim development order permission and (c) evidence of winning and working; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: This information is not held centrally.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the value of land presently held by each urban development corporation.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on Wednesday 8 July 1992, Official Report, column 253.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will take to ensure that local authorities are able to access ERDF money available within the United Kingdom structural fund programmes.

Mr. Robin Squire: On 30 June 1992 my Department issued to local authorities details of the 1992-93 arrangements for the treatment of ERDF grants through the "other services" block, which covers the generality of ERDF grants for which this Department is responsible. These arrangements ensure that local authorities will receive up to 100 per cent. of supplementary credit capital approvals to provide public expenditure cover for ERDF receipts. From 1993-94 onwards public expenditure cover will be provided for all forecast ERDF receipts.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will release details of how town and parish councils may benefit from new grant cover arrangements for ERDF-eligible projects under the RECHAR programmes.

Mr. Robin Squire: This matter is being discussed with other Departments and it is hoped that advice will be issued in the new year.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish revised guidance for private sector contributions to ERDF eligible projects.

Mr. Robin Squire: My Department is advising applicants that contributions from private bodies to the costs of schemes undertaken by public or semi-public sponsors may form part of the expenditure eligible for ERDF support to those schemes.

Coal Mining Areas

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how RECHAR 2 is expected to affect the level of central Government funding to those local authorities accountable to coal mining areas.

Mr. Robin Squire: No firm proposals have been received from the European Commission for a second series of RECHAR programmes.

Refugees

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial assistance will be given to local authorities who provide accommodation and other facilities to refugees from the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Robin Squire: As announced by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning on 16 November 1992, Official Report, column 54, we propose to make available a special grant to assist the small number of local authorities worst affected by the recent influx of displaced persons from the former Yugoslav republic. My Department will be writing to local authorities shortly in order to obtain information on which to base the grant.

Charities

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his conclusions on his guidance to local authorities on discretionary rate relief to charities and non-profit making bodies following his survey of local authorities' practices in 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Robin Squire: My hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) announced some of the results of our numerical analysis of the results of the survey on 5 November 1991, Official Report, column 17, and 16 December 1991, Official Report, column 69. They show that more relief was given to more recreational clubs in 1990-91 than in 1989-90. Although fewer other non-profit making bodies received relief, the class of property has reduced in size: in 1989-90 it included residential care, educational and welfare institutions which, on introduction of the community charge, lost eligibility for relief. For those still eligible, relief remained about the same level as in 1989-90.

We have no evidence from the survey that authorities are misusing, or indeed failing to use, their discretion. The objective is to give local authorities the chance to tailor the rates bills of a wide range of deserving ratepayers to the local services those organisations provide. These are matters that cannot be prescribed fairly at a national level and which are wholly suited to local decision.

Our guidance on discretionary rate relief appears to have been widely accepted and we have not been alerted to major flaws in it. We therefore do not feel that it needs to be amended. However, we are writing to all local authorities reminding them of the Department's guidance to treat each case on its merits.

Inner Cities

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the results of the recent external evaluation of the inner cities task forces programme.

Mr. Robin Squire: The evaluation of the task forces in Spitalfields, London, Chapeltown and Harehills, Leeds, and Hartlepool was undertaken by PA Cambridge Economic Consultants. Its report is published today. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

I am very pleased to see that this independent evaluation concludes

"In tackling severe people-related problems and deep-seated market failure in the worst part of our inner city areas, the task force programme has demonstrated imagination, flair and flexibility."

Edinburgh Summit

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he will be making concerning the siting of the European Environment Agency following the agreements made at the Edinburgh summit in relation to locations of other EC institutions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I have placed this subject on the agenda of the meeting of the Environment Council which is taking place in Brussels on 15 and 16 December. I will report on the outcome of that Council immediately thereafter.

Planning and Compensation Act 1991

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to implement proposals for extending environmental assessment to additional projects under the powers enacted in section 15 of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991.

Sir George Young: We received 142 responses to the consultation paper issued on 30 June 1992. A list of the responses has been sent to the Libraries of both Houses and copies of the responses have been placed in the Department of the Environment library at 2 Marsham street.

The proposals have been generally welcomed. There were no overall objections, and only seven objections to individual proposals. In the light of these responses my right hon. and learned Friend and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales propose to amend the Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988 to incorporate the seven new categories of project proposed in the consultation paper. Amending regulations, which will place minimal demands upon local planning authorities, will be laid in the new year and an explanatory circular will be issued.

Under the new arrangements, the following categories of project will be added to those in schedule 2 to the regulations, the effect of which will be to require environmental assessment—EA—where a particular proposal is likely to have significant environmental effects:

—Trout farming
—Water treatment plant
—Wind generators
—Motorway service areas; and service areas on other roads providing fuelling and restaurant facilities
—Coast protection works
—Golf courses

It is also proposed to amend schedule 1 to the regulations to include privately financed toll roads; the effect of this will be to require environmental assessment for all projects of this kind.

A number of comments were received on the indicative criteria to be included in accompanying guidance, to help authorities in determining whether to require EA for a particular schedule 2 project. These comments will be taken into account in preparing guidance to accompany the amending regulations. The guidance will stress, however, that the test of whether a schedule 2 project requires EA is, in all cases, whether the proposed development would be likely to have significant effects on the environment.

In addition to extending the scope of environmental assessment, we intend to make some technical amendments to clarify the application of the existing requirements of directive 85/337/EEC on environmental impact assessment, EIA. First, as proposed in the consultation paper, the developer will be required to deposit additional copies of the environmental statement with the Secretary of State; and a provision will require information supplementary to the environmental statement provided by the developer, in response to a formal request from the decision-making authority, to be advertised and forwarded to statutory consultees. Other changes will make clear the precise requirements of article 2(3) of the directive apply concerning exemptions; and require the competent authority to confirm in writing when notifying its decision that it has taken the environmental information into consideration.

Similar amendments are planned by other Government Departments in their regulations implementing directive 85/337, together with amendments to clarify the extent of the competent authority's discretion to require EIA for annex II projects. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland will bring forward their own proposals in due course.

Inland Revenue Rents

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the annual rents paid by the Inland Revenue to Property Holdings in respect of (a) Overgate house, Marketgait, Dundee, for Dundee 3 tax district, (b) 2 Court House square, Dundee for Dundee 1 tax district, (c) Overgate house, Marketgait, Dundee, for Dundee collection offices and (d) 2 Court House square, Dundee, for the Dundee tax inquiry centre and the total annual loss incurred by Property Holdings following the surrender of these properties by the Inland Revenue; to which new tenants the properties have been relet; and at what annual rents.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 15 December 1992]: The rent charges made by Property Holdings on Inland Revenue are as follows:

Overgate house, Dundee
Dundee 3 tax district—£54,936 per annum
Dundee collection—£41,952 per annum
3 Court House square, Dundee
Dundee tax district—£62,088 per annum
Dundee tax enquiry—£21,072 per annum

Negotiations are at an advanced stage on the reallocation of some 418m² of the space to be vacated at Court House square to the Benefits Agency, which will pay the same rent.

Consideration is still being given to the most cost effective options for disposal of the remaining space.

British Nuclear Fuels plc

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish all changes to the contracts between British Nuclear Fuels plc and overseas countries made since the original signing in relation to withdrawal from the thermal oxide reprocessing plant programme.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 11 December 1992]: I have been asked to reply.

Details of reprocessing contracts are a matter for the parties concerned. I understand from British Nuclear Fuels plc that none of its overseas customers has sought a change in its contracts to enable it to withdraw from reprocessing in the thermal oxide reprocessing plant.

NORTHERN IRELAND

University of Ulster

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been Government expenditure on buildings at each campus of the university of Ulster since 1984; and what is the number and value of the university capital projects projected from each campus between now and 1995-96.

Mr. Hanley: Government capital expenditure on buildings at each campus of the university of Ulster since 1984 is as follows:

	£ million
Magee	9·96
Jordanstown	0·15
Coleraine	—
Belfast	1·25

In addition, work has recently started on a £6 million extension at the Jordanstown campus, of which the Government, with EC assistance, are funding £5·34 million.

University estimates of capital requirements for each campus between now and 1995-96 are as follows:

	Magee	Jordanstown	Coleraine	Belfast	Total
A. New build[1]
Number of projects	3	4	—	1	8
Total value (£ million)	6·14	5·71	—	2·33	14·18
B. Restructuring[2]
Number of projects	—	2	1	1	4

	Magee	Jordanstown	Coleraine	Belfast	Total
Total value (£ million)	—	2·69	0·87	2·67	6·23

[1] Additional accommodation.
[2] Space adaptation.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he wil list for each of the four campuses of the university of Ulster the increment of student number increase betwen 1984-85 and 1990-91 and the projected increment of student number increase between 1990-91 and 1995-96.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is as follows:

Campus	Increase in full time equivalent student numbers 1984-85 to 1990-91	Projected[1] increase in full time equivalent student numbers 1990-91 to 1995-96
Belfast	207	106
Coleraine	761	1,189
Jordanstown	34	1,571
Magee	842	661

[1] University of Ulster planning figures.

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland show many faculty, department and administrative department headquarters are currently located on each of the four campuses of the university of Ulster.

Mr. Hanley: The university is administered as a unitary institution with its administrative headquarters on the Coleraine campus. Departments and faculties do not have specified campus headquarters. There is one exception, the faculty of art and design, which has a campus base in Belfast.

Privatisations

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to undertake public share flotation when privatising water and sewerage services in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: It is too early to say how the sale of water and sewerage services in Northern Ireland will take place. Following my announcement on 15 July of the Government's privatisation plans, the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has commissioned a feasibility study to consider a number of major issues in relation to privatisation, including the options for the method of sale.

Housing Grants

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how long it takes to process, at the Newry and Lisburn Housing Executive grant offices, an application under the Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 1992, for (a) an improvement grant, (b) a replacement grant and (c) a repair grant.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but the chief executive has advised me that, because the scheme is in its infancy, processing times have only been identified for two stages of the procedures. The time taken from the date a preliminary inquiry form is received until the applicant is told of his possible contribution to the work is about two weeks in both the Newry and Lisburn grant offices. If an applicant decides to proceed, the time taken for the inspection of his property to determine what work needs to be done and what work qualifies for grant aid is about four weeks in each office. A further four weeks is likely to be required to issue a schedule of works and a formal application form at which stage further progress rests with the applicant to complete the necessary documentation and return the application.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people made application for improvement, replacement and repair grant since 1 October under the Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 1992 at the Newry and Lisburn grant offices; and of these how many were refused and what were the reasons for refusals.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Executive, but the chief executive has advised me that 495 and 426 preliminary inquiry forms have been received in the Newry and Lisburn grant offices respectively. He has also advised me that it is not possible at this time to establish which grants have been claimed, as categories of grant can only be established after a property had been inspected. Precise numbers of cases refused are not yet available, but a refusal would only be issued at the preliminary inquiry stage where a property meets the statutory fitness standard.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were refused application forms for improvement grant and repair under the Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 1983 from 28 February to 30 September at the Newry and Lisburn grant offices.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Executive, but the chief executive has advised me that during the period 28 February to 30 September 1992 preliminary inquiries were refused by the executive in all offices throughout Northern Ireland. A record of inquiries refused was not kept.

RUC Road Crashes

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many RUC officers died in road crashes in each year since 1980, on duty and off duty; and how many were wearing seat belts.

Mr. Mates: The information for 1980 to 1985 is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Information for the years 1986 onwards is as follows:

Year	Killed	On duty	Off duty	Seatbelt usage: Not in use	Seatbelt usage: In use	Seatbelt usage: Not known
1986	7	—	7	7	—	—
1987	3	—	3	3	—	—
1988	8	—	8	7	1	—

Year	Killed	Seatbelt usage: On duty	Off duty	Not in use	In use	Not known
1989	6	2	4	4	—	2
1990	4	1	3	2	1	1
1991	5	—	5	5	—	—
1992[1]	2	—	2	1	—	1

[1] To 10 December.

Holding Centres

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to announce the appointment of an independent commissioner for the holding centres.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I am pleased to announce that I have today appointed Sir Louis Blom-Cooper QC as independent commissioner for the holding centres. Sir Louis is a highly respected legal figure who will bring considerable experience to the post. The principal role of the commissioner will be to provide further reassurance that persons suspected of involvement in terrorism who are detained in the holding centres are fairly treated and that the wide-ranging statutory and administrative safeguards already in place are being properly applied. A copy of the commissioner's terms of reference will be placed in the Library. Sir Louis' appointment as commissioner will be for three years in the first instance. He will take up his duties early in the new year.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cumulative amount of extra spending over and above ordinary uprating on (a) supplementary benefit and income support child rates, (b) the family premium and (c) family credit in gross and net terms since 1979.

Mr. Burt: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, the sum total of extra help given to low-income families since the 1988 reforms will, from next April, be worth around £1 billion a year.

Personal Pensions

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the average annual earnings of those who have contracted out of the state earnings-related pension scheme to take out personal pensions.

Miss Widdecombe: The mean annual earnings of United Kingdom personal pension holders in the tax year 1990-91, the latest year for which figures are available, was about £10,500.

Note: The estimate is based on a sample of Inland Revenue end of year returns.

Mothers

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his policy towards encouraging mothers to stay at home.

Mr. Burt: The Government's policy is that mothers should generally be treated equally, whether they decide to stay at home or not.

Retirement Incomes

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Mr. Bowden) of 6 November, Official Report, columns 462-65, if he will break down the figures in order to distinguish between the retirement incomes of husbands and wives, single men and single women respectively.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is in the table:

Receipt of occupational pensions

Group	Percentage with an occupational pension	Mean amount of occupational pension for those in receipt (£ per week)	Median amount of occupational pension for those in receipt (£ per week)
Single men aged 65+	63	44·80	26·40
Single women aged 60+	46	38·00	21·00
Men in pensioner couples	67	65·00	31·60
Women in pensioner couples	15	28·20	16·20

Notes:
1. Estimates are based on data from "Occupational Pension Schemes 1987", a survey by the Government Actuary (HMSO) and the 1988 Family Expenditure Survey.
2. Pension amounts at 1988 levels.
3. Pensioner couples are defined as couples in which the husband is over state pension age. The figures will therefore include some women aged under 60 and exclude some women who have reached state pension age.

Family Credit

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest take-up figure for family credit in (a) Strathclyde, (b) Scotland, (c) England and Wales and (d) the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Recent research by the Policy Studies Institute, commissioned by the Department, has estimated family credit take-up in Great Britain 1991 as 70 per cent. by expenditure and 64 per cent. by caseload. Figures broken down by region are not available.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of families claiming family credit in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole which are (i) one-parent families and (ii) two-parent families; what is the number of children in each category of families; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The number of families claiming family credit, as at the end of April 1992, the latest date for which information is available, is as follows:

	Two-parent families	One-parent families	Total
Strathclyde
With 1 child	2,500	6,600	9,100
With 2 children	3,680	3,640	7,320

	Two-parent families	One-parent families	Total
With 3 children	2,500	1,200	3,700
With 4 children	1,060	180	1,240
Total	9,740	11,620	21,360
Scotland
With 1 child	5,220	13,940	19,160
With 2 children	8,500	7,340	15,840
With 3 children	5,280	2,460	7,740
With 4 children	2,700	500	3,200
Total	21,700	24,240	45,940

Note:
Source: 5 per cent sample of family credit recipients on 30 April 1992. Some values may be based on a small number of observations.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of families claiming family credit in (a) 1990, (b) 1991 and (c) the most recent date for the current year in (i) Strathclyde and (ii) Scotland.

Mr. Burt: The number of families receiving family credit at the end of April 1990, April 1991 and April 1992, the latest date for which information is available, is as follows:

	April 1990	April 1991	April 1992
Strathclyde	16,840	18,900	21,360
Scotland	37,160	41,060	45,940

Note:
Source: 5 per cent sample of family credit recipients. Some values may be based on a small number of observations.

Family Support

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many two-parent families are in receipt of (a) income support, (b) family credit and (c) disability working allowance; and for each benefit how many two-parent families are estimated to include a qualifying child for the purposes of the Child Support Act 1991.

Mr. Burt: The number of two-parent families in receipt of the specified benefits is contained in the table.

	Number
Income support	403,000
Family credit	215,000
Disability working allowance	478

On the best information available, the number of two-parent families in receipt of the specified benefits who are estimated to include a qualifying child for the purposes of the Child Support Act 1991 are contained in the table.

	Number
Income support	34,000
Family credit	17,000
Disability working allowance	38

Notes:
1. The figures for the numbers of two-parent families in receipt of income support and family credit are taken from the income support statistics annual inquiry 1991.
2. Figures are rounded to the nearest thousand.

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate (a) the savings in income support expenditure which will be achieved as a result of increased payments of child support maintenance and (b) the savings if a disregard were to be introduced into income support for child maintenance at the rate of (i) £5 and (ii) £15, in the first year of implementation and the following three years.

Mr. Burt: Best available estimates are for the long run. As stated in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland) on 30 November at columns 4-5, we expect that as a result of the child support initiative absent parents will, in the long run, contribute around £600 million to the maintenance of their children in families on income supprt. Latest estimates of the long-run costs of a maintenance disregard in income support are £115 million for a £5 disregard and £335 million for a £15 disregard.

Severe Hardship Payments

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many 16 and 17-year-olds awaiting a youth training place are in receipt of severe hardship payments.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the form requested.

The average length of award of severe hardship provision is eight weeks, but it is possible for more than one claim to be made in this period. The total number of claims in any eight week period may therefore be greater than the total number of people claiming.

During the eight-week period ending 4 December 1992, 13,000 successful claims have been made.

Disability Allowances

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when Miss Ayesha Weeks of 11 Champernowne, Modbury, Ivybridge, South Devon, will know the result of her application for disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 15 December 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking when Miss Ayesha Weeks will know the result of her application for Disability Living Allowance (DLA).

A decision has been made on Miss Weeks' latest claim for DLA. I have replied separately, and in greater detail, about the case.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy is also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to start paying disability living allowance and personal carer's allowance to Mrs. Patricia Allen awarded to her from 8 August and 6 April, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write shortly to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Bob Cryer, dated 15 December 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking when Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and personal carer's allowance will be paid to Mrs. Patricia Allen.

I can confirm that action has now been completed on Mrs. Allen's case. I have replied to you separately, and in greater detail, about the case.

Clearly Mrs. Allen's claim has not been handled with the efficiency I would expect and I offer my sincere apologies to her for the inconvenience this must have caused. My letter of 19 October 1992 to all MPs explained the problems the Agency has faced since the successful launch of DLA and the positive steps taken to improve the situation.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

DEFENCE

Adriatic Sea

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the co-operation between the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and the Western European Union naval forces in the Adriatic.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: NATO and WEU naval forces are operating in the Adriatic to monitor and enforce compliance with the arms embargo against the whole of the former Yugoslavia and the trade sanctions against Serbia and Montenegro. There is full-co-operation and co-ordination between the two forces, including communication links between the two commanders at sea and daily contact between the staffs of the two organisations ashore.

Research and Technology Development

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what examination his Department has made of the implications of articles 130f to 130p, proposed to be added to the treaty of Rome under the treaty on European union, on research and technology development in the military sector.

Mr. Aitken: The Ministry of Defence has made a thorough examination of articles 130f to 130p and is fully aware of their implications on military research and technology development.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what outstanding debts his Department has with British Nuclear Fuels in regard to the storage and treatment of radioactive waste, and decommissioning of nuclear plant, as a result of contracts carried out for his Department by British Nuclear Fuels Ltd.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has no such debts.

Historic Buildings

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the historic buildings in England, Wales and Scotland in armed forces use.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are 1,020 buildings listed as of historical or architectural interest on the Defence estate, or which are occupied by the Ministry of Defence through arrangements with Department of Environment, property holdings.

Information about which are occupied and by whom is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Prisoners-of-War

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what documents his Department holds regarding experiments conducted upon prisoners-of-war of the Japanese of a biological and chemical nature.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: After a number of thorough searches during the last seven years, no documents which include evidence of Japanese biological or chemical experiments on British prisoners-of-war have been found within the Ministry of Defence archives.

Hong Kong

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to increase the number of service personnel in Hong Kong.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Force levels in Hong Kong, and contingency plans for the reinforcement of the garrison, are kept under regular review.

Maintenance Work, Harrogate

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of maintenance and improvement works to his Department's establishment at St. George's road, Harrogate, in each of the last three years; what current expenditure is to be undertaken; and for what purpose.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The cost of maintenance and improvement works to the Ministry of Defence establishment at St. George's road, Harrogate, over the years 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 was £1·076 million, £2·227 million and £1·140 million respectively. For 1992-93 the cost of maintenance is expected to be £0·741 million.

War Widows

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has instituted a study into the practicality of allowing war widows who remarry to have an automatic right to the restoration of war widow's pension if they are widowed a second time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: War widow's pensions are a matter for the Department of Social Security. In addition, the occupational pension scheme for the armed forces includes corresponding provision for those widows who are eligible to be awarded a pension which, if the husband's death is accepted as being attributable to his service, is known as an attributable forces family pension. The widow's entitlement to that pension, or any other type of widow's pension payable under the scheme, ceases in the event of remarriage except to the extent that there is any residual entitlement to a guaranteed minimum pension.

The scheme rules do, however, permit a widow's pension to be restored to payment, as a matter of discretion, if the subsequent marriage comes to an end. Normal practice is that restoration would be agreed if a widow is considered to be worse off on second widowhood, without her previous pension, than when she was originally widowed and received that pension.

These arrangements have reecently been reviewed, to consider whether it would be approprite to make restoration of payment automatic upon second widowhood or other termination of the further marriage. It has, however, been concluded that the existing discretionary arrangements, under which service widows can have a reasonable degree of assurance that their pension will be restored if there is a need, but which do not commit the Department to payments from public funds where there is no demonstrable need, should continue to apply.

Bosnia

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether ZB298 mortar locating radar and artillery sound ranging equipment has been made available to the British forces in Bosnia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The ZB298 was a ground surveillance radar and did not have a mortar locating capability; it is no longer in service with the British Army. Mortar locating radars and artillery sound ranging equipment have not been deployed to Bosnia. Given the terrain and mobile nature of the tasks undertaken by UNPROFOR troops, such equipment would be of negligible utility.

Special Safety Organisation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the role and function of his Department's special safety organisation.

Mr. Aitken: The title "Special Safety Organisation" was formerly used to refer to elements of what is now the Ministry of Defence's Nuclear Accident Response Organisation, the role and function of which were detailed in the answer given to the hon. Gentleman on 6 November at column 534.

Heavy Duty Vehicles

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the truck cargo heavy duty vehicles recently delivered to his Department have fulfilled the requirements of their design specification.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The vehicles have met the specification in all essential respects and have been accepted into service.

Waste Materials (Burning)

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 10 December, Official Report, column 798, if he will give details of the strictly controlled conditions under which fire fighting training is carried out, under the exemptions granted to his Department from the statutory nuisance provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Aitken: The defence fire services (Def FS) are required under the terms of the Health and Safety at Work etc., Act to provide MOD's firefighters with realistic training on real fires in a controlled environment. In line with MOD's policy on the protection of the environment, the Def FS have issued strict policy guidelines to limit the numbers of fires conducted for training purposes as well as stating that only uncontaminated fuels should be used in such exercises. The level of pollutants released by such fires, both at the central training establishment and at unit level is minimal, and is covered under MOD's exemptions to the Environmental Protection Act 1990. New practices, such as fuel efficient training aids, and fuel separators are further improving the situation. Nevertheless, it remains essential that actual aircraft carcass fires are tackled in training, since there is no acceptable substitute for this practice.

Low Flying

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints he has received concerning low-flying military aircraft in the county of Powys in each of the last three years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The numbers of inquiries or complaints about low flying training which my Department received in each of the last three years from addresses in the county of Powys are as follows:

Year	Number
1990	223
1991	108
[1]1992	195

[1] Up to 30 November 1992.

Devonport Management Ltd

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why he has instructed Devonport Management Ltd to provide a copy of its detailed development plans to his Department for onward transmission to Mott MacDonald Ltd.

Mr. Aitken: Plans for the proposed development of nuclear support facilities at both royal dockyards have been made available to Mott MacDonald in its capacity as the Ministry of Defence's independent civil engineering consultants on this matter.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the detailed plans of Devonport Management Ltd for the redevelopment of docks at Devonport to refit Trident submarines have been passed by his Department to the management of Babcock Thorn Ltd or their agents.

Mr. Aitken: No.

Rosyth and Devonport Dockyards

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what work is being carried out by Mott MacDonald for his Department in relation to submarine refitting at the Rosyth and Devonport dockyards.

Mr. Aitken: The Ministry of Defence has engaged Mott MacDonald, a firm of civil engineering consultants, to provide independent professional advice in relation to the design and build stages of Babcock Thorn Ltd's proposal for a modification of the nuclear submarine refitting facility at Rosyth, and Devonport Management Ltd's proposal for the redevelopment of existing docks at Devonport.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions his Department has requested Devonport and Rosyth to submit best and final offers for the refit of Britain's nuclear submarines.

Mr. Aitken: Both dockyard management companies have, at their own initiative, made revisions to the proposals which they originally submitted to the Ministry of Defence in November last year. They have both been given equal treatment including a recent and final opportunity to revise their respective proposals if they so wish.

Gleneagles Nuclear Planning Meeting

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the items discussed at the Gleneagles nuclear planning meeting on 20 and 21 October;

(2) whether he discussed (a) the first use of nuclear weapons and (b) ballistic missile defences at the Gleneagles nuclear planning group meeting on 20 and 21 October.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the final communiqué of the NATO nuclear planning group meeting, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the total costs incurred by hosting the NATO nuclear planning group meetings at Gleneagles on 20 and 21 October; and which Department are meeting this cost.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Although it is too early to provide a precise final figure, we estimate the cost to Ministry of Defence votes of hosting the NATO nuclear planning group meeting at Gleneagles at some £1·5 million.

Helicopters

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 30 November, Official Report, column 61, which aircraft carrier will receive the Merlin EH101 helicopter first and when; which helicopters will be deployed on the aircraft carrier not due to receive the Merlin EH101 helicopter from the batch ordered last year; and what assessment he has made of the operational consequences.

Mr. Aitken: Plans are not yet finalised as to which aircraft carrier will be the first to receive the Merlin EH101 helicopter. Sea King helicopters will continue to be deployed on aircraft carriers until they are replaced by the Merlins. The operational consequences of the sequential introduction of the Merlin EH101 were taken into account in deciding how to introduce Merlin into Royal Navy service.

Refit and Repair Contracts

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 30 November, Official Report, column 59, if he will set out the measurements used by his Department of total naval production load; what proportion of this load and of total Royal Navy refit, repair and maintenance of expenditure was accounted for in 1991-92 by nuclear refit, repair and maintenance; and what proportion of load and of expenditure arose from contracts awarded overseas.

Mr. Aitken: The total naval production load comprises the estimated industrial work required to complete each project in the planned refit and docking programme expressed as man weeks. In 1991-92, the proportions of the total naval production load and of total expenditure attributed to nuclear refit, repair and maintenance work were 17·1 and 26·1 per cent., respectively. The programme attributed to contracts awarded overseas were 0·8 and 0·28 per cent., respectively. The overseas expenditure arose from work carried out on vessels deployed overseas, for which it would have been operationally impossible or uneconomic to bring the vessels to the United Kingdom.

Indonesian Nationals

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Indonesian nationals are or have been training in British military establishments (a) currently and (b) in the last three years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Indonesian nationals are attending, and have attended, a range of developmental and technical training courses in British military establishments. Details of the training, including numbers involved, are confidential between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Indonesia.

Christmas Parties

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what authorisation he has given for expenditure on Christmas party festivities in his Department and in other parts of the armed services based in Great Britain.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Department has clear guidelines covering the use of official funds on hospitality which is required to be in the direct defence interest. These rules are not relaxed at Christmas time or at any other time of the year.

Bill Payments

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to improve his Ministry's bill payment service for defence contractors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: I am pleased to report that last month the Ministry of Defence accounts office in Liverpool introduced an improved bill payment service for defence contractors. This marks the achievement of one of the targets which was set when the Directorate General of Defence Accounts was launched as a defence support agency in April last year.

Under the new system, defence contractors have the opportunity to present their claims to the Liverpool office every fortnight and payment is made directly to their bank accounts. Previously contractors were paid by cheque every four weeks.

Fortnightly billing started on 2 November, and already a total of almost 10,000 payments worth £750 million have been paid to 5,000 companies under the new arrangements. Next year the Ministry of Defence expects to pay over £12 billion to nearly 20,000 contractors.

The Government recognise the importance of healthy cash flow and have declared their intention to improve payment standards. I am sure that the new payment arrangements will be welcomed by the many thousands of contractors, including all those small businesses, who provide services to the Ministry of Defence, and who will no longer suffer the risk of delays in payment by cheque through the post.

Army Training

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further progress has been made in restructuring the Army's training base in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Plans for the rationalisation of the Army training organisation were outlined in Cmnd 1595. I announced on 10 March at column 500 our proposals to improve basic training for adults and young soldiers, juniors and apprentices at a reduced number of larger, more efficient establishments. Consultation with the trades unions is now complete and I can confirm that all adult and young soldier training will be undertaken in five new Army training regiments to be formed at Glencorse, Lichfield, Bassingbourn, Pirbright and Winchester.

To enable these changes, specialist infantry training will move to interim locations at Ouston, Strensall and Catterick. It is also our intention that Royal Signals training should in due course be concentrated at Blandford and this will permit specialist infantry training to be concentrated at Catterick in the long term. As a result of the reorganisation of infantry training, we shall not now need to use Crickhowell for this purpose in the interim, but it will continue to provide training facilities for the TA as at present. Infantry training at Brecon will also be increased with the formation of a new tactics and skill at arms wing. This will result in an increase of one third in student numbers; some additional civilian staff will also be required. This will require substantial new investment on student accommodation over the next few years.

Having examined further a pilot scheme for the training of juniors, we have concluded that in the light of the introduction of the single school-leaving point in 1995, the junior entry no longer justifies the very substantial investment involved. The Army must, however, retain access to the school-leaver market and we therefore now propose to introduce a single entry for the Army, subsuming all those who would previously have been recruited as juniors, young soldiers and adults. They will undertake their basic training at one of the five Army training regiments. As a result, the establishments at Bramcote and Harrogate need not now be converted to Army junior leader regiments. We will be examining the potential for alternative defence uses for these establishments although none has yet been found. It is not therefore possible to say what might be the detailed implications for civilian staff. There will be smaller changes at Winchester, although that establishment will continue with its main role as an Army training regiment.

The introduction of the single school-leaving point also has implications for the concept of a single Army technical college, which I announced on 5 June at column 672. We now propose that apprentices will undertake their military leadership and technical training at their respective arm and service centres. It will, therefore, not now be necessary to establish the Army technical college at Arborfield and Aldershot, but REME and Army catering corps apprentices will continue to be trained at these sites. I am pleased to say that since announcing the end of apprentice training at Chepstow, further study has identified the barracks there as a suitable location for an infantry battalion returning to the United Kingdom. With some 650 men, up to half of whom will have families, the positive economic impact will be considerable. The necessary building work will begin on the cessation of apprentice training in 1994, allowing occupation in 1996.

Full consultation with the trades unions on these proposals will take place in the normal way before final decisions are taken.

We have also laid down the principles for further restructuring the training organisation and improving special provision to arm and service and career training. Where possible, such training will be concentrated in single centres with any further training done at the minimum number of wings. We shall also examine the content of specialist and career training to identify the potential for market testing and contractorisation; areas of commonality; and the scope for savings between arms and services, as well as between the Army and other services. Until detailed plans are brought forward, it will not be possible to say what will be the precise implications for either civilian staff or training establishments. We shall invite the trades unions to contribute to specific areas of study and shall, of course, undertake formal consultation in the normal way when appropriate.

TRANSPORT

River Services, London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has held with private sector operators about commercial passenger river services in London; and if he will make a statement on the future of such services.

Mr. Norris: I have today announced the establishent of a River Thames working group which I will chair to undertake a thorough study of the use of the river for transport. The terms of reference for the study are:

1. Establish what present use is made of the tidal part of the River Thames upstream of Southend and Sheerness for transport purposes and by whom.
2. Establish what constraints presently deter or inhibit transport operators from developing those uses.
3. Establish the likely potential for the development of transport use of the river, taking into consideration the interests of other river users, the views of riparian boroughs, its linkage to the existing transport network and all relevant safety issues raised in the Hayes report on river safety.
4. Consider how far it is in the overall interest to develop the transport usage of the river taking into account the environmental, leisure, amenity and planning aspects of any such development.
5. Identify the scope for private sector development which would assist the achievement of the river's transport potential for freight and passenger traffic.

I have invited the Port of London Authority, London First, the London Docklands development corporation, the London planning advisory committee and London Transport to be members.

I will also be consulting a broad range of bodies with responsibility for or interests in the river. I would also like to hear from other people who have proposals for increased use of the river.

Kent Coast Line

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects orders to be placed for the construction of new trains to serve travellers on the Kent coast line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Chancellor's autumn statement enables BR to order on lease an additional £150 million of new rolling stock over the next three years. Only the lease payments—as opposed to the full cost of the rolling stock—will count against BR's external financing limit. BR is currently considering which rolling stock orders would be suitable for leasing. It is for it to decide priorities. However, the options include new rolling stock for Kent coast.

While the Government's preference is that the orders should be placed over the next three years, they are prepared to consider flexibility on this timing.

As part of their plans for the privatisation of British Rail, the Government wish to see the private sector becoming involved in the procurement of rolling stock as quickly as possible. A consultation document on this will be issued in the new year.

Royal Train

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions, and for how long, the royal train has been used by members of the royal family in each of the last three years.

Mr. Freeman: The royal train has been used by members of the royal family as follows, in the last three years:

1990

6 journeys	– daytime
27 journeys	– single overnight stay
2 journeys	– two overnight plus one day
1 journey	– single overnight plus 1 day
36 occasions

1991

2 journeys	– daytime
39 journeys	– single overnight stay
2 journeys	– two overnight plus one day
7 journeys	– single overnight plus one day
50 occasions

1992

2 journeys	– daytime
33 journeys	– single overnight stay
2 journeys	– single overnight plus one day
37 occasions

Airlines

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the criteria on which take off or landing slots are awarded between airlines; and whether he will seek an agreement on slots which will ensure that the allocation of take off and landing rights at airports is such as to promote fair opportunities for smaller and newer airlines as well as larger and older ones.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 9 December 1992]: Slots are allocated between airlines by airport co-ordinators, according to guidelines laid down by the International Air Transport Association and used world wide. With regard to the regulation on slot allocation recently agreed by the Council of Ministers, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) on Thursday 10 December, at column 784. The regulation strikes a balance between protecting the legitimate interests of established carriers and providing opportunities for new entrants.

Marine Salvage

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what grounds a load time exemption certificate was issued to the Golden Eye salvage vessel.

Mr. Norris: The Golden Eye was issued with a United Kingdom load line exemption certificate after being satisfactorily surveyed in accordance with the Merchant Shipping (Load Line) Rules 1968.

Private Finance

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what areas of his Department's responsibilities he has introduced, or may introduce, private finance; and if he will describe in each case the procedures by which private finance is sought.

Mr. MacGregor: We are already promoting private sector investment in transport through:

—privatisation in several transport areas:
—turning over complete projects to the private sector (as in the case of the channel tunnel and the Queen Elizabeth II bridge at Dartford);
—developer contributions (such as I am negotiating for the Jubilee line extension).

I very much welcome the changes relating to the use of private finance announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his autumn statement. I have recently been developing plans to encourage more private sector involvement in joint ventures and other initiatives, particularly in relation to major road and rail schemes. I am also keen to encourage the private sector to come forward with its own proposals.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Green Issues

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food who in his Department has been appointed to oversee and develop green issues; how many civil servants have been allocated new or additional responsibilities to deal with the management and development of green issues; and what additional allocation of resources has been made to support programmes related to green issues in his Department.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend the Minister is the Department's green Minister and has overall responsibility for environmental aspects of all the Department's policies. All staff are expected to have regard to environmental considerations in discharging their duties. Forecasts of the numbers of staff and resources allocated to the programmes comprising the Ministry's aim "To enhance the rural and marine environment" are set out in the "Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and Intervention Board Departmental Report on the Government's Expenditure Plans 1992-93 to 1994-95" Cm 1903, February 1992. A copy is in the Library of the House.

Agricultural Land

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what study he has made of the restrictions on agricultural land ownership, farm size maximum restrictions, agricultural land sales and inheritance, in each of the member states of the European Community.

Mr. Curry: None.

Winston Grange

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which companies sponsored the agriculture and environment exhibition held at Winston Grange on 28 September.

Mr. Gummer: More than 70 companies and other organisations assisted with or sponsored exhibits at the show which demonstrated the best of the British agricultural and food industries.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date instructions were given to the Agricultural Development Advisory Service to carry out an assessment of works to be carried out on land at Winston Grange.

Mr. Gummer: The Agricultural Development Advisory Service was asked on 15 May 1992 to carry out the assessment and supervision of a conservation area exhibit.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what contribution was made to the cost of the assessment of works carried out at Winston Grange in September by the owner of those premises; and on what date.

Mr. Gummer: None. The assessment and supervision work contributed to creating a conservation area exhibit which demonstrated the central theme of the informal Council.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment work, and at what value, was carried out on land at Winston Grange in the period prior to 28 September at public expense.

Mr. Gummer: The assessment work related to a conservation area exhibit. The cost in staff time was covered by existing arrangements under which the Agricultural Development Advisory Service provides services in support of the Ministry's policies on the environment and conservation.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what contribution was made by Hillsdown Holdings plc to the cost of works on land at the Winston show organised by his Department in September.

Mr. Gummer: Hillsdown Holdings plc sponsored the conservation area exhibit at the show. Their contribution amounted to £2,615·91 which included the cost of hiring a marquee.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what purposes the agriculture and environment exhibition sponsored by independent companies was arranged at Winston Grange in September.

Mr. Gummer: The theme of the informal Council of Agriculture Ministers was the importance of integrating conservation and environmental protection into agricultural policy. It contributed to a constructive discussion at Cambridge of ways of moving to a fuller integration of environmental protection into the common agricultural policy.

Bee-keeping

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many bee officers there were in (a) 1986, (b) 1988, (c) 1990 and (d) at the latest available date.

Mr. Curry: The information is as follows:

	Number
1986	64
1988	30
1990	34
1992	37

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the reasons for the closure of the bee-keeping department at Sparsholt agricultural college.

Mr. Boswell: I have been asked to reply.

The decision to close the bee-keeping unit at Sparsholt agricultural college with effect from 31 December 1992 was taken in June 1992 by the governors of the college because the courses had ceased to be financially viable. The decision was reached following consultation with bee-keeping associations, which failed to identify any other sources of financial support.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much funding has been allocated to action in relation to bee-keeping problems in the current year and each of the next three years; and if he will give a breakdown of the applications to which the amount injected into bee-keeping problems has put in the current year.

Mr. Curry: The expenditure necessary depends on the incidence of bee disease and may vary considerably from budget. We had the first recorded incident of Varroa in the United Kingdom in April 1992 and its effect has been as follows:

	Budget 1992-93 £	Estimated Expenditure 1992-93 £
Central Science Laboratory	350,000	565,000
Regions (including bees officers)	510,000	610,000
HQ (including medicines and printing)	50,000	155,000
Research and Development	136,000	186,000

Expenditure in future years will depend on the level of bee disease and decisions on how directive 92/65/EEC legislating on animals not covered by specific requirements under directive 90/425/EEC will be implemented in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what expert advice is available to him on the spread of the parasitic mite Varroa Jacobsoni.

Mr. Curry: Our principal source of expert advice is the Central Science Laboratory and in particular the national bee unit at Luddington.

Bacteria Collections

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on transitional funding for the National Collections of Marine and Industrial Bacteria.

Mr. Curry: The Ministry has agreed to provide a further £140,000 in support of the work of the National Collections of Industrial and Marine Bacteria Ltd for 1993-94. This will provide the opportunity for an assessment to be made of the wider long-term value of the collections as a national scientific resource.

Private Finance

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in what areas of his Department's responsibilities he has introduced, or may introduce, private finance; and if he will describe in each case the procedures by which private finance is sought.

Mr. Curry: Following the announcement of the private finance initiative by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the autumn statement, the Department is considering how the initiative could be applied within its area of responsibility, on the basis of the guidance which has been published by HM Treasury.

Net Limitation Order

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has taken a decision on the National Rivers Authority's north-east coast net limitation order; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: After careful consideration, I have decided that the new order restricting the number of licences which may be issued for netting for salmon off the Northumbrian and Yorkshire coasts should be confirmed with minor drafting amendments. It will take effect from 22 January 1993.

In reaching this decision, I took into account the representations made about the future of the north-east coast drift net fishery and the formal objections to the order that had been sent to me. Many of these argued that the fishery should be phased out over a much shorter time scale than that which would result from natural wastage. However, the order proposed by the NRA was consistent with the conclusions of the report on salmon net fisheries presented to Parliament in October 1991. In that report, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and I noted that the review on which it was based had not produced any evidence that the drift net fishery posed an immediate threat to salmon stocks and thus any justification for depriving existing licence holders of their licences at a stroke. We concluded, however, that it would aid and improve the management of individual east coast salmon stocks if the fishery were to come to an end. And we recommended that, in order to avoid hardship, this should be done gradually by reducing the number of drift net licences as the licence holders left the fishery. The NRA's order provides for this.

The Government remain firmly committed to the phasing out of the drift net fishery. The effect of the new order will be monitored and the levels of drift net catches kept under close review.

Single Market

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in completing the single market in the areas for which his Department has responsibility.

Mr. Curry: Considerable progress has been made to complete the single market within the agriculture, fisheries and food sectors. Most internal frontier controls will be removed from 1 January 1993 and there will be some substantial changes in the way trade between member states is carried out.

For trade in live animals, regulations will be made implementing in Great Britain the live animals veterinary checks directives—90/425/EEC and 91/496/EEC—from 1 January 1993. Under these arrangements, veterinary checks on intra-Community trade will be eliminated at internal EC frontiers on certain live animals and genetic material. A system of intensified checks at points of origin and spot checks at points of destination will be substituted for the present border controls. All consignments, when entering intra-EC trade, should be accompanied by health certificates or other documentation as required under the EC rules. Live animals entering the Community from third countries may only enter through an approved border inspection post and must be subject to documentary, identity and physical checks before entering free circulation within the Community.

In order to protect the health of the United Kingdom bee population, imports of bees are limited to countries of high bee health status free from varroasis. Ministers will be reviewing these controls in the light of agreement on EC bee health controls under directive 92/65/EEC, legislation on animals not covered by specific requirements under directive 90/425/EEC, due to come into operation on 1 January 1994. Until alternative measures are approved by the Commission under this directive, existing United Kingdom health measures will remain in force.

On the protection of animals in transport, further Community rules remain to be adopted to supplement those in directive 91/628/EEC which applies from 1 January 1993. As announced in the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Mr. Bowden) on 10 December at columns 762-63, existing national measures will be maintained in the areas concerned pending further decisions in the Community. Our controls on trade in horses will remain in place.

Our existing measures of protection against the introduction of rabies will continue unchanged, as my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food made clear in a written answer to a parliamentary question on 16 June at columns 455-56.

Border checks for animal health and public health purposes on meat and animal products will cease at the internal borders of the Community on 1 January 1993. Under directive 89/662/EEC, as amended, they will be replaced by a system of checks on the products at their origin, backed up with non-discriminatory checks when the products reach their destination. Under directive 90/675/EEC, as amended, imports of meat and animal products from outside the Community will be checked at the first point of entry into the Community. Where animal health and public health rules are still unharmonised, member states will retain their own trade rules. The United Kingdom will continue to retain its high standards of protection against the introduction of exotic animal diseases pending full harmonisation. New regulations to implement two directives on the hygiene conditions for production and placing on the market of fishery—directive 91/493/EEC—and shellfish—directive 91/492/EEC—products come into effect on 1 January 1993. The directives set common standards of handling and quality, eliminating trade barriers and providing assurance to the consumer.

Regulations to implement directive 91/67/EEC on the animal health conditions governing the placing on the market of farmed fish and shellfish will be laid before Parliament shortly. These will contain measures designed to prevent the introduction and spread of serious diseases and will provide important safeguards for the future health and well-being of our fish and shellfish stocks.

All major decisions necessary for the introduction of the single market on plant health, including a plant passport, have now been taken and published. Implementation is planned from 1 June 1993. This gives growers a short breathing-space to prepare a smooth introduction of the new regime, which represents a significant reduction in the burdens of intra-Community trade.

The introduction of the single market will not, however, fundamentally affect the veterinary medicines sector. Under Community law, a United Kingdom product licence will still be required before any veterinary medicinal product can be imported and marketed in the United Kingdom, whether from an EC member state or not. Detailed arrangements will shortly be published by the Veterinary Medicines Directorate.

The Community's food law harmonisation programme removes barriers to trade, sets high standards of food safety and improves food labelling, thus offering important benefits to industry and consumers. The foundations of the single market in foodstuffs are firmly in place. The main framework directives on labelling, additives, flavourings, contact materials, special dietary foods and food inspection have already been adopted. The Council agreed a common position on contaminants in September and is expected to do the same with the food hygiene directive, the key United Kingdom priority in this area, on 17 and 18 December. A common position is also expected on additional enforcement measures which I regard as particularly important for the achievement of a level playing field. Although some issues remain to be resolved, the harmonisation programme is well established and the single market in foodstuffs will operate effectively from the start of 1993.

Interim measures for the banana market will be necessary from 1 January 1993 to ensure that the United Kingdom can continue to fulfil its obligations under the Lomé convention to our traditional suppliers in the Commonwealth Caribbean. These measures will in due course be superseded by Community-wide arrangements for the banana market.

Under our interim measures, a DTI import licence will still be required for dollar bananas, including those in free circulation in another member state, after 1 January 1993. It will continue to be an offence to import dollar fruit into the United Kingdom without a licence. Her Majesty's Customs and Excise will enhance its intelligence-led, anti-smuggling actions on bananas. In addition, there will be a new regulatory framework for banana ripeners. They will be required to register their ripening rooms by 14 January 1993, and keep records of all consignments of dollar bananas handled. They will have to allow authorised officers access to inspect their ripening rooms and records. This new regulatory framework will be operated by my officials and those from the other Agriculture Departments. I shall soon be laying before the House the necessary regulations to bring this new framework into force.

Other single market issues, including agrimonetary arrangements, are on the agenda of this week's Agriculture Council which is continuing in Brussels this morning.

Agriculture Council

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Agriculture Council held on 14 to 17 December.

Mr. Soames: Discussions were continuing at the Agriculture Council in Brussels this morning.

Meat Products

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has had from small firms in the retail food industry about the EC directive on meat products.

Mr. Soames: The Department consulted widely during the negotiations on the EC directive and consultation has also taken place on our proposals for regulations to implement it in Great Britain.

Although the directive and our proposed regulations do not apply to retail outlets, I am aware that small producers of meat products supplying their own retail shops are concerned about the effect of these regulations on their businesses. We do not intend to impose any unnecessary burdens on these small businesses, and I will consider very carefully the comments made during consultation before the regulations are finalised.

EDUCATION

Sensory Impairments

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the number of teachers of the hearing impaired who have to be trained annually in order to ensure that there is a sufficient supply of such teachers.

Mr. Forth: Identification of the numbers and the training needs of teachers of the hearing impaired is best done locally. It is for this Department to make support funds available. Those funds have been increased from £7·2 million in 1992-93 to £10 million in 1993-94, and the previous restrictions on what the grant could cover have been relaxed. Special educational needs teacher training is now very generously funded.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether he intends to undertake any action to ensure that there is sufficient funding allocated for the training of teachers of hearing-impaired and visually-impaired children when their funding ceases to be ring fenced in April 1993.

Mr. Forth: Sufficient training funds are being made available by the Department through its grants for education support and training—GEST—programme. Decisions on the distribution of teacher training funds between the various special educational needs specialisms are best taken locally.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make it his policy to base the indicative allocation system for the training of specialist teachers on the number of children with sensory impairment and severe learning difficulties in a local education authority area rather than the total number of pupils in that area.

Mr. Forth: The indicative allocation system is used in the majority of grants in the grants for education support and training programme. It is a neutral formula based upon the number of pupils in full-time education in each local education authority. The effects of the application of this formula are being monitored.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what further measures he intends to take in concert with the changes he plans in school education to ensure adequate funding for the training of a sufficient supply of teachers for children with (a) hearing impairment and (b) visual impairment.

Mr. Forth: For 1993-94, the Department is making available to local education authorities £10 million of supported expenditure for training teachers in special educational needs specialisms through the GEST programme. Funding for the in-service training of teachers in grant-maintained schools is available through special purpose grants. The responsibility for special educational needs and for training teachers in appropriate specialisms will thus remain a local one.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he is taking to ensure that money allocated to local education authorities for the training of specialist teachers for children with sensory impairment is used for this purpose.

Mr. Forth: Grant allocated to a local education authority for this purpose through the grants for education support and training programme is paid only on receipt from the LEA of a claim indicating the amount of expenditure it incurred or expected to incur on the purpose during a specified period. Claims must be certified by a responsible financial officer of the LEA. The claim covering expenditure incurred during the whole year is additionally subject to audit verification.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether he will make it his policy to extend the mandatory training requirement for full-time teachers of hearing-impaired children to peripatetic teachers of deaf children.

Mr. Forth: No. It would not be appropriate to impose new mandatory training burdens upon local education authorities.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement outlining the extent to which local education authorities have been given extra resources to cover the 5 per cent. reduction in his support for the training of teachers of hearing-impaired children.

Mr. Forth: The amount of expenditure supported under the grants for education support and training programme for training for special educational needs will increase from £7·2 million in 1992-93 to £10 million in 1993-94. In increasing the amount supported by almost 40 per cent., the Government are seeking to expand the amount of supported training. Payment of grant in 1993-94 at 60 per cent. of expenditure incurred brings this grant into line with most other GEST grants.

Capital Expenditure, Lancashire

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what response his Department has made to Lancashire county council's capital expenditure bid for 1993-94, in cash and percentage terms.

Mr. Forth: I announced yesterday that Lancashire county council has been allocated a total annual capital guideline for schools for 1993-94 of £11·129 million, representing 30 per cent. of its total bid. They will also be eligible for up to £1·152 million of additional resources, issued as supplementary credit approvals, subject to our decisions on undecided statutory proposals and on the progress made on two projects at voluntary-aided schools.

They will receive an allocation in 1993-94 of £5·642 million for minor and major projects at voluntary-aided and special agreement schools.

Private Finance

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education in what areas of his Department's responsibilities he has introduced, or may introduce, private finance; and if he will describe in each case the procedures by which private finance is sought.

Mr. Forth: Private finance already plays an important part in many areas of education. Thus, the introduction of private finance into inner city education, in partnership with the Government, is integral to the programme of city technology colleges. Private sector sponsors commit an agreed proportion of the initial and continuing capital costs of CTCs, while the Department meets the balance of capital costs and makes grants to meet running costs.

Building on the CTC programme, the Government have introduced legislation providing for voluntary-aided and grant-maintained schools to propose the appointment of representatives of private sector sponsors to their board of governors. Such sponsor governors will play a direct role in the school's management, in return for financial and other support. The involvement of sponsor governors may be particularly appropriate where the school is seeking to develop a special emphasis on teaching technology or some other area of the curriculum.

In addition, the Department supports a range of school-business links organisations and projects, and in many cases does so jointly with private sector sponsors. Our practice is to secure such joint funding whenever appropriate, through discussion with the organisation seeking our support.

Private finance has long been important in higher education. The Government believe that it is in the interests of higher education institutions to continue to look for increased levels of funding from private sources —in particular from industry and commerce, benefactors and alumni, and from present sources of fee income. We announced at the time of the autumn statement a relaxation of controls to enable higher education institutions to borrow on the security of Exchequer-funded assets as well as on the security of local authority-funded and private assets. It is for universities and colleges to approach commercial lenders for loans.

The Further and Higher Education Act 1992 provides specifically that there should be no discouragement to higher education institutions or to further education colleges from developing their funding from sources other than the relevant funding council.

Schools (Ballots)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many schools have held ballots to decide whether to seek grant-maintained status; how many of these ballots have resulted in a yes vote; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patten: As at 15 December, a total of 788 schools had held ballots on grant-maintained status, according to the Electoral Reform Society. Of these, 607—almost 80 per cent.—resulted in a vote in favour. This shows that enthusiasm among parents for seeking grant-maintained status continues at the level it has been over the last two years.

ATTORNY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General what estimate has been made of the cost to the Crown prosecution service and his Department of work done in relation to the recent cases involving Plasser, British Rail and the hon. Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway).

The Attorney-General: Detailed costs are not yet available, but it is presently estimated that the cost to the Crown prosecution service of the proceedings to date is about £750,000.

Staff within my legal secretariat have occasionally been engaged on work arising from this case as part of their general duties. The amount of time so involved cannot be separately identified and costed.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Race Relations

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) when the Lord Chancellor received a copy of the Commission for Racial Equality's research into discrimination and judicial sentencing in the midlands; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans the Lord Chancellor has to meet the chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality;

(3) what guidance the Lord Chancellor has issued to judges on race relations and sentencing policy.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality wrote to the Lord Chancellor on 9 December, enclosing a copy of the summary of the research study "Race and Sentencing in the Crown Court". The Lord Chancellor and the Lord Chief Justice, in responding to the publication of the research, recognised the seriousness of the matters raised.

The Lord Chancellor agreed, in principle, earlier this year that there should be a regular annual meeting between our Department and the Commission for Racial Equality. The first of these meetings, which both the Lord Chancellor and I will attend, is to be on 25 January 1993.

The Lord Chancellor has issued no guidance to the judiciary on race relations and sentencing, nor is it his role to do so. A session on ethnic awareness is now a feature of every Judicial Studies Board course. Those present are given advice on how to handle issues which often arise when members of the ethnic minorities appear in court.

The board has also commission a consultant to produce an improved module for the board's existing criminal refresher seminars for judges and recorders. In addition, the Home Secretary published, in September, the booklet "Race and the Criminal Justice System", under section 95 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991, to facilitate the performance by people engaged in the administration of criminal justice of their duty to avoid discriminating against any person on grounds of race or sex or any other improper ground. Copies have been sent to all judges and Crown court recorders.

The sentence in any case is entirely a matter for the trial judge, within the statutory limits laid down by Parliament. General questions of sentencing policy are for the Court of Appeal, criminal division, which from time to time issues guidelines to the judiciary in particular types of case.

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what action the Lord Chancellor will take via the Advisory Committee on Legal Education and Conduct to prevent racial discrimination at the Council of Legal Education; how many complaints on this subject he or the committee has received; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's Advisory Committee on Legal Education and Conduct has a duty under the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990 to have regard to the desirability of equal opportunity when fulfilling its duty of advising the Lord Chancellor on legal education and training. The independence of the committee precludes the Lord Chancellor from directing how it should discharge this duty. The advisory committee has received 14 representations concerning the allegations of racial discrimination in this year's Bar vocational examination, and the Lord Chancellor has received two.

As part of its statutory duties, the advisory committee on 25 November 1992 launched a major review of legal education and training, which will address this question among others. The Council for Legal Education intends to conduct its own review of its admission and assessment procedures, with the assistance of the Commission for Racial Equality, and hopes to publish the results early in the new year.

Legal Aid

Mr. George: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many people in the west midlands received legal aid in the year to 31 March; and how many would pay increased contributions under the Government's proposed changes.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The figures for criminal legal aid are not available for the year ending March 1992. In the 1991 calendar year almost 62,000 applications for legal aid were granted by magistrates courts and juvenile courts in the west midlands. For civil legal aid, in the year ending 31 March 1992 the No. 6 legal aid area office issued just under 20,000 certificates. The No. 6 legal aid area covers the west midlands, Herefordshire, Worcestershire, Warwickshire and part of Staffordshire. It is not possible to estimate how many of those 20,000 would pay increased contributions under the proposed changes.

Self-Incrimination

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether the Lord Chancellor has considered the responses to the consultation paper on the privilege against self-incrimination in civil proceedings.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has given careful consideration to the views expressed in the responses to the consultation paper. A large majority of respondents have supported the proposal that the privilege against self-incrimination should be abolished in civil proceedings provided that appropriate provision is made to protect the witness in any subsequent criminal proceedings. This proposal does not seek to affect those cases where the privilege against self-incrimination is already unavailable under the present law.

The Government intend to introduce legislation on this matter when a suitable opportunity occurs, taking account of any related recommendations which may be made by the Royal Commission on criminal justice when it reports next year and the Government's response to them.

Private Finance

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department in what areas of his Department's responsibilities he has introduced, or may introduce, private finance; and if he will describe in each case the procedures by which private finance is sought.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The private finance initiative is intended to apply to all services which are traditionally provided by Government Department. My Department is considering how to apply the initiative in its areas of responsibility on the basis of the guidance which has been published by the Treasury.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Research and Technological Development

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what discussions the European Research Council has had during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Council on the proposals set out in article 130f(2), proposed to be added to the treaty of Rome under the treaty on European union.

Mr. Robert Jackson: There has been no specific discussion in the Research Council during the United Kingdom presidency of article 130f(2) of the proposed treaty of European union, which is substantially the same as that in the treaty of Rome.

The main matters under discussion have been the Commission's proposal for a supplement to the third framework programme and the Commission's working document on the fourth framework programme.

Private Finance

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in what areas of his Department's responsibilities he has introduced, or may introduce, private finance; and if he will describe in each case the procedures by which private finance is sought.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department is considering how and where to apply the private finance initiative effectively in its areas of responsibility, on the basis of the guidance published by the Treasury. We will be consulting as appropriate.

Bacteria Collections

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what consideration he is giving to the takeover of the National Collections of Industrial and Marine Bacteria.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food—MAFF—provides aid towards the costs of the National Collections of Industrial and Marine Bacteria—NCIMB). Following an approach from MAFF about the future of the NCIMB, the Office of Science and Technology has asked for an independent report from experts on the value of the collection as a national scientific resource.

Citizens Charters

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will amend citizens charters to allow citizens a general right of access to manual files about themselves; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am currently considering ways of providing greater access to personal records held by government. I shall publish the results of my review on openness in the early part of next year.

PRIME MINISTER

Pit Closures

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister when the Government first received the plans for pit closures from British Coal; and what consideration was given to publishing them immediately.

The Prime Minister: The Government had been aware for some time of British Coal's need to reduce capacity, because of the decline in the market for British coal. In addition, the Department of Trade and Industry and its advisers had made their own assessment of which pits might close, so that it could prepare measures to mitigate the impact, taking into account information from British Coal. British Coal informed my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 12 October of the final list of pits which it proposed to close. British Coal announced the names on 13 October.

European Council, Edinburgh

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what is his current estimate of the total cost to the Exchequer of the holding of the Edinburgh summit of the European Council.

The Prime Minister: The cost of the organisation of the European Council is of the order of £6·9 million. The policing costs, 51 per cent. of which are funded by central Government, are expected to amount to a further £2·5 million approximately.

China

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent visit by Lord Howe to discuss human rights in the People's Republic of China.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. noble and learned Friend Lord Howe led a delegation to China from 1 to 7 December. The delegation had detailed discussions with the Chinese authorities on human rights and related issues, including legal and religious issues, national minorities, and Chinese policies towards Tibet. They also met families of dissidents and visited foreign embassies, courts and places of detention. They were able to convey frankly to the Chinese the concerns of many in the west about China's human rights record. There was little meeting of minds with the Chinese authorities, but the basis has been laid for continuing exchanges on these issues.

My right hon. noble and learned Friend Lord Howe will in due course submit a formal report on the visit to me. That report will be placed in the Library of this House.

Constitutional Discussions

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 24 November 1992, Official Report, column 580, what communications he has had with the heads of Government of other Commonwealth countries of which the Queen is sovereign on matters relating to the common constitutional link of the Crown and his statement to the House of 9 December, since 24 November.

The Prime Minister: I have had no such communications.

Yalta Talks

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister how many documents relating to the Yalta talks have not yet been released under the 30-year rule.

The Prime Minister: Such an exercise could be carried out only at disproportionate cost.

Security Personnel

Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister what is the Government's policy as to the cost of funding of security personnel who accompany former senior Government Ministers travelling for private purposes; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Decisions on the personal protection provided for former Government Ministers making official or private journeys are operational matters for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. The cost of providing such protection by police officers is met from the Metropolitan police fund.

Development Aid

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what representations Her Majesty's Government have received calling for increased United Kingdom and European Community development aid during the United Kingdom's presidency of the European Council.

The Prime Minister: The Government have received a number of representations about the future level of overseas aid provided by the United Kingdom and the European Community.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Gale: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy on whether animal welfare should be a proper subject for European competence; what decisions on this subject were taken at Edinburgh; what effect the European Council conclusions at Edinburgh will have on animal welfare directives currently in force or under consideration throughout the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Community acts on animal welfare matters that fall within the common agricultural policy or trade policy; it also has discretion to act in other areas. At the Edinburgh European Council, the Commission made clear its intention to review Community legislation on animal welfare during 1993 in the context of subsidiarity. The United Kingdom remains committed to work for improvements in animal welfare throughout the Community, but this does not necessarily include Community legislation.

Homeless People

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to visit homeless people in (a) London and (b) Huntingdon during the Christmas period.

The Prime Minister: Ministers and officials in the Department of the Environment make regular visits to homelessness projects in different parts of England and keep me fully informed of the situation.

Security Risks

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions in each year since 21 November 1979, and so far in 1992, the Director-General of the Security Service has reported to him information about a present or former Minister or senior public servant indicating that he or she may be or may have been a security risk; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 7 December 1992]: It is not the Government's practice to comment on security matters.

President-elect Clinton

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has had with President-elect Clinton about the inquiries made by the Home Office concerning a possible application at some stage for United Kingdom citizenship; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 11 December 1992]: None. I have told the President-elect of my regret at some of the press reports.

Somalia

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy that Britain's efforts to help Somalia, whether through development aid or immediate financial aid and advice, shall be concentrated on the north (Republic of Somaliland).

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 December 1992]: Britain has pledged more than £31 million of humanitarian aid to Somalia this year, including our share of EC aid. All our assistance is channelled through United Nations agencies and British and international non-governmental organisations. In addition to food, we have funded transport and logistical support to the relief effort, medical supplies, water and sanitation equipment and agricultural supplies—seeds and tools. The EC has responded well and committed 206,000 tonnes of food aid of which two thirds has been shipped and one half delivered.

Aid is allocated where the need is greatest, where mechanisms and agencies are available to deliver it and where it reflects the requests for assistance which we receive from the United Nations agencies and non-governmental organisations who are working on the ground.

Slovenia

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to continue to promote good relations between the United Kingdom and Slovenia, following the general election which took place there in December.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 December 1992]: Following President Kucan's victory in the Slovenian elections on 6 December, we wish him and his Government well as they continue their programme of political and economic reform.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment was made by the Council of Europe observer team of the fairness of the recent general election in Slovenia; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 December 1992]: We have yet to receive the Council of Europe's definitive report on the Slovenian presidential and parliamentary elections. Preliminary press reports suggest that the elections were fair and free.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sri Lanka

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Sri Lankan Government on the safety of Tamil refugees who have returned from India since January.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have regularly urged the Sri Lankans to ensure that all the refugees returning from India are well looked after until they can return to their homes.

The centre for returned refugees which I visited in October in northern Sri Lanka appeared to be well protected.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what preparations his Department is undertaking for the nuclear non-proliferation treaty first preparatory committee meeting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our preparations so far, with our co-depositaries the United States and the Russian Federation, have concentrated on helping to draft and encouraging support for a United Nations General Assembly resolution which formally calls into being the preparatory committee for the 1995 conference on the review and extension of the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons. The resolution was approved by the General Assembly on 9 December by 168 votes to 0 with no abstentions. We have also had initial discussions with partners and allies, both bilaterally and in international fora, about the range of issues we expect to be raised at the first preparatory committee.

Nuclear Testing

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many discussions his Department has had in the last year with United States Senators Hatfield, Exon and Mitchell on the issue of nuclear testing; how many letters his Department has sent in the last year to these senators on the issue of nuclear testing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Over the last year the embassy in Washington has had regular discussions on nuclear testing with the staff of a number of congressmen. The embassy wrote to Senators Hatfield, Exon and Mitchell on the subject during the consideration of the Energy and Water Appropriations Bill in August.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department has held with representatives of the Clinton/Gore transition team; what discussions took place on the topic of nuclear testing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The embassy in Washington keeps in regular touch with members of President-elect Clinton's transition team. The President-elect has made it clear that the responsibility for foreign policy until 20 January remains with the present administration. Our position on nuclear testing is well known to senior members of the Democratic party.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when instructions were received at the post in Islamabad to issue entry clearance to Mr. Syed Farhat Abbas—Ref. TH/16422/90 and B 020653—to join his wife in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the absence of any information about this case, we have asked the high commission in Islamabad for a full report. We shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a substantive reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as soon as possible.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when instructions were received at the post in Islamabad to issue entry clearance to Mr. Mohd Asif Gill—Ref. Imm/v 94835 and Imm (APP 320)—to join his wife in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the absence of any information about this case, we have asked the high commission in Islamabad for a full report. We shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a substantive reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as soon as possible.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when instructions were received at the post in Islamabad to issue entry clearance to Mr. Jahir Mahmood—Ref. TH/41452/91—to join his wife in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the absence of any information about this case, we have asked the High Commission in Islamabad for a full report. We shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a substantive reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as soon as possible.

Private Finance

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what areas of his Department's responsibilities he has introduced, or may introduce, private finance; and if he will describe in each case the procedures by which private finance is sought.

Mr. Goodlad: Our Department is considering how to apply the private finance initiative in its areas of responsibility on the basis of the guidance which has been published by the Treasury.

International Law

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the relationship between the decision in respect of Denmark taken by the European Council in Edinburgh on 11 and 12 December, and article 2 of the Vienna convention on the law of international treaties 1969; and what is the depository state in respect of that decision.

Mr. Goodlad: The decision concerning certain problems raised by Denmark is an international agreement binding on the parties to the treaty on European union. The decision does not require ratification and there is therefore no depositary state. The authentic text is held by the Council secretariat.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs by what mechanism adherence by Her Majesty's Government to decisions taken by the European Council of the European Community are applicable in either international law or any treaty of the Community.

Mr. Goodlad: The decision concerning certain problems raised by Denmark on the treaty on European union was not taken by the Edinburgh European Council but by the Heads of State and Government meeting within the European Council. It is an agreement binding in international law between the parties to the treaty on European union. It constitutes an agreement, in the sense of article 31 of the Vienna convention on the law of treaties, for the purposes of interpretation of the treaty on European union.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the rules regulating the extent to which citizens of St. Helena paid partly or wholly out of Government of St. Helena funds may stand for election to the Legislative Council; and what discretion the Governor has in this respect.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Section 17 (2) of the St. Helena constitution provides that the Governor, acting in his discretion, may by notice published in the Government Gazette make provision for enabling any public officer or class of public officer to be qualified for election to the Legislative Council. This provision was given effect to by a Government Gazette notice dated 15 February 1989.

Iran

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from members of the Baha'i community regarding the persecution of their communities in Iran.

Mr. Douglas-Hogg: The Secretary-General of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the United Kingdom informed us in October of the confiscation of the homes and property of Baha'is in Iran. Numerous local Baha'i assemblies subsequently made similar representations, and we were able to inform them of the strong representations which we, together with our EC partners, have in turn made to the Iranian authorities on this matter.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government plans to make to the Iranian Government regarding the persecution of the Baha'i communities in Iran.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The EC presidency made representations in May to the Iranian permanent representative in Geneva about the execution of Mr. Bahman Samandari. In October we made further representations on behalf of all EC member states to the Iranian authorities in both Geneva and Tehran over the death sentences passed on Mr. Kayvan Khalajabadi and Mr. Bihnam Mithaqi. The representations in Tehran also expressed our concern at the reports of the confiscation of homes and property of Baha'is in Iran. Together with EC partners, we have co-sponsored a resolution due to be adopted by the United Nations General Assembly this month on human rights in Iran, which expressed concern at the treatment of the Baha'i community.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many visas have been issued to citizens from the former Yugoslavia since 6 November; how many have been refused; on what grounds; and how many appeals are pending.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: For the period 9 November to 4 December, the first month's operation of the visa requirement for nationals of the Republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina and of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, 663 visa applications for the United Kingdom, for both visits and settlement, were received at our posts in Vienna, Budapest, Belgrade, Rome, Milan, Düsseldorf, Paris and Sofia. One hundred and eighty-two applications were refused. This figure includes the 166 visa applicants in the convoy arranged by the ALERT group whose applications were refused by the Home Office.

The method of recording statistics at posts world wide does not allow us to give the precise detail which the hon. Member has requested without disproportionate expense.

Uganda

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current situation in Uganda.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since the present Government came to power in 1986, Uganda has taken commendable steps towards internal stability and economic rehabilitation after years of chaos. Progress with the economic recovery programme has been encouraging, but there are major structural weaknesses which still need to be overcome. We hope to see continued improvements including in the field of human rights, and a successful outcome to the constitutional reform process.

Angola

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contributions the British Government are making towards the peace process in Angola.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: With our EC partners, we have been active in support of the efforts of the United Nations to consolidate the ceasefire negotiated by the United Nations Secretary General's special representative on 1 November, and to secure full implementation of the Bicesse peace agreement, including the holding of a second presidential election round.

Under our presidency, the European Council in Edinburgh urged both sides, particularly UNITA, to respect the peace agreement and ceasefire and to continue demobilisation and formation of the new unified armed forces. It called upon UNITA to accept unequivocally the September election results and on the Government to continue the democratic process with a view to the reconciliation of the people of Angola.

Mauritius

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last received representations from the Government of Mauritius relating to the sovereignty of the Chagos group of islands.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Following discussions at official level, we reaffirmed to the Government of the Republic of Mauritius on 1 July that if the latter has proposals which it wishes to put to us concerning future arrangements for the British Indian Ocean Territory, we remain ready to give these close consideration.

Nuclear Reprocessing

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of the intermediate-level radioactive waste streams at Sellafield arising from the reprocessing of foreign spent nuclear fuel have been specified in such a way to make them acceptable for return to country of origin under the framework agreements made by Her Majesty's Government with foreign Governments.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

It is not technically possible in the reprocessing operation to identify the precise wastes which arise from processing specific items of fuel. In such cases, it is necessary to apportion wastes among the customers concerned. Furthermore, there are some waste streams for which the precise form of conditioning for interim storage prior to disposal has not been finalised. It has not been possible to issue specifications for these streams, which amount to about 2 per cent. by radioactivity of the total.

British Nuclear Fuels plc has advised me that the thermal oxide reprocessing plant contracts which provide for return of waste specify that unspecified intermediate level waste—ILW—will be replaced by a radiologically equivalent amount of specified ILW. This will apply to some 40 per cent. by activity of returnable ILW from THORP.

The specifications which BNFL has issued to its overseas THORP customers are presently being approved by those customers and their relevant authorities. Approvals covering the majority of the overseas business have already been received.

The Government are considering BNFL's proposals to implement return of low and intermediate-level waste by substituting a radiologically equivalent amount of high-level waste—HLW—in addition to the customer's normal HLW allocation.

DEFENCE

AWE Aldermaston

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what operations were being carried out at the time of the accident at AWE Aldermaston on 8 December; what types of containers were involved in the accident; and what types of wastes were they storing.

Mr. Aitken: The incident involved a sealed metal storage container of plutonium metal, not waste material. A routine accounting audit of plutonium holdings was being undertaken at the time of the incident.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the accident that occurred at AWE Aldermaston on 8 December; how many persons were injured or contaminated; what was the extent of the injuries and contamination; what damage was caused to property; and what is the estimated cost of (a) repairing damage and (b) removing contamination following the accident at AWE Aldermaston on 8 December.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the accident at AWE Aldermaston on 8 December.

Mr. Aitken: The incident at AWE Aldermaston on 8 December involved the release of a small amount of radioactive material from a damaged container within a storage building. The cause is being investigated by an inquiry which is now under way. There was no release of radioactive material outside the building. A total of five individuals were involved with the incident, four of whom received minor contamination; subsequent monitoring has confirmed that none of them received a significant radiation dose. There were no injuries sustained in the incident. The interior of the building was contaminated in the vicinity of the incident, but is not otherwise damaged. Decontamination work has begun, but it is not possible to estimate at this stage what the effort involved in completing the work will be.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many accidents of the type that occurred at AWE Aldermaston on 8 December have occurred in the last 10 years.

Mr. Aitken: A previous incident involving a release of material in a plutonium storage building occurred at AWE Aldermaston in 1984. That case involved a different building and a different method of packaging of material. The then Under-Secretary of State for Defence gave the details to the House on 12 April 1984, Official Report, column 357.

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to alter the numbers employed in AWE Aldermaston (a) currently and (b) after contractorisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The numbers employed at AWE Aldermaston depend on the programme of work placed on the establishment. After contractorisation, the exact number will be a matter for the contractor, but this Government are fully committed to maintaining the nuclear programme which will continue to support jobs at the establishment.

Reactor Cores

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's assessment as to the length of time that a used reactor core may safely be left in a decommissioned submarine.

Mr. Aitken: Government policy is to remove such cores to Sellafield for long-term storage at the earliest practicable opportunity. However, with the application of my Department's current care and maintenance procedures, there is no formal limit to the length of time that a used reactor core may safely be left in a decommissioned submarine.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when used core transportation package flasks were first licensed for use in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Aitken: My Department's used core transportation packages were first licensed for use in the United Kingdom in 1968.

Waste Materials (Burning)

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what quantities of oil, tyres or other materials were burned at RAF Leeming on 28 November; how long the fire lasted; and how many fire fighters received training during that period.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A total of 13 firefighters from RAF Leeming and the North Yorkshire fire brigade took part in this training exercise. The fires were burning for less than 10 minutes and only uncontaminated waste aviation fuel was used for this exercise.

Aerospace Industry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what meetings he or officials of his Department have held with the aerospace industry regional and local authority network in regard to diversification in production.

Mr. Aitken: I am not aware of any such meetings.

Investment Cuts

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the study recently released by the European Commission on the regional impact of cuts in defence investment.

Mr. Aitken: The report has not yet been received by Government Departments. The regional policy implications will be a matter for the President of the Board of Trade.

Defence Research Agency

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the rationalisation of the Defence Research Agency.

Mr. Aitken: The consultation period for the DRA's rationalisation plan ended on 14 November. Following further representations from hon. Members and the trade unions, I hope that an announcement will be made shortly.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what preparations his Department is undertaking for the nuclear non-proliferation treaty first preparatory committee meeting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department works closely with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on this subject, and will support the preparatory committee preparations as appropriate.

Nuclear Testing

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many discussions his Department has had in the last year with United States Senators Hatfield, Exon and Mitchell on the issue of nuclear testing; how many letters his Department has sent in the last year to these senators on the issue of nuclear testing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: None. Such contacts would normally be made through the British embassy in Washington.

Cnewr Estate

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 27 November, Official Report, columns 892-93, what action was taken or discussions undertaken with outside bodies by his Ministry about the proposed access agreement between the trustees of the Cnewr estate and the Brecon Beacons national park authority between May and July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry was informed in May of the proposed access agreement by the managing director of Cnewr Estate Ltd., but no action was taken. No discussions about this agreement took place with any other body between May and July.

Vacant Properties

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many houses of his Department are currently vacant.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 30 September, the latest date for which figures are available, 9,321 MOD-owned houses and flats were vacant out of a total stock of 72,946. Many of these properties were either undergoing or awaiting major maintenance work or modernisation, some were already allotted to service families who were due to move in shortly and others were being considered for disposal. In addition, some 1,800 dwellings were in the process of being sold.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are to return vacant housing of his Department into civilian use; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The majority of my Department's vacant housing is undergoing or awaiting major maintenance work or modernisation, already allotted to service families due to move in shortly or in the process of sale. In addition, some vacant housing has been earmarked for service families returning from overseas as a result of "Options for Change". Wherever possible, surplus properties are sold to service personnel through the services discount scheme. Some 900 surplus properties which are not suitable for this scheme are currently in the process of being sold to housing associations at a discount in return for nomination rights on a proportion of the properties for personnel who will be leaving the services over the next few years.

Private Finance

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what areas of his Department's responsibilities he has introduced, or may introduce, private finance; and if he will describe in each case the procedures by which private finance is sought.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The private finance initiative is intended to apply to all services which are traditionally provided by Government Departments. My Department will consider the introduction of private finance in cases where it represents value for money and the assumption of risk by the private sector, in accordance with the guidance which has been published by the Treasury. Some operating capital has been introduced into the royal dockyards under contractor operation and will be similarly used at the Atomic Weapons Establishment. Expressions of interest have been sought on the possible offer for sale of one or both dockyards. A proposal is being studied that a new non-profit-making organisation should take over the ownership and management of the married quarter estate.

Medical Discharges

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what compensation or other payments are available to a service man or woman discharged from the armed services for medical reasons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Financial provision in respect of those who are medically discharged from service is made under the armed forces pension scheme. Under current rules, members of the scheme are eligible for benefits, in the form of pensions and/or lump sums, which are payable in all cases except where medical discharge is due to causes which are not attributable to service and less than two years' reckonable service has been given. The amount and form of benefit depend on the circumstances of each case, such as the rank of the service man or woman, length of service, whether the injury or condition leading to the discharge is attributable to service and, where appropriate, degree of disability.

Where the condition or injury leading to medical discharge is attributable to service, provision is also made under the terms of the war pensions scheme administered by the Department of Social Security.

Royal Yacht

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions, and for how long, the royal yacht has been used by members of the royal family in each of the last three years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In each of the last three years, the royal yacht Britannia has been used by members of the royal family for state and official visits, and other functions, as follows:

	Number of occasions	Total number of days
1990	8	42
1991	6	31
[1]1992	6	27

[1] To date.

The royal yacht was undergoing maintenance from 12 November 1991 to 8 May 1992.

Trident

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many kneel-down transporters are being purchased by his Department for transporting Trident missiles within Royal Navy armaments depot, Coulport.

Mr. Aitken: Three.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when preliminary design work on the warhead for the Trident missile first started at Aldermaston.

Mr. Aitken: In 1980.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Trident warhead was declared one-point safe.

Mr. Aitken: The Secretary of State was advised on 13 March 1992 that the United Kingdom Trident warhead was one-point safe. Results of experiments which became available after that date have reinforced the same conclusion.

HMS Renown

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the recent refit of HMS Renown.

Mr. Aitken: The final cost certificates for the refit of HMS Renown have not yet been presented, but the current estimate of cost is in the region of £200 million.

Amphibious Capability

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what Regular Army amphibious engineer capability is to be available in the United Kingdom after 1995; when the current M2 equipment will be replaced by M3 equipment, and at what cost; whether the bridging and ferry equipment currently in service can operate for a fully loaded Challenger main battle tank; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: We intend that the Regular Army's amphibious engineering capability will remain in Germany; a Territorial Army capability will be provided in the United Kingdom.

We plan to replace the current M2 bridging equipment with M3 equipment from 1996. As we intend to hold a competition in the near future, the estimated cost is commercially confidential.

The current M2 equipment can carry a fully loaded Challenger I main battle tank. M3 has been designed with this and future tank requirements in mind.

Nuclear Warhead Containers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on which designs the nuclear warhead containers and transporters which his Department is supplying to the Russian Federation are to be based; and whether those designs are already in use in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Aitken: The nuclear warhead containers are being designed to meet the requirements of the Russian Federation. There is no similar container service in the United Kingdom.

The design of the transport vehicles will be based on the truck cargo heavy duty Mk 2 presently in service in the United Kingdom. The design will be adapted to suit the Russian environment.

Plymouth Urban Development Corporation

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 6 November, Official Report, column 536, if he will set out the purpose of his Department's funding for the proposed Plymouth urban development corporation; when it was agreed; and what plans he has to make funding available to other urban development corporations or local authorities.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The proposed contribution of £20 million was agreed in March 1992 and will assist in the regeneration of surplus land, including Royal William yard. There are no plans to make funding available to other development corporations or local authorities.

Cyprus

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps will be taken to dispose of or recover to the United Kingdom those wheeled armoured and transport assets no longer required by British forces assigned to the United Nations force in Cyprus.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Consequent to planned reductions in the British contingent to UNFICYP, we will be withdrawing the ferret scout car squadron from UNFICYP, and the requirement for transport and logistic vehicles will also reduce. The long-term future of these vehicles is under consideration and final decisions have not yet been made.

Franco-German Corps

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the letter from the French and German Governments on the allocation in wartime of the proposed Franco-German Corps.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. The document in question is classified.

Plutonium

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether plutonium from military reactors has been exported by his Department to the United States of America since 1984.

Mr. Aitken: It would not be in the national interest to disclose details of nuclear materials transactions with the United States.

Atomic Weapons Establishments

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many glove boxes for use with radioactive materials have been decommissioned in each year since records began at (a) AWE Aldermaston, (b) AWE Burghfield and (c) AWE Cardiff.

Mr. Aitken: I will write to the hon. Member.

Croatia

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he proposes to replace the personnel currently serving in 24 Field Ambulance in Croatia as part of the United Nations protection force—UNPROFOR II; and how many patients have been treated by the unit in the course of its tour to date.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The 24 Field Ambulance will be replaced by 4 Armoured Field Ambulance, currently based in Munden, Germany. The handover started on 13 December and is expected to be complete today. To date 3,300 of the UN personnel who work in the UN protection areas in Croatia have been treated or transported by the unit.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Oral Questions

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will introduce proposals to review the system for tabling oral questions.

Mr. Newton: I have at present no plans to do so. This matter was recently considered by the Procedure Committee and changes were subsequently implemented. However, my hon. Friend may care to submit any proposals that he has direct to that Committee.

Select Committees

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Lord President of the Council (1) if he will make it his policy to designate a minimum of eight days per Session to discuss Commons Select Committee reports;

(2) what plans he has to grant further powers to Select Committees to call for papers and witnesses and receive information from civil servants;

(3) what plans he has to enlarge Select Committees of the House and to grant them the power to establish sub-committees;

(4) if he will make it his policy to establish a national office of policy analysis to back up the work of Select Committees of the House.

Mr. Newton: I have no plans to amend the powers of Select Committees, to designate a minimum number of days for debate of their reports, or to establish a national office of policy analysis to back up their work. I refer the hon. Member to the conclusions of the Procedure Committee on these matters see the second report of the House of Commons Select Committee on Procedure, Session 1989-90 and the Government's response, Cm. 1532, and in particular recommendation x (Sub-committees) xi (orders of reference) xii (specialist advisers) xxvii (powers of Select Committees) and xxxvi (debates on Committees' reports)).

Private Bill Procedure

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make it his policy to prevent the use of the Private Bill procedure to bypass the planning channels in respect of developments which seriously affect designated sites of special scientific interest.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

Private Bills are an established part of our constitutional process and in some cases provide the only means of obtaining the necessary consent. The Parliamentary Committees considering these Bills perform a quasi-judicial function similar to that of an inspector at a public local inquiry. This ensures that the conservation aspects are thoroughly and properly scrutinised and a balanced decision reached.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants are currently waiting longer than two months for their application for disability living allowance to be processed; what is the average length of wait for a disability living allowance application to be processed; how many people had to resubmit their application because the disability living allowance office has lost their claim forms in the latest convenient period; and how many people are employed at the disability living allowance office to track down lost or mislaid claim forms.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. David Hanson, dated 16 December 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security. You asked how many claimants are currently waiting longer than two months for their application for Disability Living Allowance (DLA) to be processed; what is the average length of wait for a DLA application to be processed; how many people had to resubmit their application because the DLA office has lost their claim forms; and how many people are employed at the DLA office to track down lost or mislaid claim forms.

Information about the number of people who have been waiting two months for their claim to DLA is not routinely gathered and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The same applies to the number of people who have submitted a duplicate DLA claim because the original had been mislaid. I explained in my letter of 19 October to all MPs the strenuous and successful efforts that have been made to clear the backlog of claims. Procedures are now running more smoothly and the number of occasions when papers cannot be found has been significantly reduced.

On the question of the average length of time taken to process a DLA claim I should explain that the Benefits Agency introduced a standard performance measure across benefits some time ago. This is expressed in terms of clearance targets instead of average clearance times as was previously the case. For information on the Agency's performance in this area I refer you to my reply of 11 December to the honourable Member for Newham North East (Mr. Leighton) at column 73 (Official Report 14 December 1992).

You also asked how many people are employed at the DLA Unit to track down lost or missing files. There are currently thirty staff at the office in Blackpool whose job it is to track down missing paperwork.

A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. A copy is also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what criteria are employed in the selection of medical practitioners to sit on disability appeals tribunals dealing with contested applications for disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: Responsibility for the administration of disability appeal tribunals lies with the president of the independent tribunal service, His Honour Judge Thorpe. The hon. Member may wish to contact his office direct to obtain this information.

Personal Pensions

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give a breakdown by age and gender of persons who have taken out personal pensions since 1988.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is in the table.

Estimated number of people with personal pensions, by age and gender, as at 5 April 1991, the latest date for which figures are available

Age	Men		Women
	Number	Percentage	Number	Percentage
All ages	2,808,800	100·0	1,575,900	100·0
16 to 19	146,500	5·2	127,200	8·1
20 to 24	625,000	22·3	494,800	31·4
25 to 29	643,000	22·9	394,000	25·0
30 to 34	483,200	17·2	236,200	15·0
35 to 39	375,100	13·4	189,000	12·0
40 to 44	354,300	12·6	113,300	7·2
45 to 49	160,500	0·7	19,000	1·2
50+	21,200	6·5	2,600	0·1

Source: Based on a 1 per cent. sample of national insurance records. Because of the small sample size, some of the figures shown are subject to a wide margin of error.

One-parent Families

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parent families are in receipt of (a) income support, (b) family credit and (c) disability working allowance; and for each benefit how many lone parent families are estimated to include a qualifying child for the purposes of the Child Support Act 1991.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is in the table:

	Number of lone parent families	Number of lone parent families estimated to include a qualifying child
Income support	895,000	879,000
Family credit	132,000	130,000
Disability working allowance	169	2

Notes:

1. The figures estimated for the number of lone parent families in receipt of the specified benefits who are estimated to include a qualifying child for the purposes of the Child Support Act 1991 are based on the best information available.
2. The figures for the numbers of lone parent families in receipt of income support and family credit are taken from the Income Support Statistics Annual Enquiry 1991.
3. Figures are rounded to the nearest thousand, with the exception of disability working allowance where actual figures are given as at September 1992.

Maxwell Pensions

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much money has now been collected by the trust fund set up to reclaim the money lost from the Maxwell pensions scheme; and what action the Government have taken to ensure that all the lost money is collected.

Miss Widdecombe: The Maxwell Pensioners Trust was set up to seek contributions from the private sector to help secure Maxwell pensions in the longer term. So far, the trust has collected almost £6 million.

Responsibility for recovering the missing pension scheme assets lies with the liquidators, administrators and pension scheme trustees. The Department's Maxwell pensions unit is actively assisting in this work wherever possible.

Income Support

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will amend the regulations so as to define the severe hardship which unemployed 16 to 17-year-olds need to suffer in order to qualify for income support as being automatically met if they live in a household which is already in receipt of a means-tested benefit.

Mr. Burt: Any 16 or 17-year-old at risk of hardship can already receive help under the severe hardship provision if seeking work and youth training and living in a household which is in receipt of a means-tested benefit. The provision allows for a flexible response to particular circumstances. Legislation would reduce this flexibility.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what standardised testing procedures are employed in the process of assessing people applying for attendance allowance; and what percentage are referred to consultant clinicians.

Mr. Scott: There are no testing procedures employed in determining claims for attendance allowance. Entitlement rests on prescribed legislative conditions. Claims are decided by adjudication officers, normally on the basis of evidence provided by customers themselves. However, in some cases additional information is required which can be obtained from a variety of sources. Information is not available on the percentage of cases where information is requested from a consultant clinician.

Family Credit

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the numbers engaged in agriculture in Wales in receipt of family credit, giving figures separately for the (a) self-employed and (b) employed.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the form requested.

Private Finance

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what areas of his Department's responsibilities he has introduced, or may introduce, private finance; and if he will describe in each case the procedures by which private finance is sought.

Miss Widdecombe: We are considering what opportunities there may be within the Department and its agencies to use private finance, following the announcement of the private finance initiative by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor in the autumn statement on 12 November 1992 at column 996. The principle in each case will be to seek to transfer risk to the private sector and gain value for money.

Child Benefit

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will extend child benefit entitlement for school leavers until they have been accepted on to youth training.

Mr. Burt: We have no plans to do so. Any person aged 16 or 17 who reaches the end of the child benefit extension period can claim income support if seeking a youth training place or work and at risk of severe hardship.

War Pension Claims

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on claims of war pension in respect of noise-induced hearing loss.

Miss Widdecombe: On 12 November, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced proposals to make two changes to the war pensions scheme. These were to remove rank differentials in war disablement pensions and to introduce a minimum level of disablement for awards in respect of noise-induced hearing loss.

These proposals have been discussed with the central advisory committee on war pensions. After full and careful consideration of all the points, both for and against the proposals, we have concluded that the changes are in the best interests of war pensioners. The necessary legislative changes have therefore been made today. These will provide first, that for claims from 7 January 1993, no award will be made in respect of noise-induced sensorineural hearing loss unless the degree of disablement from that loss is assessed as being at least 20 per cent. Secondly, savings from that this change will be used to remove, from April 1993, rank differentials in war disablement pensions. This will be of greatest benefit to the most severely disabled war pensioners, the majority of whom will gain up to £5 a week.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Private Finance

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage in what areas of his Department's responsibilities he has introduced, or may introduce, private finance; and if he will describe in each case the procedures by which private finance is sought.

Mr. Brooke: The private finance initiative is intended to apply to all services which are traditionally provided by Government Departments. My Department is considering how to apply the initiative in its areas of responsibility on the basis of the guidance which has been published by the Treasury.

The Department of National Heritage operates largely through a network of public bodies and agencies which receive much of their support from public funds, but which are managed and operate at arm's length from the Government.

Where appropriate, my Department seeks to encourage and maximise private sector contributions. In arts and sport, for example, business sponsorship schemes provide pound-for-pound matching of funds by the Government and the private sector for particular projects. The scheme for arts has been in place for some time; that for sport was launched by me in November 1992.

English Heritage's forward strategy proposed new initiatives for private funding of the heritage, including private sponsorship of a major new visitor centre at Stonehenge. Nearly all the marketing and development activities undertaken by the British Tourist Authority and the English tourist board attract significant funding from the tourism industry.

A further example is the museums and galleries improvement fund which is funded equally by the Government and the Wolfson Foundation and Family Charitable Trust.

At another level, private funding is achieved through admission charges to the many institutions supported by my Department.

The national lottery and the millennium fund will be established through the Bill which I am publishing today. There will be a presumption that national lottery projects should seek partnership funding where possible, bringing in significant contributions from the private sector. It is, however, important to recognise that these initiatives are not intended to replace public expenditure; they will provide valuable additional funds for particular projects.

Listed Building Control

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he has considered the responses to the consultation paper on ecclesiastical exemption from listed building control; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: In the light of the responses received, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I intend to introduce changes to the current provisions in broadly the form proposed in the consultation paper. In respect of England and Wales, the ecclesiastical exemption will be retained for those bodies that subscribe to a code of practice, and agree to bring their internal arrangements for control of works to listed ecclesiastical buildings into conformity with the code.

The main change we are making to the consultation proposals is that where religious bodies choose not to subscribe to the code of practice, the exemption will be withdrawn in respect of works to the interior as well as to the exterior of their ecclesiastical buildings. Guidance will be issued to local planning authorities on the importance of giving due weight to liturgical requirements in considering applications for consent to internal alterations.

We are satisfied in the light of the responses that it is right to pursue the consultation paper's proposals in respect of curtilage buildings. In future, therefore, the exemption will normally apply only to the principal place of worship on any site, and not to any other buildings within the curtilage. Special provision will, however, need to be made for cathedral complexes. The precise implications of the withdrawal of the exemption for curtilage buildings including such structures as tombstones and monuments will be discussed further with the churches, the local authority associations and the national amenity societies.

The new arrangements have been the subject of consultation with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, in view of his responsibility for listed building control in England.

Copies of the code of practice, incorporating these and other changes, and lists of those who responded to the consultation paper, have been placed in the Library.

Our Departments will be writing to the local authority associations and the national amenity societies about the new arrangements.

The Church of England occupies a special position in that it has its own system of control already embodied in legislation approved by the General Synod and by Parliament. There has been extensive consultation between the Church authorities and the relevant Departments over recent amendments to their legislation and its implementation. I am satisfied that, subject to the resolution of a few outstanding points, the Church's system of control will effectively embody the principles set out in the code of practice.

Our Departments will be writing to all other denominations to ask whether they wish to subscribe to the code of practice in its revised form, and discussions will be held with the Churches Main Committee on the various definitions involved and on arrangements for monitoring. When we have the churches' response we intend to make an order under section 60 of the Planning (Listed Buildings and Conservation Areas) Act 1990 defining the new scope of the exemption.

We should also make it clear that we are prepared to take action under section 60 of the 1990 Act to bring within normal control any individual ecclesiastical building where a denomination subscribing to the code proposes to authorise potentially damaging alterations for which wider scrutiny seems appropriate.

Experience of the new arrangements will be carefully monitored, and their continuance will, of course, depend on our being satisfied that they provide adequate protection for buildings which constitute so invaluable a part of our architectural and cultural heritage.

Television Companies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has to amend the system of award of licences for channel 3 by the Independent Television Commission.

Mr. Brooke: None.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Lamont: The Economic and Finance Council of the European Community met in Brussels under my chairmanship on 14 December. The Paymaster General represented the United Kingdom.

Agreement was reached on the excise and value added tax simplification directives, which incorporate important provisions for the control of these taxes and amendments to the arrangements for operating indirect taxes in the single market after 1992. The simplification of the VAT requirements for so called "triangular" movements—involving traders in more than two member states—will be particularly welcomed by United Kingdom business.

There was a short discussion on the seventh VAT directive. The United Kingdom made it clear that we could not accept the provision in the draft directive on VAT for imports of works of art. Spain and Germany also had reservations on parts of the proposal which will now go forward to the Danish presidency.

Germany maintained its reservation on the increases in travellers' allowances for goods other than tobacco and alcohol. It is seeking progress in the discussions on the liberalisation of road transport before lifting its reserves. We shall be seeking to persuade Germany to lift this reservation.

Guidelines for the future control of duty-free sales in the Community were also agreed.

The Council considered again a package of measures concerning road transport taxation. It reached broad agreement on the minimum rates of vehicle exercise duty for lorries, subject to agreement on the related issues that are being considered by the Transport Council.

The Council also discussed a report on the Commission's proposal for a tax on carbon dioxide and energy. It agreed that before a decision could be taken on whether, and if so under what circumstances, such a tax should be introduced throughout the Community, further analysis would be required on the impact of the proposed tax, notably on energy consumption, economic activity and competitiveness.

Further work will also be needed on a number of important features of the Commission's proposal, such as the balance between the carbon and energy elements of the proposed tax, and the treatment of electricity. This work will take due account of the conclusions of the Edinburgh Council on the principle of subsidiarity.

The Council also agreed in principle that the derogation granted to Greece under the capital liberalisation directive should be extended for a further 18 months.

The Council also discussed the need to implement rapidly the national and Community measures agreed at the European Council in Edinburgh in order to promote growth. In particular, I urged that the new loan facility to be established by the European investment bank and the new European investment fund should be set up without delay.

NEDO (Redundancies)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about redundancy costs at the National Economic Development Office.

Mr. Nelson: It is proposed that the cost of redundancies at NEDO and other winding up costs should be met from the Treasury vote—class XVIII, vote 1. Parliamentary approval for this new service will be sought in a supplementary estimate for this vote. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £2 million will be met by a repayable advance from the Contingencies Fund.

Inflation

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the rate of inflation in the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland for each year since March 1979.

Mr. Nelson: The table gives the annual average inflation rates for the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland from 1979 to 1991.

	United Kingdom	Republic of Ireland
1979	13·4	13·3
1980	18·0	18·2
1981	11·9	20·4
1982	8·6	17·1
1983	4·6	10·5
1984	5·0	8·7
1985	6·1	5·4
1986	3·4	3·8
1987	4·2	3·2
1988	4·9	2·1
1989	7·8	4·1
1990	9·5	3·2
1991	5·9	3·1

West Bromwich Building Society

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will refer the West Bromwich building society to the insurance ombudsman in relation to its role in home insurance plans.

Mr. Nelson: The Insurance Ombudsman Bureau provides a method of resolving disputes between insurers and individual policy holders. Some building societies have agreed to the voluntary extension of the building societies ombudsman's powers in resolving disputes over home income plans. Talks are continuing to try to agree an acceptable role for the ombudsman in cases concerning the West Bromwich building society.

EC States (Debt)

Mr. Peter Shore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the level of Government borrowing as a percentage of gross domestic product; and what is the level of national debt as a percentage of gross domestic product for each EC member state from 1980 to the latest date.

Mr. Lamont: Data on EC member states' general government net borrowing and gross general government debt as a percentage of GDP are published in the European Commission's "European Economy".

Taxes

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish figures on the same basis as table 4, appendix 1, of "Economic Trends", January 1992, on the total percentage of gross income accounted for by taxes of all kinds paid by (a) the bottom decile of households and (b) the top decile giving comparable figures for households ranked by equivalised disposable income for each year since 1979.

Mr. Nelson: Figures on the basis of table 4, appendix 1, of "Economic Trends", January 1992 are only published for the years 1987 onwards. The results for 1987 were published in the May 1990 edition of "Economic Trends" and the 1988 results appeared in the March 1991 edition. The required ratios can be derived from these results.

Figures for earlier years are not published for decile groups of households ranked on an equivalised basis. In the March 1991 edition of "Economic Trends", table P shows estimates for direct taxes as a percentage of gross income and indirect taxes as a percentage of disposable income for alternative years back to 1977 for quintile groups ranked by equivalised disposable income. The required ratios for quintile groups can be derived from these figures.

Relocation

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress Departments and agencies are making under the Government's relocation policy.

Mr. Dorrell: Since March 1988, 14,300 civil service jobs have been located or relocated outside the south-east. A further 11,400 are to follow and a further 3,200 were under review at the end of June. This compares with a total of 6,000 posts which were moved or created outside the south-east under the centrally directed dispersal programme that operated between 1979 and 1988.

Until 1988, the dispersal programme was centrally directed. Since 1988, Departments have been required to review the location of their work systematically against a value-for-money test. This decentralised approach has resulted in the establishment outside the south-east of over twice as many civil service jobs in the last four years as in the previous eight. Details are given in the table.

More details of these moves and moves within the south-east are being placed in the House of Commons Library.

Departments and agencies also consider moving to sites within the south-east. Over the year to June 1992, 1,500 posts were identified for cost-effective transfer within the south-east and at 30 June 10,500 posts were under review for possible relocation within the south-east, a substantial increase on past years.

In addition, a number of Departments, notably the Ministry of Defence and the Department of Social Security, have moved or are moving civil servants between areas outside the south-east. The Ministry of Defence is also relocating service personnel throughout the country.

Private Finance

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what areas of his Department's responsibilities he has introduced, or may introduce, private finance; and if he will describe in each case the procedures by which private finance is sought.

Mr. Lamont: The Treasury does not undertake or sponsor large capital projects. It has, however, used leasing arrangements in the past. Decisions to lease or buy have been taken on value-for-money grounds. For the future, opportunities for further private finance will be considered in accordance with Treasury guidelines.

Council Tax

Mr. Straw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was (a) the total cost of the valuation of properties in (i) each local authority area in England and (ii) for all England, for the purposes of introducing the council tax and (b) the cost per property in (i) each local authority area in England and (ii) for all England.

Mr. Dorrell: The information in respect of each local authority in England is not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The total cost of the valuation banding of domestic properties for all England was £39,409,635 and the average valuation banding cost per property for all England was £1·97.

National Lottery

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what account will be taken of revenue from the national lottery when planning public expenditure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Government do not intend that the proceeds should be brought within the public spending control total, and the Government will not make any case-by-case reduction in conventional expenditure programmes to take account of awards from the lottery proceeds.

Alcohol

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to reduce the differences between the excise duty on Scotch whisky and on still wine.

Mr. Dorrell: The duty relativities between alcoholic drinks are reviewed each year, but I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's Budget statement.

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the retail prices index currently relates to the cost of alcoholic drinks; how much of this is attributable to the price of Scotch whisky; and on what specific assumptions of whisky consumption by different income groups this is based.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 15 December 1992]: The weight for alcoholic drinks in the retail prices index for use in 1992 is 80 parts per thousand. Of this, the price indicators for Scotch and other types of whisky together account for 8·1 parts per thousand as part of the selection of indicators taken to represent wines and spirits generally.

The weights for the RPI are based mainly on the family expenditure survey. No specific assumptions are made concerning consumption by different income groups, although adjustments are made for known under-recording according to data on receipts of duty collected by HM Customs and Excise.

Single Market Regulations

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of the top 30,000 European Community traders in Britain have received (a) a directory of commodity codes and (b) a visit by customs officials in preparation for the introduction of new customs and value added tax regulations from 1 January 1993.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 16 December 1992]: Distribution of the Intrastat classification nomenclature commenced on 23 November and is scheduled for completion by 15 December. Visits to the top 30,000 European Community traders have been carried out by Intrastat liaison officers based at local VAT offices, and have been primarily concerned with explaining how the new system for the collection of intra-EC trade statistics will operate. Approximately 28,000 visits have already taken place; it is expected that very few of the balance will be outstanding at the end of 1992 but all should be completed by February 1993 when the first returns are due.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the full-year cost to the Revenue of the introduction of the business reliefs for inheritance tax which he has announced to take effect from March 1993; and what public benefits he expects from these changes.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 16 December 1992]: The estimated reduction in the yield of inheritance tax for transfers in 1992-93 resulting from the changes to business and agricultural relief made in the Finance (No. 2) Act 1992 is £45 million in a full year. The cost of the inheritance tax exchanges for the new London international financial futures and options exchange announced on 4 December 1992 is expected to be negligible. These changes, which took effect from March 1992, encourage the creation and development of small family businesses for the wider benefit of the national economy. There has been no announcement of changes to business reliefs for inheritance tax to take effect from March 1993.

Sales Lists

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 13 November, Official Report, column 1003, whether the maximum penalty for misdeclaration for sales lists applies per incorrect form or per incorrect entry; if he will indicate the sections of the Finance Act 1992 which set out the penalty for failure to submit for sales lists; and, in respect of Intrastat, what is the maximum criminal penalty which will apply.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 16 December 1992]: The maximum penalty for misdeclaration for sales lists applies to each EC sales statement.

Authority to impose civil penalties for failure to submit EC sales statements is contained in section 82 of the Finance Act 1992.

As the Paymaster General stated in his earlier written reply, on 13 November, at column 1003, the maximum criminal penalty in respect of Intrastat is £2,500.

In consultation with HM Customs and Excise, however, the Paymaster General has agreed that a sympathetic view will be taken of errors which arise as a result of genuine misunderstandings of any of the new procedures which it is introducing for the single market, in the initial phase of their operation. This approach will, of course, not extend to cases of fraud or gross negligence.

Disabled Employees

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) physically disabled and (b) sensorily disabled people are employed in his Department; and what percentage they are of the total work force.

Sir John Cope: On 1 July 1992, the latest date for which this information is available, there were 26 Treasury staff who were registered disabled; of this total, seven are registered physically disabled and nine are registered sensorily disabled. The total number of staff in these two categories represents 0·7 per cent. of the Department's total work force; 1·1 per cent. of the Treasury work force are registered as disabled. The Department employs a number of people with disabilities who have chosen not to register as disabled.

Drug Smugglers

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures are taken by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to encourage and, where necessary, compensate members of the public who assist in the detection and capture of drug smugglers.

Sir John Cope Customs encourages the public to assist if in its efforts against drug smuggling through publicity campaigns such as that associated with the relaunch of their drugs hotline. Although inducements are not offered to the public, there is the facility to pay monetary, rewards for such assistance and it has been policy when appropriate to do so. When such public spiritedness has led to the success of a case at considerable commercial or financial disadvantage to the person or company responsible for the assistance, Customs seeks to ensure that no financial disadvantage is suffered and that there is suitable recompense or reward.

European Monetary System (Loans)

Mr. Shore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what funds have been provided to the Bank of England under the community loan mechanism of the EMS; what were the terms of such loans; and what funds remain to be repaid.

Mr. Lamont: The Community loan mechanism of the EMS was combined with the medium term financial assistance facility to create a single facility for medium-term financial support—MTFS—in June 1988.

The United Kingdom has not made any applications for funds under the MTFS.

Mr. Shore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what funds have been provided to the Bank of England under the very short-term funding facility of the European monetary system, since the United Kingdom joined the exchange rate mechanism; what were the terms of such facilities; and what funds are still to be repaid.

Mr. Lamont: The United Kingdom made use of the very short-term facility—VSTF—of the European monetary system to finance intervention in September 1992. VSTF transactions finance intervention in the foreign exchange markets and it has been the longstanding practice of successive Governments not to reveal details of such intervention.

The terms under which VSTF borrowing is undertaken are set out in the agreement of 13 March 1979 between the central banks of the member states of the European Economic Community which is published in the "Compendium of Community Monetary Texts 1989".

Mortgage Tax Relief

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the tax expenditure on mortgage interest tax relief in each year since 1982.

Mr. Dorrell: The cost of mortgage interest relief is provisionally estimated to be £5·2 billion in 1992-93 based on the standard assumption that interest rates remain at their current levels for the rest of 1992-93.

Estimates for the earlier years are published in table 5.2 of "Inland Revenue Statistics 1992", a copy of which is in the Library.

Exempt Objects

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will announce the outcome of the review of the register of conditionally exempt objects.

Mr. Dorrell: The review of the register of conditionally exempt objects, usually known as the "V and A list", announced on 7 July 1992, Official Report, columns 226-27 and 14 July 1992, Official Report, columns 524-25, has now been completed. It has concluded that there is a need to make improvements to accessibility to the V and A list, the quality of entries on the list, and to publicity given to the list.

Improved accessibility will be achieved by computerising the V and A list. This is expected to be completed in the first half of 1993. Computerisation will allow inquirers to use database search and retrieval facilities to identify more easily objects of particular interest. This will meet the valid criticism that the V and A list is not properly indexed. Copies of the computerised V and A list will be given to the existing custodians of the V and A list. Further copies will also be available, at a reasonable cost, to any other institution or member of the public who requests a copy. This will meet the criticism that it is difficult to consult copies of the V and A list.

Publicity for the V and A list will be increased by the issue of quarterly press releases about recent additions to the list. These will start after computerisation has been completed. In addition, feature articles about the V and A list for publication in expert journals will be encouraged.

To improve the quality of entries, all individuals shown as contact points on the V and A list will be asked to confirm the information given in each entry on the list. At the same time, owners will be advised of the changes which will be made and given the opportunity to take new security precautions to guard against any increased risk of art theft arising from the greater publicity.

A number of related improvements are also planned or have now been implemented. There will be a selective audit of objects on the V and A list each year to confirm that undertakings on public access and preservation of the objects in the United Kingdom are being observed. Any breaches which cannot be put right will lead to an inheritance tax charge. Guidelines on what Inland Revenue considers to be reasonable public access to objects on the V and A list are being issues. Guidelines on access to the existing V and A list have also been provided to existing custodians of the V and A list and steps have been taken to ensure that the contact point shown on V and A list entries is as up to date as possible.

Owners of items on the V and A list have already agreed to provide public access and are not being asked to do more than they have already undertaken. The measures which I have described will make it easier for the public to enjoy the benefits which Parliament intended.

Capital Allowances

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements are being made to publish the draft legislation on enhanced capital allowances proposed in the autumn statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue will be making available on Monday 21 December 1992 the draft clauses which will implement the Chancellor's proposals on capital allowances announced in the autumn statement. These will introduce a new 40 per cent. first-time allowance for expenditure incurred on machinery and plant—excluding most cars—in the year ending 31 October 1993. They will also introduce a 20 per cent. initial allowance for the construction of new industrial and agricultural buildings which are contracted for in the 12 months ending 31 October 1993 and brought into use by the end of 1994.

In addition, the Chancellor proposes that, in one respect, the scope of the new relief for industrial and agricultural buildings will go further than previously announced. This is to be extended to include certain expenditure on existing and part-completed buildings which have not previously been used and which are bought from a person whose trade is the construction of buildings for sale. To qualify, such buildings must be purchased under a contract entered into the year ending 31 October 1993 and brought into use by the end of 1994.

The legislation for these measures will be included in the 1993 Finance Bill. A copy of the draft clauses, and the Inland Revenue press release announcing their publication, will be placed in the Library of the House of Commons.

Treasure Trove

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to change the procedures relating to treasure trove for England and Wales.

Mr. Lamont: The basis on which ex gratia rewards are paid to the finders of treasure trove were set out in a written answer on 26 April 1988, Official Report, columns 105-106. Where a museum wishes to retain an item of treasure trove, the finder is paid an ex gratia reward equivalent to the estimated market value of the object, providing he or she has acted promptly and properly in reporting the find. Valuation is determined by the Treasure Trove Reviewing Committee, which is appointed by the Treasury and whose members are independent of the museum service. In reaching its estimate of market value, the committee considers advice from the museums, information from recent auctions of similar objects, and any other advice or information they consider to be relevant.

I believe that the present procedures work well and fairly, but I have concluded that the following changes are appropriate: finders will now be invited to submit any information about the possible valuation of their find which they wish the committee to consider; in cases where there is no recent evidence of market value from auctions of similar items, the committee will seek valuations from two independent sources to consider alongside the advice it receives from the museums; and a list of additional, named specialists will be drawn up on whose advice the committee may call when it thinks it appropriate, when it is considering particularly unusual items.

With the approval of the Prime Minister, I have also agreed with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for National Heritage that responsibility for treasure trove will be transferred to his Department from 1 April 1993.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Irish Language

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of the number of people who (a) speak Irish and (b) are learning Irish; what amount of Government funds were spent on (i) teaching the language and (ii) otherwise promoting it during the current financial year; how much this represents per capita in Northern Ireland; how much per Irish speaker and student; what were the figures five and 10 years ago; and what are his projections for the next three years.

Mr. Hanley: In the 1991 census of population, 131,974 persons aged three or over were recorded as able to speak Irish. For estimates of the number of pupils learning Irish at school, I would refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Antrim, North (Rev. Ian Paisley) on 17 November 1992, Official Report, columns 149-52, where it was estimated that, based on a 10 per cent. sample survey relating to those schools which offered Irish as a subject in the 1988-89 academic year, some 26,210 pupils were studying Irish. The numbers learning Irish in other educational institutions are not available centrally.

The total costs of teaching Irish are not separately identified.

The total of central Government expenditure—excluding the funding of Irish medium education and of teaching Irish in English medium mainstream education—in the current financial year is estimated at £668,000. Based on information available from the 1991 census of population, this equates to some £0·42 per head of population, or £5·06 per Irish speaker. Since information on the costs of teaching Irish is not available, a per student figure cannot be provided.

The equivalent figure five years ago was approximately £210,000. A figure for 10 years ago is not available.

Projections for expenditure on the promotion of the language for the next three years are also unavailable.

Sinn Fein Councillors

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will published a table to show for each council in Northern Ireland the number of Sinn Fein councillors; and how many of those councillors in each of those council areas have (a) been charged with an offence scheduled in the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991, (b) been charged with membership of a terrorist organisation or (c) served a prison sentence for a scheduled offence.

Mr. Mates: The number of Sinn Fein councillors by council area is as follows:

Antrim	0
Ards	0
Armagh	1
Ballymena	0
Ballymoney	0
Banbridge	0
Belfast	9
Carrickfergus	0
Castlereagh	0
Coleraine	0
Cookstown	2
Craigavon	1
Derry	5
Down	0
Dungannon	3
Fermanagh	4
Larne	0
Limavady	1
Lisburn	2
Magherafelt	3
Moyle	1
Newry and Mourne	4
Newtownabbey	0
North Down	0
Omagh	6
Strabane	2
TOTAL	44

It would not be appropriate to supply the other information requested.

Transplants

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the number of organ or eye donations that could have been used for transplants and of the actual numbers of transplants in the latest period for which figures are available.

Mr. Hanley: The information, which is based upon figures for 1991 supplied by the United Kingdom Transplant Support Service Authority, is as follows:

Organ	Retrieved	Used	Unsuitable for use	Suitable but unused
Kidneys	67	66	1	—
Pancreas	—	—	—	—
Heart	8	8	—	—
Heart/Lung	4	4	—	—
Lungs	5	2	3	—
Liver	15	14	1	—
Cornea	33	24	9	—

Notes:

1. All figures are for cadaveric organs.
2. Retrieved organs may prove unsuitable for use for a variety of reasons, for example anatomical defect, mismatch, or impaired function after transit.

University of Ulster

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for each of the four campuses of the university of Ulster the current number of full-time equivalent students, the ratio of professorial staff to student numbers, the ratio of academic staff in post to student numbers and the ratio of non-academic staff in post to student numbers.

Mr. Hanley: In the 1992-93 academic year the figures for the university of Ulster are as follows:

Campus	Number of full time equivalent students	Ratio of professorial staff[3] to students	Ratio of academic staff[3] in post to students	Ratio of non-academic staff[3] in post to students
Belfast	677	0·009	0·087	0·114
Coleraine	3,716	0·008	0·051	0·156
Jordanstown	7,259	0·005	0·060	0·124
Magee	1,541	0·003	0·057	0·088

[1] Excludes Vice-Chancellor/Pro-Vice-Chancellor/Provosts.
[2] Excludes professorial and research staff.
[3] Includes administration, technical and research staff and Vice-Chancellor/Pro-Vice-Chancellor/Provosts—four of whom are professorss based at Coleraine and Magee campuses.
Note: Comparison of staff:student ratios between the various campuses is not valid because of the unitary structures of the university and the differing subject mixes at each campus.

Cardiac Services

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many coronary bypass operations were carried out in each year since 1988-89.

Mr. Hanley: The information available centrally is as follows:

Coronary by-pass operations

	Number
1988-89	245
1989-90	318
1990-91	330

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are on the waiting list for coronary bypass operations in each of the health and social services boards in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: Information is not held centrally on the numbers waiting for specific operations. At September 1992, there were 874 people waiting for admission to the Royal Victoria hospital, Belfast for cardiac surgery. Cardiac surgery is not carried out in any other hospital in Northern Ireland.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what steps he will take to reduce the waiting list for coronary bypass operations in each of the health and social boards; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when the chief medical officer will complete his review of cardiac services; and if the report will be published;

(3) if he will refer the report of the chief medical officer into the review of cardiac services in Northern Ireland for independent review by experts nominated by the European Society of Cardiology;

(4) if he will take measures to ensure that an immediate assessment of present and future needs for cardiac surgery is undertaken, involving cardiologists and cardiac surgeons.

Mr. Hanley: In May this year, a fourth cardiac surgeon was appointed to the Royal Victoria hospital, thereby increasing the yearly number of health service cardiac operations at that hospital from 630 to 840. In November, a sum of £800,000 was allocated to boards to allow them to continue buying cardiac operations in England and elsewhere for patients who would otherwise have to continue waiting. Prior to November, more than 120 patients had already had cardiac surgery in Great Britain.

On 8 December, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, in his announcement on the allocation of resources for the year ahead, indicated that the funds available for expenditure on health and social services in 1993-94 will amount to £1,318 million. Within this figure I am pleased to say that additional funds have been made available to meet charter guarantees on waiting times for hospital treatment and, in particular, cardiac surgery.

The Department's chief medical officer has recently undertaken a review of cardiac surgery, with the aim of improving the cardiac surgery service and thereby reducing the waiting list and times still further. His report was issued for consultation on 30 October. The views of a wide range of interested groups and individuals have been invited, including cardiologists and cardiac surgeons. Responses are still being received and when these have been fully considered, the Department intends to announce its conclusions and publish an action plan early in the new year. There are no plans to refer the chief medical officer's report for independent review by experts nominated by the European Society of Cardiology.

Orthopaedic Surgery

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what additional resources he will make available to ensure that the waiting lists for orthopaedic surgery are reduced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Through the Department of Health and Social Services' waiting list initiative, additional funding of £1·2 million was made available in 1991-92 to achieve reductions in long waiting lists, including that for orthopaedic surgery. Additional resources are being provided this year and next for the same purpose.

In addition, over £600,000 has been invested specifically in the development and enhancement of the orthopaedic service since 1989-90.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are on the waiting list for orthopaedic surgery in each of the four health and social services boards.

Mr. Hanley: At 30 September 1992, 3,324 people were waiting for admission to hospital in the trauma and orthopaedic speciality in the Eastern board and 623 in the Western board.

There are no consultants in trauma and orthopaedics in the Northern or Southern boards and hence no waiting lists.

Maedi Visna

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the last case of maedi visna was confirmed in sheep in Northern Ireland; what information he has on the equivalent information for neighbouring or other counties of the Republic of Ireland; and what plans he has to make Northern Ireland free of maedi visna.

Mr. Hanley: Maedi visna has never been detected in the indigenous Northern Ireland sheep flock. The disease was last confirmed in imported sheep in 1981 and the infected animals were slaughtered. I understand that maedi visna has not been detected in the Republic of Ireland sheep flock since 1982. A submission seeking recognition of Northern Ireland's claim to freedom from maedi visna was sent recently to the European Commission.

Education and Library Boards

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what was the total amount raised by each education and library board through the (a) sale and (b) rental of land, property or facilities, in each of the past two years; and what proportion of these amounts were (i) retained by each board for the provision of education and library services and (ii) retained by the Department;

(2) if he will take steps to ensure that all proceeds of the sale or rental of land, property, or facilities by each education and library board will be retained by that board for the provision of education and library services; and if he will return to the boards any such sums currently retained by the Department of Education.

Mr. Hanley: The total amount raised by each education and library board through the sale of land and property for the past two years is as follows:

Board	1990-91 £	1991-92 £
Belfast	494,129	21,744
Western	185,515	201,673
North-eastern	22,804	270,524
South-eastern	680,970	44,000
Southern	40,432	110,582

Information on the amounts raised through the rental of land and property is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

All amounts in the past two years were reallocated to each board in addition to their capital baselines for the provision of education and library services. However, it must always remain open to the Secretary of State to decide how best to use receipts.

Health and Social Services Boards

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total amount raised by each health and social services board through the (a) sale and (b) rental of land, property or facilities, in each of the past two years; and what proportion of these amounts were (i) retained by each board for the provision of health and social services and (ii) retained by the DHSS management executive.

Mr. Hanley: The total amount realised from the disposal of property in each of the last two financial years was as follows:

Financial Year	Eastern Board £	Southern Board £	Northern Board £	Western Board £
1990-91	3,459,770	508,750	137,400	6,900
1991-92	639,475	70,600	13,000	221,550

Details of income received by health and social services boards from rentals of land, property or facilities is not held centrally but all such income is retained by boards.

In 1990-91, all moneys raised from the disposal of property were retained by boards, with the exception of some late receipts amounting to £180,000.

In 1991-1992, moneys raised from disposals were reallocated by the Secretary of State to meet financial pressures on Northern Ireland Departments, including increased expenditure on the family health services.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to ensure that all proceeds of the sale or rental of land, property or facilities by each health and social services board will be retained by that board for the provision of health and social services; and if he will return to the boards any such sums currently retained by the DHSS management executive.

Mr. Hanley: No. It must always remain open to the Secretary of State to decide how receipts should be used. In planning the level of public expenditure, including expenditure on health and personal social services, the Secretary of State takes into account anticipated receipts from sales of land or property. The DHSS management executive has reallocated the receipts for the current financial year to meet a number of high priority pressures within the health and personal social services.

Private Finance

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in what areas of his Department's responsibilities he has introduced, or may introduce, private finance; and if he will describe in each case the procedures by which private finance is sought.

Mr. Mates: The private finance initiative is intended to apply to all services which are traditionally provided by Government Departments. Northern Ireland Departments have been asked to consider how they may most effectively take forward the initiative in their areas of responsibility on the basis of recently published Treasury guidelines.

Surplus Food

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what amount of EC surplus food was distributed in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years.

Mr. Hanley: The quantities of EEC surplus food distributed in Northern Ireland were as follows:

	Butter (tonnes)	Beef (tonnes)
1989-90	678	439
1990-91	680	536
1991-92	517	367

Chief Electoral Officer (Report)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the report of the Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland for 1991-92 will be published.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I have today laid the Chief Electoral Officer's report before Parliament—House of Commons No. 344. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Inward Investment

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on the number of visits made to Northern Ireland by potential inward investors in the years ended on 31 March 1990, 1991 and 1992; and how many of the potential investors were brought by the Industrial Development Board to South Down in each of the three years.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 16 December 1992]: The number of visits made to Northern Ireland by potential inward investors in the years ended 31 March 1990, 1991 and 1992 was 175, 231 and 240 respectively. Of these, a total of 15 included visits to South Down—four in 1989-90, five in 1990-91 and six in 1991-92.

EMPLOYMENT

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how the departmental green Minister has promoted protection of the ozone layer with specific policy measures; which possible measures have been considered and rejected; and on what grounds.

Mr. McLoughlin: In the Department's environmental policy statements we have made a specific commitment to reducing or limiting the procurement of substances which are pollutants. The Employment Department is not a major user of ozone-depleting substances. No specific policy measures have been rejected.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the quantity of ozone-depleting substances recycled within the Department and returned to the manufacturer.

Mr. McLoughlin: The use by the Department of ozone-depleting chemicals is minimal, but we pay due regard to proper disposal methods and are taking steps to ensure that all staff are aware of them. No records of quantities are held centrally and this information would be available only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much funding has been allocated or spent to specifically deal with measures to reduce her Department's consumption of ozone-depleting substances.

Mr. McLoughlin: No specific funding has been allocated. The reduction in the use of ozone-depleting substances is being achieved by replacing equipment which uses such substances with alternatives which do not contain ozone-depleting chemicals, as and when they are due for replacement.

The Employer Department is not a major user of ozone-depleting substances.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which current uses of ozone-depleting chemicals by her Department are considered essential.

Mr. McLoughlin: Some fire extinguishers which use halons as a propellant are in place in departmental buildings. Fire-fighting equipment is essential for the protection of staff; however, these extinguishers are being phased out.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by what date her Department's use of ozone-depleting chemicals will conform to EC regulations on limits on these chemicals.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is the Department's policy to comply with the United Kingdom health and safety legislation. This policy will be applied to any legislation arising out of EC regulations on ozone-depleting chemicals.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will give an undertaking to purchase only ozone-friendly fridges that do not contain chlorofluorocarbons or hydrochlorofluorocarbons for her Department.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department's purchasing policy includes a commitment to the buying of environmentally friendly goods wherever practical.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if she will provide details from the maintenance servicing record of the quantity and type of ozone-destroying chemicals used annually in her Department's refrigeration and air conditioning equipment for servicing and in leakages; and what proportion is removed for recycling;

(2) how many CFC and HCFC installations are contained within her Department's buildings;

(3) how many refrigeration and air conditioning systems in her Department are equipped with automatic leak detection systems;

(4) how many CFC domestic fridges are contained within her Department's buildings.

Mr. McLoughlin: No records are held centrally and this information would be available only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidance has been sought and received on alternatives to the ozone-destroying chemicals in use by her Department.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department is not a major user of ozone-depleting chemicals. Where guidance is needed in specific circumstances, it is obtained in the first instance from the Department of the Environment.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many portable halon fire extinguishers are contained within departmental buildings; and what measures are being taken to ensure their recycling and replacement.

Mr. McLoughlin: No records of the number of halon fire extinguishers are held centrally. Halon fire extinguishers are being phased out as and when they are due for replacement.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many catastrophic leaks of ozone-depleting substances have occurred within her Department's buildings in the last five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department has no information to suggest that there have been any catastrophic leaks of ozone-depleting substances from Employment Department buildings in the last five years.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many cases were dealt with by industrial tribunals in each of the past five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of cases dealt with by industrial tribunals—at a hearing, by a settlement or by withdrawal—in the period 1 April 1987 to 31 March 1992 was as follows.

	Number
1987-88	34,233
1988-89	29,317
1989-90	31,913
1990-91	35,826
1991-92	41,977

Health and Safety

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average fine for health and safety offences involving serious injury during 1991-92.

Mr. McLoughlin: The average fine for all health and safety offences in 1991-92 was £1,134. The average fine for those convictions arising out of a serious injury is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will deposit in the Library the names of those attending and minutes of the recent meeting between insurance companies, other interested parties and the Health and Safety Executive regarding the possible tendering out of some of HSE's work.

Mr. McLoughlin: During the market-testing feasibility study referred to in my reply to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) 25 November 1992, Official Report, columns 633-34, the team under the direction of the director general of the Health and Safety Executive met representatives from a wide range of industry, the trade unions and other interested parties. the Association of British Insurers was one of those parties and its advice is reflected in the report my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State recently received. That report is still being considered and it would be inappropriate to release further details.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of factories and other workplaces for which the Health and Safety Executive is responsible for enforcing the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974; how many of these have been inspected by the factory inspectorate; and how many have received no inspection in the last five, seven, nine and 11 years.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are 650,999 workplaces registered with the Health and Safety Executive's agricultural, factory, quarries, mines, explosives and nuclear installations inspectorates and offshore safety division for which HSE is the enforcing authority for health and safety legislation.

It is not possible, without incurring disproportionate cost, to identify how many of these premises have been inspected by HSE's factory inspectorate—FI—of how many have received no inspection in the last five, seven, nine and 11 years.

However, on 31 March 1992, the latest date for which information is centrally available, 417,316 fixed premises were registered with FI.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employees have been gaoled for offences under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 since 1974.

Mr. McLoughlin: To date, no employees have been jailed for offences under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement about the privatisation of the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has recently received a report on the feasibility of market-testing those areas of the Health and Safety Executive's activities not covered by their existing programme. My right hon. Friend is considering the report and will issue a statement in due course.

Sickness

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what assessment she has made of the effectiveness of a standard enforceable procedure for notifying an employer of sickness;

(2) what plans she has to develop the use of a standard enforceable procedure for notifying an employer of sickness.

Mr. McLoughlin: None. Like most other terms and conditions of employment, this is a matter for discussion and agreement between employer and employee without Government intervention, subject to the requirements of the Statutory Sick Pay (General) Regulations.

Training

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will give, in constant 1992-93 prices and cash terms, the total amount spent by her Department of the budget for training in each year since 1989-90, the expected outturn for 1992-93 and plans for 1993-94.

Mr. McLoughlin: The latest available figures are provided in the table.

Employment Department Expenditure

	Constant 1992-93 prices	Cash terms
1989-90 Outturn	3,077	2,557
1990-91 Outturn	2,667	2,393
1991-92 Outturn	2,053	1,969
1992-93 Estimated Outturn	1,794	1,794
1993-94 Plans	1,654	1,701

The figures in the table include:
The Department's training and vocational education programmes;
for 1989-90 and 1990-91 Great Britain figures;
for 1991-92 England and Wales figures;
for 1992-93 and 1993-94 England only figures:
The figures in the table exclude:
the Department's enterprise programmes;
administration and running costs associated with the programmes;
Employment action.
1992-93 figures exclude provision transferred to the Department of Trade and Industry with effect from 1 May 1992.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will give for each of her Department's schemes for the unemployed, for each year since 1989-90 the expected outturn for 1992-93, and plans for 1993-94 of (a) the number of participants, (b) the average duration of the scheme and (c) the cost per participant in cash terms and in constant 1992-93.

Mr. McLoughlin: The table shows the outturn in Great Britain for each year since 1989-90, the expected outturn for 1992-93 and the plans for 1993-94 of (a) the number of participants, (b) the average length of stay and (c) the cost per participant in cash and constant prices.

[1] Actual information later than 1990-91 is not available because average length of stay calculations are based on entrants to Employment Training and Employment Action in a given period and it is necessary to wait until all entrants in a period have left the programme.
[2] Employment Action began on 1 October 1991.
[3] The 1992-93 unit cost is for Employment Action in the programmes first six months of operation when the programme was building up.
[4] All figures are for Great Britain. These programmes are delivered in Scotland and Wales by Scottish Office and Welsh Office respectively.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate she makes of the number of 16 and 17-year-olds eligible for the youth training guarantee who were not on a youth training scheme for each month since January; how many of these received no financial assistance; and how many she expects will be in this position for each month in 1993.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is not available in the form requested. The Government continue to be committed to the youth training guarantee and a range of financial support is available to young people while they are seeking suitable training.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many and what percentage of youth trainees have achieved national vocational qualifications, and how many at level 2, for each year since the qualification was available for youth training schemes; and what estimate she makes of the number and percentage for this year and the next.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is not yet available. While there is some data on achievement of national vocational qualifications and their equivalents, further work is needed to assess their reliability.

Labour Statistics

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what were the average figures and percentage rates in each year since and including 1987 of those who have been out of work for more than a year for (a) Dundee, (b) Scotland and (c) the United Kingdom for (i) all unemployed and (ii) 18 to 25-year-olds;

(2) what were the monthly unemployment figures and percentage rates in each month of 1992 for (a) Dundee, (b) Scotland and (c) the United Kingdom for (i) all unemployed and (ii) for 18 to 25-year-olds;

(3) what were the average unemployment figures and percentage rates in each year since and including 1987 for (a) Dundee, (b) Scotland and (c) the United Kingdom for (i) all unemployed and (ii) 18 to 25-year-olds.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested for total claimant unemployment for Dundee travel-to-work area, Scotland and the United Kingdom is available from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Claimant unemployment rates by both age and duration are not available. However, United Kingdom unemployment rates by age, expressed as a percentage of the work force in that age band, are available on a quarterly basis, but for standard age bands only. Although these data are not available from NOMIS, they are published in Employment Gazette, table 2.15.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the numbers of men and women in employment, both full time and part time in each quarter since January 1973.

Mr. McLoughlin: The available information can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Mr. Milligan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the change in unemployment in (a) Eastleigh and (b) the average in other Hampshire districts in (i) the past 12 months and (ii) the past five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Mr. Milligan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest percentage rate of unemployment for (a) the borough of Eastleigh and (b) the constituency of Eastleigh.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information on unemployment rates is not available below the level of travel-to-work areas. In October 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, the unadjusted claimant unemployment rate for Winchester and Eastleigh travel-to-work area was 4·8 per cent.

Nuclear Installations Inspectorate

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the annual budget for the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate.

Mr. McLoughlin: Estimates provide for gross expenditure of £18,541,000 for 1992-93.

Private Finance

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in what areas of her Department's responsibilities she has introduced, or may introduce, private finance; and if she will describe in each case the procedures by which private finance is sought.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Important elements of the private finance initiative include capital projects or the provision of services where the greater part of the cost involves capital expenditure. Although the majority of the Department's spending is not in this area, we are considering how to apply the initiative on the basis of the guidance which has been published by the Treasury.

National Training Task Force

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many members of the national training task force are (a) women, (b) from an ethnic minority and (c) people with disabilities, in numbers and as a percentage of the group.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are two—10·9 per cent.—women members of the national training task force and one—5·3 per cent.—member from an ethnic minority group. There are no members who have registered or non-registered disabilities.

Betting Shops

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if she will introduce safeguards and protection for betting shop employees who do not wish to change contracts in the event of a relaxation of betting shop hours;

(2) if she will introduce regulations to prevent exploitation of betting shop employees by employers who refuse to allow a choice between new contracts of employment and existing ones.

Mr. McLoughlin: Terms and conditions of employment are in general a matter for employers and employees, and it is always open to either party to a contract of employment to seek to renegotiate its terms.

All employees have protection against unilateral changes being made to their contracts of employment.

Chlorine Storage

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what account is taken by the emergency off-site plan of each site, designated under the Control of Major Accident Hazards Regulations 1984 because of the quality of chlorine which they store, of the possibility of catastrophic failure of the site's chlorine storage facilities.

Mr. McLoughlin: In preparing off-site emergency plans for all those sites subject to regulation 11 of the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations 1984, as amended, the emergency planners have to take account of the full range of possible events, in accordance with the official guidance published by the Health and Safety Executive—HS(G) 25—"The Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations: Further Guidance on Emergency Plans" and HS(R) 21—revised—"A guide to the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations 1984".

Remploy

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the Government's 1·5 per cent. pay norm will apply to low-paid and disabled employees of Remploy; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 16 December 1992]: Remploy, like other public sector employers, will need to ensure that the overall level of settlements for each of its negotiating groups is kept within the current zero to 1·5 per cent. pay limit.

Sellafield

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate she has made of the effect on the number of people employed at the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield of the delayed start-up; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

I am advised by British Nuclear Fuels plc that nearly 2,900 contracted and agency staff currently work at the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield. Delays to the start-up of the plant will result in premature reductions in this number, the timing of which will depend on the extent of such delays. BNFL has already announced that 100 jobs will be lost at the beginning of January 1993 and has written to contractor companies to remind them of their terms of employment and advise that further redundancies may be necessary. BNFL has estimated that some 3,000 permanent jobs in the company and its suppliers will be sustained by THORP.

WALES

Ambulance Services, Clwyd

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the status of the planned merger between Gwynedd and Clwyd health authorities' ambulance services; and what estimate he has made of the effect of the merger on services for the region.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Arrangements for the statutory provision of ambulance services is a matter for health authorities locally, which have decided that, as from 1 April 1993, the existing ambulance services of Gwynedd and Clwyd will combine to form a north Wales ambulance service.

The health authorities' decision followed a detailed examination by the NHS Wales value for money unit of the costs and benefits of amalgamating the two services which suggested that significant benefits could result.

Welsh Office guidance to health authorities issued on 17 June 1992 gave the view that provision of ambulance services in Wales is likely to be made more efficient and cost effective and, therefore, the standard of patient care is likely to be improved through service amalgamations on a multi-district basis. I would expect the effect of the merger in Gwynedd and Clwyd to accord with this.

Local Authority Debt

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the accumulated debt for each Welsh local authority in the last financial year.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is given in the table.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he intends to review the guidance issued to local authorities by his Department on the operation of section 49 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no plans to review the guidance issued to authorities on the circumstances in which relief might be offered to ratepayers. Decisions are entirely at the discretion of authorities. They have the freedom to help ratepayers if they believe the needs of an area justify such help and after taking into account the fact that 25 per cent. of the cost of any relief is borne by local community chargepayers.

Council Rents

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table of outstanding council rents by district council in Wales for each of the last three years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Local authorities' own estimates of both current and former tenants' rent arrears for the financial years 1989-90 to 1991-92 are shown in the following tables:

Renewable Energy

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 18 November, Official Report, column 219, what is the projected cost of generation for each individual renewable project and in total; and what contribution the generated energy will make towards the United Kingdom-wide energy supply.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The generation costs of individual projects are commercially confidential. Should all 22 renewable energy projects approved so far in Wales under the non fossil-fuel obligation proceed as planned, they will have a rated capacity totalling 102·42 MW.

Education Bill

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to meet the Welsh Joint Education Committee to discuss the impact of the Education Bill on education in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I met the Welsh Joint Education Committee to discuss the Education Bill on 2 December 1992.

Dentists

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dentists have given written notice to each family health services authority to remove their names from the dental list in each week since 8 July; and what is the total for this period.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not available centrally in the form requested. Fortnightly returns from family health services authorities in Wales indicate that, as a direct result of the new fee scale introduced on 8 July, 21 general dental practitioners gave written notice to have their names removed from dental lists from 1 August 1992 to 4 December 1992, while 26 new dentists joined the dental lists during that period. The figures on a fortnightly basis are as follows:

Fortnight ending	Number of Dentists leaving Dental list	Number of Dentists joining Dental list
14 August 1992	1	5
28 August	0	1
11 September	5	3
25 September	7	4
9 October	1	1
23 October	2	1
6 November	3	4
20 November	1	3
4 December	1	4
Totals	21	26

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients have reported to each family health services authority that they have been unable to arrange national health service dental treatment in each week since 8 July.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not held centrally. The family health service authorities are responsible for directing patients to the community dental service in its "safety net" capacity.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many family health services authorities have been unable to provide emergency dental services in each week since 8 July.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is the responsibility of general dental practitioners to ensure that emergency treatment is available for those patients registered with them. Fortnightly returns submitted by family health services authorities in Wales for the period from 1 August to date indicate that only Gwynedd FHSA has been unable to provide out-of-hours emergency dental services for unregistered patients in each fortnight since 1 August 1992. The community dental services act as a safety net for unregistered patients needing emergency dental treatment within normal hours. Discussions are now taking place between Gwynedd family health services authority and Gwynedd health authority with a view to providing a weekend emergency service in Bangor for those patients not registered with a general dental practitioner.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dentists who have not given notice to leave the dental list have given written notice to each family health services authority to terminate or deregister some or all of their capitation arrangements for child patients in each week since 8 July; how many dentists have deregistered patients; and how many patients have been deregistered.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not available in the form requested. Fortnightly returns submitted by family health services authorities in Wales can be summarised as in the tables for the period 1 August 1992 to 4 December 1992.

Fortnight ending	Number of capitation patients de-registered	Number of dentists
14 August 1992	3	2

The information given in these fortnightly returns was intended for general managerial purposes and is not statistically validated.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many family health services authorities have referred patients who have been unable to obtain treatment from a general dental practitioner, to (a) the community dental service, (b) the hospital dental service and (c) a salaried dentist in each week since July.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not available in the form requested. Fortnightly returns from family health services authorities indicate that all FHSAs in Wales have referred patients to either the community or hospital dental services at some stage between 1 August 1992 and 4 December 1992.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the family health services authorities which have (a) held no dental services committee meeting and (b) cancelled a meeting in each months since July.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Dental services committee meetings are only held when there are sufficient cases to be considered. Meetings may not therefore be required on a regular monthly basis. Information as to the frequency of FHSA service committee meetings is not held centrally.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients have contacted each family health services authority asking for help in finding a dentist in each week since 8 July.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Accordingly to the fortnightly returns submitted by family health services authorities in Wales the information requested is as follows:

Fortnight ending	Patients
14 August 1992	742
28 August 1992	754
11 September 1992	715
25 September 1992	644
9 October 1992	681
23 October 1992	673
6 November 1992	714
20 November 1992	632
4 December 1992	569

The information given in these fortnightly returns was intended for general managerial purposes and is not statistically validated.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many dentists who have not given notice to leave the dental list have given written notice to each family health services authority to deregister some or all of their continuing care arrangements for adult patients in each week since 8 July; how many dentists have deregistered patients; and how many patients have been deregistered.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not available in the form requested. Fortnightly returns submitted by family health services authorities can be summarised as in the following table for the period 1 August 1992 to 4 December 1992.

Fortnight ending	Number of continuing care patients de-registered	Number of dentists de-registering continuing care patients
14 August 1992	3	4

The information given in these fortnightly returns was intended for general managerial purposes and is not statistically validated.

Pre-school Playgroups

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet the Clwyd Pre-school Playgroups Association committee to discuss the assisted places scheme.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Secretary of State currently has no plans to meet with the Clwyd Pre-School Playgroups Association committee.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will increase the Wales Pre-School Playgroups Association grant; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Grant awarded to Wales Pre-School Playgroups Association in 1992-93 to support the organisation's core costs was £158,023, compared with £143,657 in each of the previous three financial years.

Wales Pre-School Playgroups Association has applied for grant in 1993-94. The application is under consideration. It is hoped to announce a decision by the end of January 1993.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the moneys given to each of the county social services departments which is earmarked for pre-school playgroup assisted places;

(2) if he will make extra funds available to county authorities to enable them to expand their assisted places schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Earmarked special funds are allocated to counties under the all-Wales mental handicap strategy, to provide a comprehensive pattern of new services including developments for children with a mental handicap. The specific amount allocated to pre-school playgroup assisted places for such children is for decision each year by county joint planning teams who are best placed to decide on local needs and priorities.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of times and dates when he has met the Wales Pre-school Playgroups Association.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I meet representatives of the Wales Pre-school Playgroups Association informally from time to time and attended the launch of Wales Pre-school Playgroups Association "Plymouth" in Newport on 5 June 1992.

Homelessness

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of people who will be homeless in Wales over the Christmas period; and what policies he has to provide homes to accommodate those without a fixed place to live.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Data are collected only with respect to the last day of each quarter. Figures for 31 December 1992 will be available in April 1993. Local housing authorities secure permanent accommodation and other support for all homeless people under part III of the Housing Act 1985.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many homeless households are currently living in temporary accommodation in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The number of households accepted as homeless and accommodated temporarily by local authorities was 1,205 at the end of September 1992.

Christmas Trees

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the effect of acid rain deposition on Christmas tree plantations in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I am not aware of any evidence that acid rain deposition has affected Christmas tree plantations in Wales.

Housing Revenue Account

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to make his housing revenue account subsidy determinations for 1993-94.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I expect to make the determinations very shortly and will place copies in the Library of the House.

I am proposing to confirm an average guideline rent increase of 4 per cent. in real terms with a minimum increase of £1·25 per week and a maximum of £2·75 per week. I estimate that the average guideline rent increase would be £1·84 per week and the resulting average weekly guideline rent £29·17.

For management and maintenance allowances, I propose to confirm an average increase of 1 per cent. in real terms. I estimate that this would raise the average allowance to £794 per annum per dwelling, an increase of £28.

I have placed estimates of the rent guidelines and management and maintenance allowances for each authority in the Library of the House.

The rent guidelines and management and maintenance allowances are the assumptions to be made for subsidy purposes. It is for councils themselves to set their rents and decide how much to spend on management and maintenance within their legal obligations.

Litigation (Health Authorities)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is the source of the funds used to satisfy damages and costs awarded in litigation against district health authorities in Wales;

(2) what is to be the source of the funds used to satisfy damages and costs awarded in litigation against NHS trusts in Wales; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if NHS trusts in Wales will be required to carry insurance against claims for medical negligence and other forms of public liability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Health authorities and NHS trusts in Wales meet the first £30,000 of any claim made under legal obligation from their own resources. The exess costs above this level are met from a centrally managed pool to which contributions are made by participating health authorities and trusts. The pool also covers risks of loss above this threshold arising from incidents of fire/arson, theft, subsidence, flooding and storm damage. In the case of medical negligence, 80 per cent. of any excess above a further threshold of £300,000 is met by the Medical Defence Organisation reserves while these remain.

Participation in these pooling arrangements is not compulsory. It is open to health authorities and trusts to take out commercial insurance for all risks other than medical negligence if they perceive this to be advantageous. Indeed, pool participants may choose to insure themselves against such risks where claims fall below the £30,000 threshold for access to the pool. However, in the case of medical negligence, any NHS bodies which decide to remain outside the pooling arrangements must bear their own risk for all costs other than the 80 per cent. above the £300,000 which may be claimed from the Medical Defence Organisation reserves. In such circumstances health authorities would be able to seek repayable temporary cash allocation increases from the Department, and NHS trusts would be able to seek increased loan finance from approved sources where necessary to meet large claims.

NHS trusts will not be expected to bear the cost of meeting any claims which have arisen prior to the date at which the trust concerned became operational. However, if they choose to participate in the pooling arrangements, their contributions will be geared to anticipated claims on the pool irrespective of the date at which the incident giving rise to the claim occurred. The pool is a system of mutual risk sharing, and participants must accept all of the shared costs as well as all of the shared benefits of pool membership.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the effect upon Welsh farming incomes of changes in hill livestock compensatory allowances.

Mr. David Hunt: The rates of hill livestock compensatory allowances for 1993 recently announced will in themselves mean reduced receipts of about £6·8 million for sheep producers in the severely disadvantaged area—SDA—of Wales. This, however, will be more than offset by increased receipts from the sheep annual premium consequent upon green pound devaluations already announced. The HLCA rate payable on ewes in the disadvantaged area has not yet been determined.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ensure that hill livestock compensatory allowance payments are made by the end of February 1993.

Mr. David Hunt: Producers submit claims for hill livestock compensatory allowances throughout the period from January to the end of March, and some do so thereafter. My Department aims to pay 80 per cent. of claims received by the end of March.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table outlining the effect of the proposed reduction in hill livestock compensatory allowances in each Welsh county.

Mr. David Hunt: The effect on producer receipts of the proposed reduction in hill livestock compensatory allowances in each of the Welsh Counties is shown in the followng table. The figures are based on the number of hardy ewes and other ewes qualifying for SDA payments in 1991.

County	Loss of HLCA receipts £
Gwynedd	1,423,334
South and West Glamorgan	129,765
Mid Glamorgan	302,647
Gwent	160,123
Dyfed	1,144,185
Powys	2,780,774
Clwyd	868,182

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the value, at 1980 prices, of Welsh hill livestock compensatory allowances for each year since 1980.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

Year	Value in real terms £ million
1980	19·8
1981	20·4
1982	19·3
1983	18·7
1984	17·9
1985	17·9
1986	18·9
1987	18·8
1988	18·4
1989	17·6
1990	17·6
1991	19·1

Sensory Impairments

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what assessment he has made of the number of teachers of the hearing impaired that have to be trained annually in order to ensure that there is a sufficient supply of such teachers;

(2) whether he intends to undertake any action to ensure that there is sufficient funding allocated for the training of teachers of hearing impaired and visually impaired children when their funding ceases to be ring fenced in April 1993;

(3) what steps he is taking to ensure that money allocated to local education authorities for the training of specialist teachers for children with sensory impairment is used for this purpose;

(4) if he will make a statement outlining the extent to which local education authorities have been given extra resources to cover the reduction in his support for the training of teachers of hearing impaired children.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There has been no ring fencing of funding for the training of teachers of children with special educational needs in Wales since April 1992. Under the education support and training programme grants, local education authorities have been invited to draw up proposals for special needs training, including the training of teachers of children with sensory impairment, against a pool of resources. This gives local education authorities flexibility in their training programmes to allocate resources according to their assessment of local needs and priorities. The proposed special needs training programme for 1993-94 represents an increase of 17 per cent. compared with the level of expenditure supported in 1992-93, which is itself an increase over the previous year.

In formulating their plans for training, local education authorities are asked to provide their assessment of needs. Their plans have also to meet the objectives and priorities of the overall programme and have to include measures for the monitoring and evaluation of authorities' performance.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy to extend the mandatory training requirement for full-time teachers of hearing impaired children to peripatetic teachers of deaf children.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to base the indicative allocation system for the training of specialist teachers on the number of children with sensory impairment and severe learning difficulties in a local education authority area rather than the total number of pupils in that area.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Following consultation with Welsh local education authorities, funds for the in-service training of teachers of special needs are allocated to authorities mainly on the basis of teacher numbers. However, my right hon. Friend will bear this request in mind when allocation arrangements are reviewed.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he intends to take any further measures in concert with the changes he plans in school education to ensure adequate funding for the training of a sufficient supply of teachers for children with (a) hearing impairment and (b) visual impairment.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Under the grants for education support and training programme for 1993-94, we are making available to local education authorities more than £1 million of supported expenditure for the training of special needs specialist teachers. Funding for the training of such teachers in grant-maintained schools is available through special purpose grants. The responsibility for special educational needs and for the training of specialist teachers lies at local level.

Operation Wizard

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the initiating, funding and accounting of the Operation Wizard exercise carried out by the Welsh Development Agency.

Mr. David Hunt: The rationale for, and functions of, all non-departmental public bodies, and where and by whom they are best carried out, are subject to regular review, both quinquenially as part of financial and management policy reviews and otherwise from time to time. Fees incurred on such studies in 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91 were included in the agency's audited accounts for those years.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency into the fees paid to Barclays de Zoete Wedd and 3i's for the Operation Wizard exercise.

Mr. David Hunt: None.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will undertake and publish a study of the number of beds and locations needed for acute operations in Wales over (a) the next five years and (b) the next 10 years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: We have no such plans.

Hamilton Oil

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has yet received the inspector's recommendations as a result of the inquiry into proposals by Hamilton Oil at Point of Ayr; and when he now expects to announce his decision.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I hope to receive the inspector's report soon. A decision will be announced as soon as possible after the report has been considered.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice he has received from the chairman and members of the Welsh Language Board on the Welsh Language Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Secretary of State and I have had a number of meetings with the chairman and members of the Welsh Language Board and they have made a significant contribution to the Bill which we hope to introduce very soon.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will ensure that copies of the Welsh Language Bill are posted to everyone who made representations to the Welsh Office about the contents of such a Bill, as part of the Welsh Office's public consultation procedures as soon as the Bill is published;

(2) if he will ensure that the Welsh Language Bill is printed and available to (a) hon. Members, (b) the press and (c) the general public prior to 17 December.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Language Bill will be published following its presentation to Parliament. I will be arranging for copies to be sent to all Welsh constituency Members of Parliament. Copies of the Bill will also be made available through HMSO in the normal way.

Welsh Development Agency

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the Welsh Development Agency will acquire the derelict United Engineering Steels site at Brymbo; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I understand that negotiations are proceeding.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he proposes to take to advertise the post of chairman of the Welsh Development Agency; and when he expects to make an announcement.

Mr. David Hunt: I am considering the matter.

Private Finance

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in what areas of his Department's responsibilities he has introduced, or may introduce, private finance; and if he will describe in each case the procedures by which private finance is sought.

Mr. David Hunt: I shall be considering the scope for private finance in Welsh Office programmes, in the light of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's autumn statement.

Job Search Seminars

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of job search seminars held in 1991 and at the latest date in 1992; how many job clubs exist in Wales; and if he will make a statement concerning the future of job clubs and job search seminars.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Job search seminars began in August 1991 and during the period to March 1992 a total of 264 were held in Wales. Between April and November this year, there have been a further 376 seminars. Job search seminars have been successful and will continue next year.

There are currently 75 job clubs in the Principality. The provision of job clubs will expand next year as a result of the Chancellor's autumn statement. However, the number of additional job clubs has not yet been decided.

Transport Supplementary Allowance

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been made available to South Glamorgan county council through the transport supplementary grant since January.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In 1992-93 the council received more than £13 million. A further £14 million is to be provided in 1993-94.

Hill Farming

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the conclusions of the autumn review of hill farming in respect of the current level of farming income for livestock farmers in the less favoured areas of Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 10 December 1992 at columns 757-58 which outlines the findings of the review.

Farms

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the number of farm holdings in each Welsh county for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Farm holdings in Wales: at June

	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991

Note: Figures exclude estimate for minor holdings.
[1] The decreases between 1983 and 1984, and 1989 and 1990 reflect the effect of reclassifying holdings in the light of the results of the 1983 and 1989 Minor Holdings Surveys.

Valleys Initiative

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the projects in (a) the Gwendraeth valley and (b) the Amman valley which have been funded through his Department's valleys initiative to date; and how much has been allocated to each project.

Mr. David Hunt: Information on the programme for the valleys is not collected in the form requested, as projects are funded through a wide range of departmental and agency programmes. I shall, however, write to the hon. Gentleman with more details on activity in the Amman and Gwendraeth valleys and place a copy of the reply in the Library of the House.

North East Wales TEC

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 30 November, Official Report, column 29, when he expects to place in the Library a copy of his letter to the hon. Member for Wrexham about operational surpluses accruing to North-East Wales training and enterprise council.

Mr. David Hunt: A copy of my letter has been placed in the Library of the House.

HEALTH

Waiting Lists (Psychologists)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration her Department and the national health service management executive have given to collecting and publishing figures on the waiting lists for NHS clinical psychologists; and what response she has made to the survey of the national health service clinical waiting lists by the British Psychological Society, a copy of which has been sent to her.

Mr. Sackville: We have no plans to collect and publish figures on waiting lists for conditions requiring treatment by national health service clinical psychologists. A copy of the survey was sent to the Department on 24 November and is being considered. Decisions about the clinical psychologist services provided locally are for local purchasers to determine, based on the assessed health needs of their resident population.

Community Health Services, Camberwell

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new services have been provided in the community in Camberwell district health authority area since 1988.

Dr. Mawhinney: This is a matter for Camberwell health authority.

The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Derek Boorman, the chairman of Camberwell health authority, for details.

Clinical Psychology

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received on the proposal of the northern consortium of regional health authorities to change the funding of postgraduate clinical psychology; and what plans she has to alter the funding of training arrangements for any other NHS profession.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is a matter for regional health authorities to determine the funding arrangements for those non-medical staff groups covered by regional purchasing of education and training.

King's College Hospital

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what examination she has made of the reasons why implementation by Camberwell district health authority of the interim report of the inquiry panel into King's College hospital's accident and emergency procedures required the intervention of the regional general manager.

Dr. Mawhinney: There was no such intervention.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action was taken by her Department in response to (a) Camberwell community health council's annual report of 1990 and (b) other representations by the community health council, in respect of accident and emergency procedures at King's College hospital.

Dr. Mawhinney: These representations were made to the Camberwell health authority, which considered both the report and other representations and met the Camberwell community health council.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what conclusions she has drawn from the report of the inquiry set up at her Department's request into accident and emergency procedures at King's College hospital about the impact of bed closures and bed management policy on the operation of accident and emergency departments;

(2) what consideration was given to the inclusion of bed cuts in the terms of reference of the inquiry set up at her Department's request into accident and emergency procedures at King's College hospital.

Dr. Mawhinney: The terms of reference of the inquiry were to review procedures within the accident and emergency department at King's College hospital in the light of the recent deaths of two patients and to make recommendations as necessary and to report to the Secretary of State through the chairman of the South East Thames regional health authority.

The report has demonstrated that the main problem was not the number of beds but poor bed management.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the three hospitals at which beds are available in Camberwell indicated in the inquiry set up at the request of her Department into accident and emergency procedures at King's College hospital.

Dr. Mawhinney: At the time of the commissioning of the inquiry, there were three hospital sites at which beds were available in Camberwell: King's College, Denmark Hill; King's College, Dulwich and Dulwich north.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the role of the chairman of Camberwell district health authority and the chief executive in the management of King's College hospital's accident and emergency procedures.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Leeds University

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the annual expenditure on servicing the medicines resource centre, the medical advisers support centre and the general practice research centre at Leeds university.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is in the table.

	1991-92 (£)
Medicines Resource Centre	275,000
Medical Advisers Support Centre	365,000
Prescribing Research Unit at Leeds University	377,984

Pharmacists

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many drug information pharmacists are employed by regional, district and family health services authorities; and at what annual cost.

Dr. Mawhinney: Two hundred and twenty-eight drug information pharmacists are employed by regional and district health authorities and by national health service trusts. This includes those working part time. Information on costs is not collected centrally. Pharmacists employed by family health service authorities generally hold the post of pharmaceutical adviser rather than drug information pharmacist.

Source: "Directory of Hospital Pharmacists Engaged in Information Work"—1992 edition. Compiled by North West Thames regional drug information centre.

Medical Advisers

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much public money has been spent on the appointment of medical advisers to family health service authorities resulting from the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1991; and how many medical advisers are currently employed by health authorities.

Mr. Mawhinney: The information is not held centrally. All family health services authorities are expected to have medical advisers.

Prescriptions

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the annual expenditure on establishing, and maintaining, the indicative prescribing scheme for NHS doctors.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information is held centrally only on the cost of issuing monthly expenditure statements to general practitioners, family health services authorities and regional health authorities. The figures do not distinguish between the costs of issuing statements in relation to the indicative prescribing scheme and the prescribing element of fund holders' budgets. The total cost to the Prescription Pricing Agency of issuing these statements is as in the table:

	1990-91 £'000	1991-92 £'000
Capital	6,905	359
Revenue	2,499	3,311

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the expenditure on the prescription analysis and cost scheme in each of the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The prescription analysis and cost scheme—PACT—is an operational system of the Prescription Pricing Authority. The costs of PACT cannot be identified separately.

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the annual expenditure on supporting the publication and distribution of (a) the Drug and Therapeutics Bulletin, (b) the "Prescribers' Journal", (c) the British National Formulary and (d) bulletins from the Medicines Resource Centre in each of the past five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is as follows:

(a) The Drug and Therapeutics Bulletin[1]

	Expenditure (£)
1987-88	608,625
1988-89	660,642
1989-90	723,482
1990-91	[2]750,863
1991-92	827,305

[1] Includes subscription and distribution on costs only.
[2] Figures for the years to 1990-91 include expenditure for the Adverse Drugs Reactions Bulletin which was issued quarterly with the Drugs and Therapeutics Bulletin. This was discontinued in June 1990.

(b) The Prescribers' Journal[1]

	Expenditure (£)
1990-91[2]	[3]146,977
1991-92	183,510

[1] Includes subscription and distribution costs only.
[2] October 1990 to March 1991.
[3] Information is not held centrally prior to October 1990.

(c) The British National Formulary[1]

	Expenditure (£)
1987-88	958,996
1988-89	1,022,731
1989-90	1,058,204
1990-91	1,191,169
1991-92	1,296,320

[1] Includes subscription and distribution costs only.

(d) Medicines Resource Centre (MeReC) Bulletin[4]

	Expenditure (£)
1990-91	250,000
1991-92	275,000

[4] Includes total running costs.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the terms of reference and membership of the prescribing task force.

Dr. Mawhinney: The prescribing task force is a multi-disciplinary group of officials within the Department charged with examining a range of issues relating to general practitioner prescribing. There are no formal terms of reference.

Child Sex Abuse

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the definition of a psychiatric nursing establishment for the purpose of receiving regular inspections by a health authority; and how many clinics for the treatment of child sex abuse fall within it.

Mr. Yeo: The Registered Homes Act 1984 defines a mental nursing home as "any premises used, or intended to be used, for the reception of, and the provision of nursing or other medical treatment (including care, habilitation and rehabilitation under medical supervision) for, one or more mentally disordered patients (meaning persons suffering or appearing to be suffering from mental disorder), whether exclusively or in common with other persons."

The Act specifically excludes premises operated by health authorities, local authorities and Government Departments from this definition. Information on the number of clinics for child sex abusers is not collected centrally.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many clinics in England and Wales specialise in the treatment of offenders involved in child sex abuse and in which towns they are located; and how many other clinics there are which are prepared to treat offenders involved in child sex abuse.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not held centrally.

Radiation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy towards the provision of potassium iodate tablets as prophylactics against radiation damage to populations threatened by civil nuclear emergencies.

Mr. Sackville: Stable iodine prophylaxis is a countermeasure intended to block the uptake of radio-iodine to the thyroid in certain radiological incident scenarios. The Government's policy in this area was principally determined by advice contained in a report from the ad hoc United Kingdom working group on Iodine Prophylaxis[1], a copy of which is in the Library.

[1]Department of Health Report on Health and Social Subjects 39: Nuclear Accident Countermeasures: Iodine Prophylaxis. HMSO.

Care Homes

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who has responsibility for the funding of patients requiring terminal care in private or charitable nursing homes from April 1993.

Mr. Yeo: Support from public funds for hospice care is the responsibility of district health authorities. DHAs are also responsible for placements for equivalent care in nursing homes.

Feeding Tubes

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration she is giving to making naso-gastric feeding tubes and gastrostomy tubes available for general practitioner prescription on form EC10.

Dr. Mawhinney: The addition of naso-gastric feeding tubes and gastrostomy tubes to the prescribable list must, like other new additions to the list, be subject to the availability of resources.

Hospital Admission Policies

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidance has been given to trust hospitals in relation to the treatment of heart disease patients over the age of 65 years; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if her Department has any plans to issue guidance to national health service trust hospitals regarding the imposition of age-related admissions policies; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Decisions concerning the assessment and treatment of national health service patients are matters for the professional judgment of the clinicians involved in the individual case.

Freedom of Speech

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will meet the Manufacturing, Science and Finance Union to discuss local procedures for handling freedom of speech issues within the national health service.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have already offered a meeting with departmental officials to discuss these matters.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the responses she has received to her Department's draft guidance on freedom of speech; and if she will place a copy of the responses in the Library.

Dr. Mawhinney: Responses have been received from:

Comments have also been submitted by a number of individuals.

It would not be appropriate to place copies of comments in the Library without the specific consent of the bodies or individuals concerned.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to issue revised guidelines on freedom of speech in the national health service.

Dr. Mawhinney: The extensive comments received on the draft guidance merit full and careful consideration. Final guidance will be issued as soon as possible.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will consider inserting a reference to the duty of care of NHS staff in the draft guidance on freedom of speech.

Dr. Mawhinney: This will be considered in conjunction with other comments received on the draft guidance.

Private Finance

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what areas of her Department's responsibilities she has introduced, or may introduce, private finance; and if she will describe in each case the procedures by which private finance is sought.

Mr. Sackville: The private finance initiative is intended to apply to all services which are traditionally provided by Government Departments. The measures announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will increase the scope for using private finance in the national health service to improve and extend both patient and support services. The Department is urgently considering how best to apply the initiative on the basis of the guidance which has been published by the Treasury. My officials will send out a letter to all NHS directors of finance inviting them to take full advantage of this initiative. I shall place a copy in the Library.

Joint Consultative Committees

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will allow non-executive directors of health trusts to serve on joint collaborative committees set up under National Health Act 1973.

Dr. Mawhinney: Joint consultative committees are constituted under section 22 of the National Health Service Act 1977. Members of such committees are appointed by health authorities, local authorities and voluntary organisations. A person who is a director of a national health service trust is not precluded from appointment as a member of a joint consultative committee. There is no provision for "joint collaborative committees" in national health service legislation.

Mental Illness

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many social workers there were in England and Wales in each financial year since 1981-82; and how many of these were employed wholly or mainly in caring for the severely mentally ill in the community.

Mr. Yeo: Data on the number of whole-time equivalent social services staff in local authorities in England at September in each year from 1978 are given in "Local Authority Social Services Statistics: staff of Local Authority Social Services Departments at 30 September 1991; England", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to preserve the service available at Henderson hospital, Sutton, Surrey, for personality-disordered clients; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: From 1 April 1993 the Henderson hospital will become part of South West Thames regional psychiatry service. This will ensure funding for the hospital to maintain and develop its services for those patients with special psychiatric needs.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will create a special hospitals authority to cover Henderson hospital, Sutton, Surrey.

Mr. Yeo: No.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the names of hospitals for the mentally ill in England, by districts, which were closed in each of the financial years 1981-82 to 1991-92, and the numbers of beds in those hospitals five years previously; (2) what amount of money was made available for other purposes in each of the financial years 1981-82 to 1991-92 as a result of the closure of mental hospitals.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which relevant local bodies, besides community health councils, health authorities are required to consult before recommending her to authorise the closure of hospitals for the mentally ill.

Mr. Yeo: Most substantial changes in hospital services —such as the opening or closing of facilities—are agreed locally and only where there is no local agreement are they referred to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. Health authorities are encouraged to consult widely in the community, including with community health councils.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will ring fence departmental funding for Henderson hospital, Sutton, Surrey.

Mr. Yeo: This is a matter for South West Thames regional health authority.

The hon. Member may wish to contact Professor Marian Hicks, the chairman of South West Thames regional health authority, for details.

St. Bartholomew's Hospital

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account she is taking in her consideration of the Tomlinson report of the document issued by the North East Thames regional health authority entitled, "A Consultation Document on the Dissolution of the Bart's NHS Trust" published on 22 November; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The consultation document proposing dissolution of the St. Bartholomew's shadow trust was issued by North East Thames regional health authority with Ministers' agreement on the ground that it would be inappropriate for the trust to become operational on 1 April 1993 in the form originally proposed in direct conflict with the recommendations of the Tomlinson report. Moreover, there would have been serious doubts about St. Bartholomew's hospital's fitness for trust status on financial grounds. The consultation document relates solely to the proposed management arrangements for the hospital next year. Full account will be taken of the views expressed in response to it before a decision is reached.

Community Care

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to give directions as to the manner in which assessment under section 47(4) of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 is to be carried out; and what form the directions will take.

Mr. Yeo: We have already issued extensive policy and practice guidance on assessment. There are no current plans to issue directions on this matter.

Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the membership and terms of reference of the Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances.

Dr. Mawhinney: The members of the advisory committee are:

Chairman

Professor Harry A. Lee
Professor of Renal Medicine (University of Southampton), Consultant Physician (St. Mary's Hospital, Portsmouth)

Members

Dr. Charles L. M. Beardmore
General Practitioner (Walton-On-the-Naze, Essex)

Professor Ian W. Booth
Senior Lecturer in Paediatrics and Child Health, Professor of Paediatric Gastroenterology and Nutrition (University of Birmingham)

Ms. Julie Fenton
Senior Dietitian (Normansfield, Teddington)

Dr. Anne Kobza Black
Consultant Dermatologist (St. John's Hospital for Diseases of the Skin), (Royal Throat, Nose and Ear Hospital, London)

Professor Andrew H. G. Love
Professor of Medicine (Queen's University, Belfast); Consultant Physician (Royal Victoria Hospital, Belfast).

Mrs. Anita MacDonald
Chief Paediatric Dietitian (Children's Hospital, Birmingham).

Mr. Graeme Millar
Community Pharmacist (Edinburgh).

Dr. Gwyn W. Phillips
General Practitioner (Pencoed, Mid-Glamorgan).

Professor Alan Shenkin
Professor of Clinical Chemistry (Royal Liverpool Hospital).

Dr. Richard S. Tiner
General Practitioner (Taunton, Somerset)

The committee's current terms of reference are:

"To keep under review the principles for determining whether preparations should properly be regarded as drugs, foods, toilet preparations or disinfectants, and to give advice on the classifications of particular preparations in these categories submitted to the Committee."

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 12 November that the committee's remit is extended to have regard to comparative cost as well as therapeutic use when considering whether an item should be treated as a drug appropriate for prescription by general practitioners under the national health service. Revised terms of reference, to reflect this change, will be announced shortly.

Food Hygiene

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has for the training, instruction and supervision of food handlers in food hygiene.

Mr. Sackville: The Government will introduce a sole and simple requirement for all food handlers to be trained, instructed and supervised in food hygiene according to the work they do. Copies of a statement of intent and related documents issued to all interested parties have been placed in the Library.

Folic Acid Report

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects the chief medical officer's expert advisory group on folic acid to report its findings; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We are pleased to announce the publication today of the group's report, "Folic Acid and the Prevention of Neural Tube Defects".

The report endorses existing advice that women who have already had a baby with a neural tube defect should take a diet supplement of 5 mg of folic acid daily—or 4 mg if such a preparation becomes available—from the time when they wish to become pregnant until the end of the third month of pregnancy. Additionally, the expert group has recommended that, to reduce the risk of having a first baby with a neural tube defect, all women who are likely to become pregnant should increase their intake of folic acid/folate throughout this same period. This particular B vitamin is available from certain foods in the form of folate. In addition, some foods are fortified with folic acid. Such women are also advised to take a 0·4 mg folic acid food supplement daily until the 12th week of pregnancy.

We welcome this opportunity to reduce the risk of women giving birth to babies with a neural tube defect. The United Kingdom chief medical and nursing officers are ensuring that the advice reaches all doctors, senior nurses, midwives and health visitors. However, all women need to be aware of these recommendations as, in most cases, they will need to consider taking extra folic acid/folate before they have become pregnant.

We are arranging for copies of the report to be placed in the Library.

Doctors and Dentists

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the numbers of doctors and dentists by grade employed in the hospital and community health services in each English region for 1990 and 1991.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My Department conducts a census each September of doctors and dentists employed in the hospital and community health service—HCHS—in England. Copies have been placed in the Library. Checks on the data for September 1991 suggested that the national health service had omitted a significant number of doctors and dentists from the census for that year. A recent survey of all 14 regions, designed to produce reliable data on the numbers of HCHS doctors and dentists by grade in each region, confirmed that the NHS had omitted the whole-time equivalent—WTE—of about 2,000 HCHS doctors and dentists from the original September 1991 census. The survey also indicated that the NHS had omitted about 500 WTEs from the September 1990 census. I regret that some of the published figures for 1990 are therefore incorrect.

The Department's best estimates of WTEs by grade for England as a whole and in each region for September 1990 and 1991 are shown in the table. More detailed estimates —for example—by specialty group—will be published in due course.

NHS Staff

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of (a) administrative staff, (b) managerial staff, (c) nurses, (d) junior doctors and (e) other medical staff employed in each region for each of the last three years.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 9 November 1992]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend gave my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) today.

The remainder of the information requested is in the tables.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the administration costs of each regional health authority for each year since 1989-90; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 30 November 1992]: Figures of expenditure on headquarters administration for each regional health authority and region as a whole, for the financial years 1989-90 and 1990-91, are shown in the tables. Regions are managed in an integrated way and it would be misleading to interpret regional health authority data in isolation from those for the district health authorities they manage. The region totals provide a more valid picture. Information for 1991-92—derivable primarily from annual financial returns—is not as yet available.

Source: Annual accounts of regional and district health authorities in England.

Notes to the tables:

1. The figures for expenditure on headquarters administration include all current expenditure on the pay and pay related costs of staff of all disciplines—including general managers—employed at regional or district headquarters levels and their office costs and overheads. The costs of clerical and secretarial support staff employed in departments in hospitals and at other local levels are excluded: such costs are regarded as operational.
2. The expenditure by each regional health authority will be influenced by a number of factors such as the size of the total budgets managed, the population served, the extent to which services are directly managed, the balance of management between regional and district levels and the number of district health authorities involved all of which differ between regions.

Health and Personal Social Services

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will update table 3.1 of "Health and Personal Services Statistics for England 1992" by giving the total numbers of health services staff and practitioners, and local authority social services staff on 30 September 1991 and 30 September 1992.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 8 December 1992]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend gave my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) today, at column 421.

The remainder of the information requested is in the table.

Health Charges

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 26 November, Official Report, column 810, what assessment she has made as part of her Department's review of the measures being taken throughout Europe to limit medicine bills of the proportion of the growth in national health service spending on medicines in 1991, which was due to the cost of new medicines introduced in the past five years; and what comparable figures are available for Germany, France, Holland and Belgium.

Dr. Mawhinney [pursuant to his reply, 15 December 1992, c. 180-81]: I regret that some of the figures quoted in the previous reply may have been misleading, because they included expenditure on medical devices as well as on medicines. To clarify the position, the figures, under the definition of new medicines stated before, are as follows.

For England only, the net ingredient cost of NHS drugs dispensed by chemists grew by £207 million in 1991. Of that growth, £143 million, or 69 per cent., was spent on new medicines introduced in the previous five years.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Bosnia

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the EC task force's contribution to the delivery and planning capacity in Bosnia of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since its formation in November, the European Community task force—ECTF—has focused its efforts on improving the co-ordination and liaison between the various relief programmes of EC member states, the European Commission and the United Nations High Commission for Refugees; the provision of additional trucking capacity and a secondary distribution network; and the provision of teams of experts from EC member states to work in conjunction with the UNHCR. To date the ECTF has 37 trucks with a further 30 expected shortly and various experts are being recruited. The United Kingdom has played a leading role in the formation of the EC task force and has provided its head, together with 12 trucks, 10 trailers and 17 drivers and mechanics.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the planning and priorities of the relief efforts for Bosnia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our relief effort in the former Yugoslavia is focused on the provision of food, shelter and medicines to those in need in Bosnia this winter. We have already committed over £70 million in humanitarian relief, all of which has been agreed in consultation with the UNHCR who are co-ordinating the international response to this crisis. I also refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for High Peak (Mr. Hendry) on 23 November at columns 452-53, in which I set out our humanitarian relief programme in more detail.

Aid

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what decisions have been taken since 1 July to increase economic aid and technical assistance to developing countries in (a) the European Development Council and (b) the Overseas Development Administration.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As announced in the autumn statement, the Government have made provision for our overseas aid programme to developing countries to increase to £1,900 million in 1993-94 and to be maintained at that level during 1994-95 and 1995-96. For 1993-94 this represents an increase of 3·5 per cent. in cash terms, 1 per cent. in real terms over the current year's figure. No decisions to increase economic aid or technical assistance were taken at the European Development Council.

UN Relief and Works Agency

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwaelth Affairs what assistance has been provided to the United Nations Relief and Works Agency in the current financial year.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Her Majesty Government's regular support for UNRWA amounts in 1992-93 to some £6 million, maintaining the United Kingdom's position as one of UNRWA's major donors. In addition, my noble friend the Minister for Overseas Development has agreed to provide nearly US$820,000—around £0·55 million—for the construction and equipping of a 630-place elementary and preparatory level girls school. The school is to be built at Beit Ula in the Hebron area of the West Bank and will help to relieve the increasing pressure on educational facilities among the growing school-age Palestinian community. Construction of this British/UNRWA school in a needy area is expected to start shortly and to be completed within 18 months. When complete it will provide 12 new classrooms, a laboratory, a library, a multi-purpose room, two administrative rooms and playground as well as necessary furnishings and teaching equipment.

We also contribute to the work of UNRWA via the EC which is to meet the total construction costs of the new Gaza general hospital, a 232 bed facility. The EC is providing 13 mecu and construction is expected to begin in February 1993.

Guyana

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has regarding future aid for Guyana.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have concluded that it would be right to resume capital aid, following the holding of free and fair elections in October. We plan to provide up to £2 million of programme aid immediately for disbursement before 31 March 1993, conditional upon IMF board approval of a new enhanced structural adjustment facility arrangement for Guyana on 21 December. We will also be ready to consider new requests for technical co-operation. We will consider our longer-term plans early in the new year, after further discussions with the Government of Guyana.

Annual Review

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will publish the Overseas Development Administration's 1992 annual review.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Copies of the ODA's 1992 annual review "British Overseas Aid" have today been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Somalia

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 9 December, Official Report, column 675, if he will list the sponsors of the Security Council resolution 794 and state for each sponsor (a) the nature and type of assistance that country is giving to the implementation of resolution 794,

(b) the type of humanitarian and development aid that country is providing and (c) the specific regions of Somalia in which that country is actively involved.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Security Council resolution 794 had no sponsors. It was submitted as a presidency text with the agreement of the members of the Security Council.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the non-governmental organisations assisted by the British Government to provide humanitarian and development aid to Somalia in each of the last five years and for each organisation state whether it is working (a) in the north, (b) in the south or (c) in both.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 15 December 1992]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to his question of 11 December 1992, Official Report, columns 434-35.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list every organisation through which cash from the British Government has been channelled for Somalia together with (a) in each case the sum of money agreed for each of the years 1989, 1990, 1991 and 1992, (b) the sum paid out to each organisation in each of the past 24 months and (c) the range of aid or development project each organisation is helping to provide.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 11 December 1992]: The information the hon. Member has requested is not available for all of the last four years. Information on commitments of Britain's humanitarian assistance to Somalia by month, implementing agency and region is available for 1991 and 1992 has been placed in the Libraries of the House. Information on disbursements of bilateral development assistance to Somalia in 1989, 1990 and 1991 by project has been placed in the House Libraries. These projects were implemented under bilateral aid agreements between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Somalia. The ODA was responsible for the administration of all funds disbursed.

Iraq

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how Her Majesty's Government intend to act on the recommendations of the joint report by the ODA, EC and the office of the United States Foreign Disaster Assistance on the emergency winter assessment mission to northern Iraq in October.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In response to the findings of the assessment mission we reacted swiftly with a donation of £2·6 million to fund the purchase of 2,700 tonnes of chick peas and a similar quantity of edible oils through the United Nations World Food Programme, as well as road repair and maintenance through the Save the Children Fund. We are also contributing to relief efforts through our share of the EC emergency assistance allocation of 10·13 million ecu, which is being used for the provision of food and kerosene, and for support to non-governmental organisations projects in both northern and southern Iraq. We continue to monitor the situation and are considering the funding of further NGO proposals.

Humanitarian Appeals

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what humanitarian appeals have been launched by the United Nations in the last six months; what the United Kingdom's contribution has been to each of the appeals; and whether the appeal targets have been met;

(2) what humanitarian appeals are being considered or under preparation in the United Nations for launch in the next three months.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answers 19 November 1992]: The United Nations has issued consolidated humanitarian appeals in the last six months as follows:

Million United States $

	Total amount sought	Total contributions/ pledges
1. The Consolidated United Nations-Southern African Development (SADC) Appeal for the Drought Emergency in Southern Africa (DESA)	858·1	628·4
2. The Consolidated Appeal for Emergency Humanitarian Assistance for Afghanistan	179·7	59
3. The Special Consolidated United Nations Inter-Agency Appeal for Kenya[1]	[1]159·7	[1]128·3
4. The Updated Consolidated Inter-Agency Appeal for the Special Emergency Programme for the Horn of Africa (SEPHA) (including the 100-day Plan of Action for Somalia)	1,145·8	793·0
5. The United Nations Consolidated Inter-Agency Programme of Action and Appeal for former Yugoslavia	561·7	358·6
6. The New Plan of Action for Inter-Agency Humanitarian Programme for Iraq (1 July 1992 to 31 March 1993)	256·1	61·8

[1] This appeal was revised and integrated into the overall SEPHA appeal: the figures quoted are those included in the SEPHA appeal.

The United Kingdom has provided £51·2 million in response to item No. 1 above including £20 million of programme food aid which was excluded from the appeal and £7·55 million, of which £2 million is via United Kingdom NGOs, for the appeal for Afghanistan, item No. 2. The special consolidated United Nations inter-agency appeal for Kenya, item No. 3 was incorporated into the second SEPHA appeal item No. 4 to which the United Kingdom contributed £18 million. This followed a contribution of £23 million in response to SEPHA I earlier in the year. On the appeal for the former Yugoslavia, item No. 5, we have provided £7¾ million in cash and over £14 million in kind and on the appeal for Iraq, item No. 6 £2½ million via the World Food Programme. These figures do not include the United Kingdom's share of EC assistance.

More detailed information on appeals from individual United Nations agencies could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

We expect to receive shortly a consolidated appeal on Mozambique. The Secretary-General is expected to appeal this month for $6 million to cover costs associated with the remainder of the Cambodian refugee repatriation during 1993.

Note: All United Nations appeals are demoniated in United States dollars. Our pledges are made in pounds sterling and converted into United States dollars by the United Nations, using the exchange rate current on the day the moneys are received.

World Bank

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he proposes to make the World bank more accountable.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The World bank is accountable to the 172 countries which are shareholders and which elect or appoint executive directors who form its board. The board is responsible for the conduct of the general operations of the bank, including specific policies and lending proposals. Directors recently gave broad endorsement to the conclusions and recommendations of the report by an internal task force on portfolio management, which proposed changes designed to improve effective implementation of projects financed by the bank and internal accountability of staff. There will be further discussions in the board on various aspects of the bank's management practices; and our director will continue to play an active role in getting the recommendations put into effect.

HOME DEPARTMENT

NHS Premises (Fire Safety)

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plan he has to remove Crown immunity from national health service buildings with respect to fire safety legislation; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what research his Department has carried out into the cost of bringing national health service premises up to the standards required by fire safety legislation; and what cost was estimated.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: National health service premises are already subject to the provisions of the Fire Precautions Act 1971. The Crown immunity which they formerly had was removed on 1 April 1991 by section 60 of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990.

Sunday Trading

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has of the number of shops which have opened for trade on the Sundays in the weeks before Christmas; and what representations relating to loss of trade he has had since 1 November from shops which have remained closed on Sundays.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on the first point is not available centrally. The second point has been raised at ministerial meetings with two major retailers.

Babri Masjid Mosque

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the number of religious places, private property and citizens which have been attacked where the attack has been linked to the Babri Masjid mosque incident; and what arrangements have been made for the protection of religious places, private property and citizens.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I am aware of 34 attacks on Muslim, Hindu or Sikh people and property since the Babri Masjid mosque incident.

Police efforts to protect religious places are the responsibility of chief officers, working with the local community. All forces are in contact with local community leaders to provide them with advice on the protection of vulnerable targets. Where appropriate, specific measures have been taken, such as the assignment of officers to the protection of certain places, a telephone hotline and closed circuit television cameras.

My right hon. and learned Friend met leaders of the Hindu and Muslim communities on 10 December to discuss with them these incidents. Following that meeting, they issued a joint statement condemning violence and calling for restraint.

Strip Searches

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many strip searches have taken place in each of the London police station within the Greater London area, on juvenile detainees in each of the last three years.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what instructions are issued on who is allowed, when a juvenile detainee is being strip searched and such strip searches involve the anal/genital area, (a) to carry out the strip search and (b) to be present while it is taking place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A search involving physical examination of a person's body orifices is defined by the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 as an intimate search. Additional guidance which is issued by the Department advises that a visual inspection of intimate parts of the body should be regarded as an intimate search even though physical contact may be absent.

An intimate search must be carried out by a doctor or a nurse, unless an officer of at least the rank of superintendent considers that this is not practicable. Code of practice C further prescribes that, subject to his or her wishes, an intimate search of a juvenile may take place only in the presence of an appropriate adult of the same sex.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who, under Home Office instructions, must be present when a strip search takes place of (a) a boy and (b) a girl juvenile being held in a police state; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The codes of practice issued under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 state that a strip search must take place only in the presence of persons who are of the same sex as the person being searched, and whose presence is necessary for the purpose of the search.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy as to the use of strip searches of juveniles detained in police stations and such searches taking place without their parents being present or informed that this action is to take place.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There is no specific requirement for the parents of a juvenile to be present during a strip search, although they must be notified as soon as practicable of the circumstances of his or her arrest and asked to come to the police station.

Victim Support

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much public money has been made available to victim support organisations in each Welsh county in each of the last three years.

Mr. Jack: Home Office grant aid to individual local schemes is allocated by the victim support local funding panel, on which the Home Office has observer status. The table details the public funding given to local schemes in Wales for the financial years 1990-91 to 1992-93:

Funding of victim support in Wales 1990-91 to 1992-93

Notes:
A local authority grant of £1,025 to the north Wales victim support scheme in 1990-91 has been split arbitrarily between Clwyd and Gwynedd.
Non-Home Office figures for 1992-93 represent local schemes' budget estimates for the year, not outturn.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many juveniles were convicted of offences in 1990 and 1991 in (a) the west midlands and (b) Walsall; and how many of these were under the age of 15 years.

Mr. Jack: The information is given in the table.

Maritime Investigations

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) in what circumstances police authorities have powers to oversee and fund maritime investigations;

(2) if he will list the conditions of tender and give details of all tenders submitted to the Devon and Cornwall constabulary for the purpose of contracting for the salvage of MFV Pescado;

(3) if he will instigate an independent inquiry into all aspects of the issuing of the tender to Swan Salvage for the salvage of MFV Pescado; and whether the Golden Eye salvage vessel displayed her flag of origin.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not readily available and I will be writing to the hon. Member.

Race Relations Act 1976

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to bring sentencing within the scope of the Race Relations Act 1976.

Mr. Jack: We have no such plans, but my right hon. and learned Friend has recently published information under section 95 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 to facilitate the performance by persons engaged in the administration of criminal justice of their duty to avoid discriminating on the grounds of race or sex or any other improper ground.

Community Relations

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his meeting with Muslim and Hindu community leaders on 10 December.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary and I welcomed the opportunity to listen to the concerns of both communities and were greatly encouraged that the community leaders were able to agree the following joint statement:

"Recent events in the Indian sub-continent are a cause of deep concern to many people in Britain and touch profound religious feelings.

In Britain, Hindus and Muslims have lived peacefully together for many years. We are appalled that some people are evidently using the troubles elsewhere as an excuse for attacks on places of worship, businesses and individuals in this country.

We utterly condemn the use of violence where it occurs.

We appeal now to everyone in our communities to continue to show the utmost restraint, to resist any suggestion of retaliation, and to co-operate fully with the police and other authorities.

Restoring calm between our communities is in the best interests of every Hindu and Muslim in Britain."

Close contact is being maintained with both communities, and on 16 December I visited the west midlands to talk to members of the local communities and to hear a police assessment of recent events in the area.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women were (a) murdered or (b) assaulted by their spouses or co-habitees in the borough of North Warwickshire, the borough of Nuneaton and Bedworth and the county of Warwickshire in each of the last five years.

Mr. Jack: Records available to me show the number of women who were the victims of offences currently recorded as homicide committed by their spouses or co-habitants in the Warwickshire police force area in each of the last five years is as follows:

Year	Number
1987	1
1988	—
1989	—
1990	1
1991	—

Information on the precise location within the police force or on assaults on women by their spouses or co-habitants is not collected centrally.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the West Midlands listing the domestic violence units in his area and the expenditure involved in maintaining each of the domestic violence units.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The force has 11 units, one for every division. Six of the units are staffed by two officers each, at an annual cost of £50,000 per unit; the remaining five are each staffed by a single officer at an annual cost of £30,000 per unit.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many men were (a) killed or (b) assaulted by their wives in Warwickshire in each of the last five years.

Mr. Jack: Records available to me show the number of men who were the victims of offences currently recorded as homicide committed by their wives in the Warwickshire police force area in each of the last five years is as follows:

	Number
1987	—
1988	—
1989	1
1990	—
1991	—

Information on assaults on men by their wives is not collected centrally.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of Warwickshire (a) giving the number of officers in his force who have received training in dealing with domestic violence and (b) listing the domestic violence units in the area covered by his force and the expenditure involved in maintaining such units.

Mr. Charles Wardle: All officers receive general training in dealing with incidents of domestic violence, by which the force means all violence which occurs within the family, including child abuse. Two hundred and ten officers have undergone more specialised training. The force currently has one dedicated family protection unit which was established in July this year. The unit is staffed by an inspector, two sergeants and 14 constables. The cost of maintaining the unit includes approximately £464,000 a year for staff salaries, plus additional costs for training and travelling.

Prison Officers (Accommodation)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has received on the ability of prison officers to find accommodation in the London area at rents that they can afford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No survey has been undertaken by the prison service as to how prison officers newly posted to London prisons find suitable accommodation. Since fresh start, prison officers are no longer quarters entitled.

Officers who are transferred to London prisons on permanent compulsory transfer terms are entitled to reimbursement of the expenses incurred in moving home. If they own a property, its sale at the current market value is guaranteed through a Home Office scheme operated by the Black Horse Relocation Company. Financial assistance to officers transferring at public expense from a cheaper to a more expensive area and whose outgoings have necessarily increased is available in the form of additional housing cost allowance. Officers may apply for an advance of salary for house purchase which is repayable, free of interest, over a 10-year period.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison officers have resigned from the service in each of the last five years and have given as the reason the difficulty in finding reasonably priced accommodation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No records are kept of the number of prison officers who resign from the Prison Service because of their inability to find suitable accommodation.

Mrs. Cynthia Hazig

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action his Department now intends to take following the report of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration on the complaint made to him by the hon. Member for Tooting on behalf of Mrs. Cynthia Hazig of Tooting, so that similar incidents do not in future take place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This case arose because of defective laminate in a passport issued in 1985. This type of passport is no longer issued and the new style, machine-readable passport has to meet very strict quality controls. New instructions have been issued to immigration officers on the examination of suspect travel documents.

Racial Incidents

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents of racially motivated crime have been recorded each year since 1979 in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jack: The information available relates to reported racial incidents, as defined by the Association of Chief Police Officers, and is for England and Wales only. The available figures are as follows:

Number of racial incidents in England and Wales

Number of incidents

Year	Provincial forces	Metropolitan Police	England and Wales
1985	3,955	1,945	5,900
1986	4,833	1,733	6,566
1987	3,126	2,179	5,305
1988	2,169	2,214	4,383
1989	2,347	2,697	5,044
1990	3,451	2,903	6,354
1991	4,509	3,373	7,882

ACPO definition: Any incident in which it appears to the reporting or investigating officer that the complaint involves an element of racial motive, or any incidents which include allegations of racial motivation made by any person.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been victims of racial attacks in London in each year since 1990, detailed by London borough; and what advice is given to the Metropolitan police on reporting such attacks as racially motivated.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) on 16 December on the number of racial incidents in each London borough.

The Metropolitan police work to Association of Chief Police Officers guidelines in these matters in common with all other forces.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many racially motivated attacks on asylum seekers and refugees have been recorded by his Department in 1992; in which counties they took place; and what were the victims' nationalities.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not available centrally.

Child Sex Abuse

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many offenders involved in child sex abuse incidents are currently being held in bail hostels or other similar institutions whether awaiting trial or on probation or parole, in the Coventry and northern Warwickshire area.

Mr. Jack: There are currently two probation/bail hostels in Coventry and Nuneaton. On 15 December 1992 three of the residents out of 29 were defendants or offenders in child sex abuse cases.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the amount of public funding paid to private institutions for the treatment of offenders involved in child sex abuse.

Mr. Jack: Local authorities, health authorities and probation committees may fund treatment of individual offenders at their discretion, but no funding for this purpose came directly from central Government.

Parrots

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average fine imposed for killing parrots in 1991-92.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Police (Code of Ethics)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to the code of ethics produced by the Association of Chief Police Officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Home Office officials have been working with the police service on the development of the code of ethics, which was launched on 8 December by the Association of Chief Police Officers. The code of ethics is not yet finalised, and one of the issues that have to be addressed is its relationship with police disciplinary procedures. This will be considered as a part of the review of police disciplinary procedures announced on 16 December.

Betting Shops

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representtions he has had from employees of William Hill's betting shops about the proposals to extend opening hours into the evening.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have record of 17 representations from employees of William Hill, all of which were opposed to the evening opening of licensed betting offices. In addition, we have received a number of other representations from betting office staff in which the employer was not identified.

Gaming

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he proposes to maintain as public policy the avoidance of undue stimulation of gaming.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government have no plans to depart from their policy that the demand for gambling, including gaming, should not be unduly encouraged. As in the past, this principle will continue to be applied in different degrees according to the nature of the gambling involved.

EC Frontier Controls

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the position regarding frontier controls on people travelling between the United Kingdom and other member states of the European Community after January 1993.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The date 1 January 1993 will not, in the event, be of any practical sigificance so far as the movement of people travelling within the European Community is concerned. There remain varying interpretations of article 8A of the treaty of Rome. None of the member states of the Community intends to make fundamental changes on 1 January 1993 to the arrangements in force at its frontiers with other member states for controlling immigration and for police checks.

Immigration control on entry to and departure from the United Kingdom will continue to be operated in accordance with the Immigration Act 1971 and relevant Community legislation. Passengers entering the United Kingdom from other member states, except the Republic of Ireland, will continue to be required to present their passports or other national identity documents to the immigration officer for inspection. In the case of British citizens and other EC nationals, the purpose of the check is simply to establish their nationality, and the arrangements already made for expediting the passage through the immigration control of EC nationals will continue. No change will be made in the exercise of the powers contained in the prevention of terrorism Act.

It will similarly continue to be necessary for people travelling from the United Kingdom to other EC countries, other than the Republic of Ireland, to be in possession of a passport or other national identity document. The member states that are parties to the Schengen convention expect to abolish frontier controls at the land frontiers between their territories, and subsequently at airports in respect of flights between their countries, in the course of 1993. On present plans, however, it will still be necessary thereafter for people travelling from the United Kingdom to one of those countries to be in possession of a passport or other national identity document, together where necessary with a visa.

I shall be considering what further changes might be made in the course of 1993 to the United Kingdom immigration control arrangements vis-a-vis other member states of the European Community, in furtherance of our policy of reducing checks on EC nationals to the minimum level compatible with the retention of effective immigration control of third-country nationals together with adequate safeguards against the entry of terrorists and other serious criminals.

Asylum and Immigration Appeals Bill

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many letters have been received by his Department expressing concern about the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Bill.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Since 22 October we have received approximately 210 letters about the Bill.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many citizens of the former Yugoslavia have entered the United Kingdom since 6 November.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Comprehensive information on admissions of passengers to the United Kingdom is collected on a monthly basis, and the data for the whole of November are not yet available.

Refugee Children

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations his Department has received in support of the provision of a children's advocate on behalf of unaccompanied refugee children.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not readily available.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide the asylum statistics for 1992, including details of the numbers of decisions reached, refusals by category and their nationalities.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information for the period January to November 1992 is given in the table.

Applications received for asylum in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, and decisions,[1,2] by nationality, 1 January 1992-30 November 1992.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers have been returned since November 1991 to third countries outside the EC; and if he will name those countries.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information is given in the table. All decisions on third country removals are taken in the light of the circumstances of the individual case.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many new detention places for asylum seekers have been set up since August 1991; if he will name the detention centres; and what further plans his Department has to set up new detention places.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Since August 1991, the number of detention places available to accommodate Immigration Act 1971 detainees including asylum seekers has increased by 18. A new seven-bed detention centre at Stansted airport was commissioned in August 1992 and improvements to the detention facilities at Haslar which were completed in September 1992 provided an additional 11 places. Under plans which have not yet been finalised, we are aiming to provide around a further 300 additional detention places in phases from 1993 to 1995.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the criteria used to place asylum seekers in Her Majesty's prisons and the conditions in force.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Detention under the powers contained in the Immigration Act 1971 is authorised only where there is no alternative. The overriding consideration is whether the person is likely to comply voluntarily with any restrictions imposed upon him, including any arrangements for removal from this country.

Her Majesty's prison Haslar is used almost exclusively for Immigration Act detainees, including asylum seekers. Otherwise, prisons are used only when no places are available at either Haslar or an immigration service detention centre, or where the detainee is unsuitable for detention in these establishments.

Immigration detainees in prisons are accorded access to visits, private cash, education, physical education, work and legal aid.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum applicants refused asylum have been deported or removed in 1991 and 1992, under category 101 and the safe third countries rule.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information for the period January to November 1992 on asylum applicants refused under paragraph 101 of the immigration rules, and on applicants at ports removed from the United Kingdom on safe third country grounds, is given in the table. Comprehensive information for 1991 is not available.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when instructions were sent to the post in Islamabad to issue entry clearance to Mr. Syed Farhat Abbas—Ref. TH/16422/90 and—B 020653—to join his wife in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I very much regret that the entry clearance officer was not immediately informed that the presenting officer's application for leave to appeal to the immigration appeal tribunal against the adjudicator's decision to allow Mr. Abbas' appeal has been withdrawn on 27 October. Instructions to issue an entry clearance were sent by telex to the British high commission in Islamabad on 16 December.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when instructions were sent to the post in Islamabad to issue entry clearance to Mr. Mohd Asif Gill—Ref. Imm/v 94835 and Imm (APP 320)—to join his wife in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The adjudicator's determination allowing Mr. Gill's appeal was delivered on 2 November and after consideration in the Home Office was sent to the British high commission in Islamabad on 1 December, with a request that the entry clearance officer should act in accordance with the spirit of the determination.

Dr. Kypros Loucas

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what inquiries were made before Dr. Kypros Loucas began to work at Wormwood Scrubs; what these inquiries revealed; and what account was taken of the inquiries in considering whether to appoint Dr. Loucas to work connected to prisoners with severe mental disorders.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to review the employment of Dr. Kypros Loucas in the prison medical service at Wormwood Scrubs;

(2) what plans he has to investigate the circumstances in which Dr. Kypros Loucas was appointed to his present part-time post at Wormwood Scrubs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if his Department will continue to employ the services of Dr. K. Loucas as a visiting psychiatrist at Her Majesty's prison, Wormwood Scrubs;

(2) if he will make a statement on the employment of Dr. Kypros Loucas at Wormwood Scrubs prison.

(3) when his Department first became aware of the concern expressed by the Mental Health Act Commission on Dr. Kypros Loucas; and if he will make a statement on Dr. Loucas' continued employment at Wormwood Scrubs prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Dr. Kypros Loucas was appointed by open competition following an advertisement in the British Medical Journal inviting applications from fully registered medical practitioners of consultant status. Two professional references were offered and followed up. These provided no contra-indications to his appointment and an appointment as a visiting consultant psychiatrist was offered on 28 June 1990.

The appointment requires Dr. Loucas's attendance for two sessions per week at Wormwood Scrubs. As visiting consultant he does not have sole charge of patients and acts as psychiatric adviser to, and under the direction of, the full-time senior medical officer.

The Prison Service was not aware of the concern expressed by the Mental Health Act Commission until shortly before the broadcast of the "Cutting Edge" television programme on 7 December.

In his own interests, Dr. Loucas has been advised not to visit the prison until the allegations contained in the programme have been investigated.

Private Finance

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what areas of his Department's responsibilities he has introduced, or may introduce, private finance; and if he will describe in each case the procedures by which private finance is sought.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In general, private finance involving the acceptance of risk by the private sector, has not been used.

I am considering how to apply the Government's private finance initiative in its areas of responsibility on the basis of the guidance which has recently been published by the Treasury.

Women Prisoners

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the possibility of women prisoners joining the therapeutic regime at Grendon.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At the end of 1994, a small unit will become available at Grendon. There are a number of possible options for its use: for adult male offenders, for young offenders or to make the unit one for women prisoners. No decision has been taken about the future of the unit.

Before the possibility of women prisoners participating in the therapeutic unit at Grendon could be contemplated it would be necessary:

(a) to have reliable information about the therapeutic needs of women prisoners; and
(b) to explore all possible options for meeting those needs, drawing on experience both inside and outside the prison service.

Furthermore, any decision to place women prisoners in Grendon would require very careful consideration, including:

(a) defining the objectives of such placement, in particular identifying what benefits the women would derive from it;
(b) examining staffing mix, training, attitudes;
(c) exploring essential safeguards for all involved; and
(d) appropriate consultation.

Careful, detailed planning would then be needed.

Prison Staff

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the numbers of (a) prison custody officers and supervisors, (b) management, (c) administrative and maintenance staff, (d) full and part-time chaplains, (e) catering staff, (f) medical staff, (g) education staff and (h) seconded probation officers working in HMP Blakenhurst and HMP Bullingdon, respectively.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 16 December 1992]: A contract for the operation of Blakenhurst prison has been awarded to UKDS and the prison is due to open in April 1993. There is currently a skeleton staff on site supervising routine maintenance work. The controller appointed under section 85(1)(b) of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 and his secretary are also based at the prison.

As at 10 December, the numbers of staff at Bullingdon prison, in the grades requested, were as follows: officer grades—prison officers, senior officers, principal officers, night patrol and auxiliary officers—309; governor grades—eight; administrative and industrial grades—50; chaplains—three; medical grades—16; education staff and instructional officers—12; seconded probation officers—six. A contract for the provision of catering services was awarded to ARA Services plc in March. One member of the administrative staff is responsible for monitoring the contract.

Arrests, London

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis indicating how many (a) white people and (b) people from the ethnic minorities were arrested in London in each month of 1992; and, how many in each category were subject to an immigration check whilst in custody.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 16 December 1992]: Information on the ethnic appearance of persons arrested in the Metropolitan police district is recorded by the arresting officer. The following information is available for 1992:

Month	White European	Dark European	Black	Asian	Far Eastern	Middle Eastern	Unknown
January	5,537	374	1,668	522	99	122	650

West Yorkshire Police

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many crimes were solved by allocation to known criminals serving prison sentences by the West Yorkshire police force in 1991; and what was the percentage of crimes detected for the year other than by allocation.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 14 December 1992]: The available information for 1991 shows that there were 15,280 offences cleared up in West Yorkshire by interview of convicted offenders in custody. Eighty one per cent. of offences were cleared up by methods other than allocations.

Security Risks

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in each year since 21 November 1979, and so far in 1992, the Director-General of the Security Service has reported information about a present or former Minister or senior public servant indicating that he or she may be or may have been a security risk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 7 December 1992]: It is not the practice to disclose information of this kind.

Prison Education

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the expenditure per head of prison population, for prison education for (a) each United Kingdom prison and (b) the United Kingdom as a whole, in each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 16 December 1992]: Total payments to local education authorities and relevant overheads per head of prison population in England and Wales are available only from 1 April 1984, and are shown in the table. Information for individual prison establishments, could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Year	£
1984-85	470
1985-86	459
1986-87	402
1987-88	441

1989-90	620
1990-91	740
1991-92	779

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what action he will take to evaluate the standard of education provided by prison education establishments;

(2) what steps he is taking to monitor the quality of services provided within the prison education service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 16 December 1992]: The Prison Service already employs professionally qualified education staff in its chief education officer's branch to provide guidance on the evaluation of education programmes and to advise and assist governors to monitor the standard and quality of educational services delivered in prison establishments. Education services for inmates are also inspected by Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the curriculum provided within British prisons is comparable with that available within the community.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 16 December 1992]: Yes. The need to ensure this is one of the main reasons why the present arrangements in England and Wales are being changed and competitive tendering has had to be undertaken. Local education authorities are the current providers of education to inmates in prisons, but from 1 April 1993 they will no longer have the primary responsibility for the provision in the community of the futher education curriculum which most prisoners require.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements are in force to ensure that prisoners can continue education courses after release from British prisons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 16 December 1992]: The Criminal Justice Act 1991 requires that from 1 October 1992 all adult offenders in England and Wales sentenced to one year's imprisonment or more and all young offenders will be supervised in the community after they leave the prison or young offender institution. Prison staff prepare discharge reports which identify to the supervising service, among other things, education and training programmes which the inmate has undertaken in custody and which he or she might usefully continue after release. Where possible, the inmate will be offered help in making any necessary arrangements.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve basic education resources for prisoners.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 16 December 1992]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to a question by the hon. Member for Bradford, North (Mr. Rooney) on 17 November, Official Report, column 104. Since 1979, the Government have consistently increased in real terms payments to local education authorities for the provision of education in prisons. Competition is directed to ensuring from 1 April 1993 the most effective use of the resources that can be made available by awarding contracts to those providers, whether from the public or private sector, which offer the best combination of quality and price and which reflect the priority of the service.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has concerning the prison experience available to agencies tendering for prison education service contracts which were not existing prison education establishments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 16 December 1992]: All organisations that have been invited to tender for the provision of educational services to prisoners were asked to give details of any experience which they had of delivering education provision in prison establishments, and of any other relevant experience.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if records of achievement will be kept in respect of prison education; and if these will have national accreditation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 16 December 1992]: The terms and conditions of the contracts to be let for provision of educational services in prisons from 1 April 1993 will require providers to introduce nationally accredited records of achievement for prisoners.

Prison Disablement Officers

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many disablement officers have been employed within the prison service; and in which prisons they were serving in the last financial year for which details are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 16 December 1992]: The disabled persons liaison officer for the prison service is based in the headquarters directorate of personnel and finance—DPF3. There are no disablement officers employed in prison establishments.

SCOTLAND

Housing Maintenance, Dundee

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sums have been allocated to the City of Dundee district council for housing repairs and maintenance in each of the past five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The level of a local authority's expenditure on the repairs and maintenance of its housing stock is a matter for decision by the local authority concerned. The expenditure by the City of Dundee district council on the repairs and maintenance of its housing stock in each of the past five years, as recorded in returns made to the Scottish Office Environment Department, is as follows:

1987-88	7,425,628
1988-89	8,305,212
1989-90	10,181,038
1990-91	11,112,639
1991-92	14,581,254

Hostel Schemes

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assistance his Department is giving directly or through Scottish Homes to the development of foyer hostel schemes in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Scottish Homes is contributing to the funding of a feasibility study for a foyer in Kirkcaldy, in conjunction with Kirkcaldy district council, Fife regional council and the Historic Buildings Council; and is examining the possibility of a feasibility study for a foyer in Glasgow.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what central Government mechanism exists for ensuring that council-owned houses are maintained in a windproof, watertight and fit condition; and how many times these powers have been used over the past five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Local authorities have an obligation at common law to keep their houses in a tenantable and habitable condition. In addition, section 17 of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 imposes a duty on local authorities to manage their houses. Repairing obligations are a matter between landlord and tenant.

Kyle-Kyleakin Ferry

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the loss to Caledonian MacBrayne's annual revenues of the scheduled end to the Kyle to Kyleakin ferry.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend does not consider it justified to require Caledonian MacBrayne to make public commercially sensitive information about revenues, operating surpluses and deficits incurred on individual routes. The company's annual report and accounts for 1991, which were presented to Parliament on 27 May 1992, and are available in the Library, identified the operating deficits and surpluses realised by the company in respect of groups of services defined by area of operation.

Whitson Fairhurst Houses

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what Government assistance is available for Whitson Fairhurst houses; and what sums have been allocated to each district council this year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Owners of Whitson Fairhurst houses and other house types designated as defective who bought them from a public sector authority before 26 April 1984 can require their local authority to repurchase or give grant to make good the house under part XIV of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987. The Government issue supplementary capital allocations each year to local authorities, on the basis of authorities' returns, to meet in full their liabilities to incur capital expenditure under the Act.

The supplementary capital allocations issued to local authorities in 1992-93 on the housing revenue account—HRA—and non-HRA blocks to cover their expenditure under the Act in respect of all types of designated defective housing is set out in the following table. Allocations on the HRA block are in respect of the repurchase of defective houses and on the non-HRA block are to make available reinstatement grants for the repair of designated houses. Information is not held centrally in respect of individual types of designated defective housing such as Whitson Fairhurst.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what figures he has to show the life expectancy of Whitson Fairhurst houses in the City of Dundee district.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: When first built, the Whitson Fairhurst house type could reasonably have been expected to have a life of about 60 years. A defect subsequently discovered in the type may mean that some will last for a shorter period, but much depends on the condition of individual houses.

KS Properties Ltd.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he was consulted about the write-off of money due to the Scottish Development Agency by KS Properties Ltd; what steps he is taking to recover the money; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The Scottish Office approved in June 1990 a request by the then Scottish Development Agency to write off the sum of £40,084, being the balance of a loan owed to the agency by KS Construction Limited. The agency earlier wrote off £4,900 in interest accrued on the loan. These actions followed the company entering into receivership. Writing off of debt is a step taken only where the debt is judged irrecoverable.

If my hon. Friend requires further details about this matter, which was essentially an operational matter for the Scottish Development Agency, I am sure that the chairman of the agency's successor body, Scottish Enterprise, would be pleased to attempt to assist him.

Wool Production

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the effect of removing the wool price guarantee from 1 May 1993 upon (a) Scottish wool production, (b) wool production in the crofting counties and (c) crofter and sheep farmer incomes from wool production.

Mr. Hector Monro: Removal of the wool price guarantee should not significantly affect wool production in the crofting counties, nor in Scotland generally, wool being essentially a by-product of the sheepmeat industry.

The effect on the incomes of individual producers will vary but returns from wool account for less than 5 per cent. of total producer returns from sheep.

Fluoridation

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if the chief dental officer will issue a statement on water fluoridation;

(2) what considerations led to the issuing of the statement on fluoridation of water by the chief medical officer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: In the light of newspaper articles which did not adequately represent his views on fluoridation, the chief medical officer wrote on 3 December to the chairman of Greater Glasgow health board to clarify the position. Copies of his letter were sent to the chairmen of Argyll and Clyde, Ayrshire and Arran and Lanarkshire health boards. The letter explained his views and summarised the scientific evidence that fluoridation is a safe and highly effective means of reducing dental decay, particularly in children. The chief dental officer fully concurs with the terms of the letter and has no plans to issue a separate statement. Copies of the letter are being placed in the Library of the House.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to announce the outcome of the current applications for NHS trust status in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have received 14 applications from hospitals/units interested in becoming NHS trusts in April 1993. These were submitted by Caithness and Sutherland, Raigmore, Moray Health Services, Grampian Healthcare, Dundee General Hospitals, West Lothian, Monklands and Bellshill, Stirling Royal infirmary, Royal Alexandra hospital, the North Ayrshire and Arran general hospitals, Ayrshire and Arran Community Healthcare and, in Glasgow, the Southern General, Yorkhill and the Victoria infirmary. Public consultation on the applications has been carried out by the appropriate host health boards who have submitted to me reports on the comments made.

As previously, all applications are being considered against the published criteria of benefits for patients, management competence, the involvement of professional staff, and the financial viability of the applicant unit. I have completed my consideration of the applications for Moray Health Services, Dundee General Hospitals, Grampian Healthcare, Stirling royal infirmary, the Royal Alexandra hospital, Yorkhill, Southern General and Victoria infirmary. I have concluded that these applications meet the criteria and consequently should be approved. My decision in respect of Glasgow hospitals is without prejudice to the review of acute services currently being undertaken by Greater Glasgow health board.

I expect to complete my consideration of the outstanding six applications shortly and will announce my decisions as early as possible in order that successful candidates can get ahead with the work required before becoming operational on 1 April 1993.

The establishment as NHS trusts of the successful candidates offers a further opportunity for improving services which are already of a high standard. The experience of the two Scottish trusts currently operational is of more patients being treated, greater innovation in the services being offered, and in general a service which is endeavouring to be more responsive to the needs of patients. Those promoting the current applications have indicated a commitment to achieving similar outcomes for their patients. This is to be welcomed and, I believe, augurs well for the NHS in Scotland and of course patient care.

Shipping Subsidies

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for shipping subsidies for sea transport services in the Highlands and Islands in 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Subject to parliamentary approval of the estimates, I propose to make available in 1993-94 total subsidy provision of £15·129 million as compared with £13·657 million in 1992-93. This represents an increase of 10·8 per cent. over last year's level of provision. The deficit subsidy for Caledonian MacBrayne will be £7·165 million. For services to Orkney and Shetland, tariff rebate subsidies of up to £6·679 million will be made available. Up to £1·285 million will be available for other coastal shippers operating on the west coast of Scotland.

This substantial increase in financial support for shipping services clearly affirms the Government's continuing commitment to assist essential sea transport services to the western and northern isles.

Nuclear Fuel, Torness

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all papers deposited by his Department at the public inquiry into the application to build a dry store for spent nuclear fuel at the Torness nuclear plant; how many officials from his Department are expected to attend the inquiry; and what budget has been made available to cover the costs of the inquiry.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 December 1992]: Two statements have been deposited by the Scottish Office Environment Department. One is a brief resume of radioactive waste management policy and the other gives a detailed statement of the regulatory regime operated by Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate in Scotland. Scottish Office officials will attend the inquiry as necessary; thus far two officials from the Scottish Office Environment Department have given oral evidence. No specific budgetary provision has been made for this inquiry.

Ewe and Suckler Cow Premiums

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider organising appeals on ewe and suckler cow premiums to be heard consecutively when an appeal so constituted would provide a new entrant to farming with a stocking requirement best suited to the land on which he operates.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 16 December 1992]: We are currently considering the detailed arrangements which will be necessary to manage quotas under the sheep annual premium scheme and the suckler cow premium scheme. It is too early to specify what these will be.

EC Structural Funds

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which regional and island councils have made applications concerning the inclusion of areas eligible for assistance in relation to objective 1, objective 2, objective 3, objective 4 and objective 5 of the European Community's structural funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 15 December 1992]: Regional and island authorities wholly or partly within the existing Highlands and Islands objective 5b area have presented a detailed case for objective 1 status. All other regional authorities, as well as Grampian and Strathclyde, have made representations regarding either objective 2 or objective 5b status for all or part of their respective areas. Objectives 3, 4 and 5a are not limited geographically.

Housing

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many new homes will be provided by Inverclyde district council in (a) 1992-93 and (b) 1993-94; what is the total provision from Scottish Office funds which will be received by the council in support of capital expenditure on housing; and what capital expenditure he expects the council to incur in each of the next two years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 December 1992]: Information on the number of dwellings completed in 1992-93 and 1993-94 is not yet available.

Inverclyde district council's gross housing capital allocations for 1992-93 total £11·805 million. I plan to announce provisional allocations for 1993-94 before Christmas.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sums of money have been given to the Inverclyde district council for housing maintenance and repairs in each of the last seven years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 December 1992]: Local authority expenditure on housing maintenance and repairs is financed mainly from rental income. Expenditure on housing maintenance and repairs by Inverclyde district council in each of the last seven years, as recorded in returns made by the council to the Scottish Office Environment Department, is as follows:

1985-86	4,115,765
1986-87	5,176,806
1987-88	5,550,497
1988-89	5,875,281

1989-90	6,296,113
1990-91	8,866,330
1991-92	7,856,574

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many new houses were completed in Strathclyde in each year since 1979; and if he will publish an analysis of those figures by local authority district and between private, local authority and housing association ownership management.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 December 1992]: Information on the number of dwellings completed in each district and islands council area for private, local authority, and housing association ownership or management is contained in the quarterly statistical bulletins published by the Scottish Office entitled "Housing Trends in Scotland", or prior to 1983 "Scottish Housing Statistics", copies of which are in the Library.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many new homes were provided by Inverclyde district council in each of the past 10 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 December 1992]: Information on the number of local authority dwellings completed in each district and islands council area is contained in the quarterly statistical bulletins published by the Scottish Office entitled "Housing Trends in Scotland", or prior to 1983 "Scottish Housing Statistics", copies of which are in the Library.

Fisheries Protection

Ms. Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether a decision has now been made on the future of the Scottish fishery protection patrols run by the Royal Navy from Rosyth.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer of 15 December 1992]: The Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency expects to reach agreement shortly with the Ministry of Defence on a contract to provide fisheries protection patrols in Scottish waters in 1993-94. No decision has been taken on arrangements for 1994-95 and future years.

Earnings

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish a table showing the proportion of part-time female manual workers, part-time female non-manual workers and all female part-time workers with earnings excluding overtime less than (a) £3, (b) £4·50 and (c) £5·20 per hour in (i) the parliamentary constituency of Greenock and Port Glasgow, (ii) Strathclyde, (iii) Fife, (iv) Grampian and (v) Scotland as a whole;

(2) if he will publish a table giving the proportions of full-time male manual workers, full-time male non-manual workers and all full-time male workers with earnings excluding overtime less than (a) £190 per week and (b) £200 per week in (i) the parliamentary constituency of Greenock and Port Glasgow, (ii) Strathclyde, (iii) Grampian, (iv) Fife and (v) Scotland as a whole;

(3) if he will publish a table showing the proportions of full-time female manual workers, full-time female non-manual workers and all full-time female workers with earnings excluding overtime of less than £190 per week in (a) Strathclyde, (b) Grampian, (c) Fife and (d) Scotland as a whole.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 15 December 1992]: Information on the level of details requested is not readily available. I will write to the hon. Member giving the requested information—where sample sizes allow—as soon as possible. A copy of the letter will be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Edinburgh Summit

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his current estimate of the total cost to (a) Edinburgh district council, (b) Lothian regional council and (c) the Scottish Office of the staging of the Edinburgh summit of the European Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 15 December 1992]: The main costs of organising the European Council and associated media facilities—estimated at £6·4 million—will be met by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The policing costs—estimated by Lothian and Borders police at £2·5 million—will be met in the usual way: 51 per cent. by central Government, in this case the Scottish Office through police specific grant; and 49 per cent. by the relevant local authority, in this case Lothian regional council. In addition, a number of organisations, including the Scottish Office, have staged events or offered hospitality to mark the holding of the European Council in Edinburgh. The cost to the Scottish Office of the eve-of-Council concert, associated hospitality and media activity is estimated at £150,000. The cost of other events, including those for which Edinburgh district council and Lothian regional council were responsible, is a matter for the organisations concerned.

Ambulance Service

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the ambulance service cover operated through the night in (a) Renfrewshire and (b) Strathclyde as a whole; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 15 December 1992]: The level of ambulance service in Renfrewshire and Strathclyde is an operational matter for the general manager of the Scottish ambulance service. Cover in these areas has been reorganised to ensure that staff and vehicles are deployed in the most efficient manner using a system which has improved performance in other areas. The general manager will continue to monitor the level of night-time cover provided to ensure the most effective service.

A1

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the most recent data on traffic volume and flows on sections of the A1 road in Scotland which have been prepared by the A1 steering group.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 December 1992]: Traffic flows on the A1 are being continuously monitored. The annual average daily flows during 1991 which are the most recently collated figures are listed.

	Number
Edinburgh city bypass	19,900
Bankton to Tranent	12,500
Tranent to Haddington	14,800
Haddington to East Linton	12,000
East Linton to Dunbar	10,700
Dunbar to Lothian regional boundary	7,100
Lothian regional boundary to Ayton	5,700
Ayton to national border	7,700

Clyde Report

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate which recommendations made by Lord Clyde in the Orkney inquiry report he has (a) accepted, (b) already implemented, (c) rejected or (d) is still considering; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 16 December 1992]: Lord Clyde's recommendations cover a wide range of issues. Not all were directed to my right hon. Friend. Action to follow-up the recommendations can be summarised as follows:

Recommendations
1, 2, 3	Accepted
4	Accepted, subject to consultation with training agencies, social work authorities and the police
5, 7-14, 19-23, 27, 28	Accepted, drawn to attention of social work authorities for action

178	Already accepted as priority area in The Scottish Office specific grant scheme
170, 179, 185	Management issues for consideration by social work authorities
183, 184	Accepted, to follow monitoring The Scottish Office specific grant scheme
186, 187	Accepted, drawn to the attention of Chief Constables
188-192	For consideration by The Scottish Office, local authorities and the Association of Directors of Social Work
94, 193, 194	Drawn to attention of Orkney Islands Council for action

Community Charge

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in which regional and island areas the community charge registration officer has undertaken an annual canvass of premises since April in order to maintain the accuracy of the community charges register; and what information he has regarding the estimated costs of such canvasses in 1992-93.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 16 December 1992]: I understand that all Scottish community charges registration officers have, since April, conducted the annual canvass, required by the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987, in order to maintain the accuracy of their community charges registers. No information is collected centrally about the cost of this exercise.

A96

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the current road improvement projects on the A96, giving details of expenditure in each case.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 December 1992]: Under the route action plan for the A96 trunk road, the following schemes are currently under construction or being prepared:

	Estimated cost
1. Major Schemes	£ million
Bucksburn Diversion (under construction)	6·9
Lhanbryde Bypass	2·6
Keith Bypass	12·0
Kintore Bypass	14·5
Blackburn Bypass	9·6
2. Minor Improvements	£
Huntly/Dufftown Stacking Lane (under construction)	200,000
Ardgilzean Stacking Lane (under construction)	200,000
Alves Stacking Lane / Alves/Ardgye Climbing Lane	1 million
Colpy Stacking Lane	300,000
East Road, Elgin Improvement	650,000
Banff Stacking Lane	150,000
Newtongarry/Adamston Climbing Lane	1·5 million
Central Reserve Safety Fencing, Tyrebagger Hill	150,000
Morayston to Tornagrain Improvement	950,000
3. Accident Investigation and Prevention (AIP) Schemes	£
Tertowie Junction, North of Blackburn	1,000
Mosstodloch	14,000
Bends West of Lhanbryde	3,000
Bends East of Ardgilzean	7,500
Kintore Primary School	15,000
Coachhouse Inn Junction Improvement	1,800
Smithton–Culloden West Junction	20,000
Smithton–Culloden East Junction Stacking Lane	100,000
Inverness–Hardmuir Junction	6,000

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will announce the commencement date for the Llanbryde bypass on the A96.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton [holding answer 16 December 1992]: A public local inquiry was held on 3 November 1992 to consider outstanding objections to the draft statutory orders for this scheme and the report of the inquiry is awaited.

If the reporter recommends that the orders should be made the outstanding preparation work will be completed in the summer of 1993. Within the A96 route action plan funds are being made available for various improvements to upgrade the route. The Lhanbryde bypass is well placed to compete for such funding.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will announce the route and commencement date for the Keith bypass on the A96.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton [holding answer 16 December 1992]: Draft orders and a draft compulsory purchase order have recently been published.

In the statement which I made on 5 March setting out the forward roads programme, I announced that, subject to the satisfactory completion of the statutory procedures and the availability of funds, it was the Government's intention to start this scheme in the year 1994-95.

EC Initiatives

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money has been received by (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole under each of the approved European Community initiatives to date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 16 December 1992]: Three Community initiatives operate in Scotland with specific allocations for the period 1990-93. These are:

	Total Allocation Scotland		Total Allocation Strathclyde
	mecu	£ million	mecu	£ million
Renaval	24·43	19·86	21·04	17·11
Rechar	20·02	16·28	4·00	3·26
Leader	7·21	5·86	1·39	1·13

In addition, Scotland benefits from allocations to Great Britain programmes under other Community initiatives. The details of the amounts committed to successful Scottish projects are:

	Scotland £	Strathclyde £
Stride	1,493,103	[1]n/a
Now	999,411	142,336
Horizon	3,178,742	992,772
Euroform	2,794,124	383,875

[1] Beneficiaries are spread throughout the Objective 2 areas in Scotland. A separate figure for Strathclyde is not available.

For 1993, objective 2 and 5b areas in Scotland will be able to bid for a Great Britain programme under the RETEX Community initiative. As yet, no allocations under RETEX have been made.

Note: The authentic figures for allocations are those expressed in ecu. Equivalents expressed at the current exchange rate of £1 = 1.23 ecu are for illustrative purposes only. For most initiatives part of the allocation has already been received from the Commission at a previous exchange rate. The final sterling sums available to the programmes will depend on the exchange rates at the time the various payments are received.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

RECHAR

Mr. Illsley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to relax capital spending controls for those local authorities entitled to bid for European Community RECHAR programme moneys to enable them to bid for a fair entitlement of the money available under the scheme.

Mr. Robin Squire: I have been asked to reply.

On 30 June 1992 my Department issued details of the 1992-93 arrangements for the treatment of European regional development fund—ERDF—grants to local authorities through the "other services" block, which covers the generality of ERDF grants for which this Department is responsible. These will ensure that local authorities will receive supplementary credit approvals to provide 100 per cent. public expenditure cover for ERDF receipts for RECHAR projects. From 1993-94 onwards, public expenditure cover will be provided at 100 per cent. for all forecast ERDF receipts.

In addition, although there are no plans to relax the capital finance rules specifically for those local authorities which are eligible for ERDF, from 13 November 1992 to 31 December 1993, every authority will be able to spend virtually all of the capital receipts they receive.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what action he has taken to attract and secure a second RECHAR programme;

(2) what response he has made to the report on proposals for a second phase of the Community's RECHAR programme for the regeneration of coal mining areas; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if the will support local authority attempts to secure a second RECHAR programme of EC aid for coal areas.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 16 December 1992]: The present RECHAR initiative is only one of 13 Community initiatives financed by the European structural funds.

The Edinburgh European Council decided that after 1993:

"The allocation for Community Initiatives should be between 5 and 10 per cent. of total resources committed under the Structural Funds. They should mainly promote cross-border, transnational and inter-regional cooperation and assistance for the outermost regions, in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity".

Detailed decisions on future Community initiatives, including the possibility of a second RECHAR initiative, will not be taken until after next year's review of all the regulations on the structural funds.

Tropical Timber

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 808, if he will publish an estimated number of forest dwellers that are dependent directly upon the trade in tropical timber; and if he will outline the benefits derived by the forest people from such trade.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have been asked to reply.

Reliable global estimates of the numbers of forest dwellers dependent upon the tropical timber trade are not available. the main benefit is likely to be employment.

"Policy Appraisal and the Environment"

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what account he took of the advice on page 7 of the Department of the Environment's document "Policy Appraisal and the Environment", issued in 1991, before announcing the current proposed pit closures and energy policy.

Mr. Eggar: My Department's objectives, copies of which are in the Library, include the objective of taking proper account of environmental issues in the development of all its policies.

Royal Mail

Mr. Dykes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to allow the Royal Mail to carry items through the post under 5kg in weight, exempted from the distance selling arrangements for value added tax; and what effect he estimates this would have on intra-Community trade.

Mr. Leigh: I have no plans to vary the range of products that may be carried by the Royal Mail, or the conditions under which such products may be carried.

Magazine Publishers

Mr. Dykes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will broaden his review of barriers to trade to take into account the distance selling arrangements for magazine publishers after 1 January 1993.

Mr. Leigh: I am aware of concerns which have been expressed about the possible impact of distance selling regulations on magazines. These are being taken into account in the Council working group discussions in Brussels. I shall be happy to consider any representations from magazine publishers.

Caminus Energy

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) whether the appointment of Caminus Energy as consultants to his Department was the result of competitive tender; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what factors were taken into account in the decision to appoint Caminus Energy as consultants for his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We invited a number of companies to tender to undertake work on the review. After evaluating all the proposals, we appointed Caminus Energy because of its experience in the coal and electricity fields and the quality of its presentation. It also represented good value for money.

Furniture (Fire Safety)

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received concerning his proposals for variation of the Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations concerning the letting of furnished accommodation.

Mr. Leigh: To date, some 90 representative organisations and individual businesses have commented on the proposals. Organisations representing providers of furnished accommodation and tourism interests have sought a much longer period in which to meet the fire resistance requirements, while those representing consumer interests expressed concern about the safety implications of a further postponement.

Nuclear Reprocessing

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he informed the European Commission of all loans, grants and loan guarantees provided to British Nuclear Fuels plc under the Atomic Energy Act 1989, in respect of the Thorp reprocessing plant; and under what provision of EC law this notification is required.

Mr. Eggar: The question whether the matters referred to by the hon. Member are notifiable state aids is one which will have to be considered by the Commission in addressing Greenpeace's complaint.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the predicted construction cost of the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield when consent for construction was given; and what is the most recent estimate of its completion cost, in both historic and current prices.

Mr. Eggar: When consent was given for construction of the THORP plant at Sellafield, the estimated cost of the plant, together with that of the receipt and storage facilities and an appropriate share of the cost of vitrification facilities for high level waste, was £645 million in mid-1977 money values.

Construction was completed in February 1992. I am advised by BNFL that the actual cost of the plant, together with the ancillary facilities mentioned above, was £1,960 million. The cost, exclusive of the share of the vitrification facilities, was approximately £1,850 million.

If the cost of £1,960 million is deflated to mid-1977 money values from the date when the various expenditures occurred, the equivalent value is £851 million.

Job Creation

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what job-creation measures were introduced following the announcement of the closure of the Chatham dockyards, the Corby steelworks and the Ravenscraig steelworks; what was the total cost of these measures; and how many new jobs have been created.

Mr. Sainsbury: Following the Chatham dockyard closure in 1984, remedial measures included the designation of an enterprise zone by the then Secretary of State for the Environment and activity by English Estates to clear dereliction, provide new infrastructure and market the reclaimed dockyard site under a co-ordinated development plan. Total net expenditure by English Estates to date has been £69 million, but the eventual level of receipts from the project is expected to broadly balance out expenditure. The English Estates site is expected to provide some 5,000 jobs and housing for 5,000 people.

The Corby steelworks closed during 1980, and remedial measures included development area status in 1979, designation as a European Coal and Steel Community—ECSC—steel closure area in 1980, the setting up of the Corby development corporation in 1980 and an enterprise zone in 1981. Expenditure on regional grants—regional development grants, regional selective assistance and regional enterprise grants—to date has been £51·4 million: not all of this has been directly job related, but that which was resulted in the creation of 5,195 jobs and the safeguarding of a further 113.

Figures about ECSC loans for all areas are held by the European Commission. Questions about development corporations and enterprise zones are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, and those about Ravenscraig for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

East Sussex

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what proposals he has for ensuring that the potential for economic growth in East Sussex is fulfilled;

(2) what assessment he has made of the economic difficulties facing East Sussex;

(3) what assistance is available to East Sussex to enable the county to attract inward investment.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies that I gave on 8 and 10 December, Official Report, columns 590 and 749-50.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what steps he is taking to ensure that East Sussex is able to attract foreign-based companies wishing to set up business in the United Kingdom;

(2) what are the opportunities for economic development in East Sussex.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer my hon. Friend to my answers of 8 and 10 December to my hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Mr. Bowden); Official Report, columns 589-90 and 749-50.

Businesses in East Sussex as in the rest of the country will benefit from a favourable tax regime, lower interest rates and a stable low inflation economy.

European Structural Fund

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what policy he will adopt in deriving his priorities when responding to any request for advice from, or consultation by, the European Commission in respect of bids made by local authorities relating to the designation of parts of their areas as being eligible for support under objective 5(b) of the European structural fund; and when he expects to be in a position to respond to such requests for advice or consultation;

(2) what is the latest date after which he will not entertain submissions from local authorities for parts of their areas to be considered as eligible for support under objective 5(b) of the European structural fund.

Mr. Sainsbury: The European Commission does not expect to present its proposals for revised structural funds regulations until early next year. It will then have to be considered by the Council.

Copyright

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations his Department will make to EC Ministers on home copying of copyright music; and what assessment he has made of the effect as between EC member states of the introduction of an EC-wide home copying royalty.

Mr. Leigh: The possibility of a directive on home taping has been discussed three times in the Internal Market Council, and on each occasion the United Kingdom has expressed a general expression reservation on the need for Community action. It is not possible to make an assessment of the effects of an EC-wide levy scheme until details are known. At the present time, the Commission has not submitted any formal proposal for such a scheme.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimates his Department has made on the level of home copying of copyright music in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Leigh: My Department has not itself conducted or commissioned research into the level of home copying in the United Kingdom, but both copyright owners and consumer groups have carried out their own surveys. These surveys are not directly comparable, but both indicate that the practice of home copying of copyright music is widespread. The bodies concerned have drawn differing conclusions as to the consequences of this for the economic interests of copyright owners.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations his Department have made to the Government of Poland on piracy of copyright music.

Mr. Leigh: The United Kingdom Government has not made direct representations to the Government of Poland on the piracy of copyright music, but has fully supported European Community initiatives to achieve effective protection of intellectual property in that country. Earlier this year, Poland entered into an association agreement with the Community, one condition of which is that both the level of intellectual property protection and the means for enforcing rights must be brought up to the standard comparable to that in the Community.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a paper outlining the United Kingdom Government position on the EC proposals on copyright harmonisation.

Mr. Leigh: I have no plans to publish such a paper. Early in 1991, the Commission announced an ambitious programme for harmonisation in the copyright field. A directive on rental, lending and related rights has already been adopted under that programme. Other directives are at an advanced stage of negotiation, and further initiatives are expected. In all cases where proposals have already been submitted by the Commission, the Government have provided explanatory memoranda to Parliament, and have fully consulted relevant interests in establishing its negotiating position. This process will continue as new proposals emerge.

Telephone Charges

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to bring forward legislative proposals to oblige telephone service providers to lower or remove the standing charge element of domestic telephone bills.

Mr. Leigh: I have no such proposals. Under existing legislation, the Director General of Telecommunications has the power to limit or reduce telecommunications operators' standing charges if he considers that there is insufficient competition to ensure that prices are set at a fair level.

Rural Post Offices

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many rural post offices closed in 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Leigh: For the four years commencing 1 April 1989 the changes in the numbers of rural post offices were as follows:

	Closures	Openings	Total number of rural post offices
1988-89	262	54	10,470
1989-90	241	49	10,278
1990-91	294	65	10,049
1991-92	193	86	[1]10,016

[1] Includes 74 satellite offices not previously included.

Small Businesses

Mr. George: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many small businesses have gone out of business in (a) the west midlands and (b) Walsall metropolitan borough council since 1987.

Mr. Leigh: The best available guide to trends of businesses comes from VAT data. During the period end 1986 to end 1991, 74,700 businesses left the VAT register in the west midlands region. In the same period, 93,500 businesses joined the VAT register.

The latest available figures down to county and local authority level are for the period end 1986 to end 1990. In this time 28,700 businesses left the register in the county of west midlands and 2,700 left in the Metropolitan borough of Walsall. The number of businesses joining the VAT register were 35,500 and 3,300 respectively.

Car Advertising

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce legislation requiring vehicle manufacturers to adopt European Community motor traders guidelines relating to advertising of cars; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. I do not consider that any additional controls are necessary at the present time over and above those contained in the British code of advertising practice administered by the Advertising Standards Authority. The code requires that all advertisements in the printed media are legal, decent, honest and truthful.

The ASA monitors car advertising for compliance with the code on a regular basis, paying particular attention to claims relating to speed, power, acceleration and performance. Its latest survey in April 1992 confirmed an overall improvement in compliance of car advertising with the British code of advertising practice.

Business Information Services

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measure he is taking to encourage the use of the Chamber of Commerce and Industry business information services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: It is my Department's policy to encourage United Kingdom businesses to make the fullest use of commercially available business information. As announced on 19 March 1991, Official Report, column 89, we are providing support towards the development strategy of chambers of commerce, including accrediting chambers' business information services. I have now decided that from January 1993 my Department will direct to a nearby approved chamber business information service, inquiries from United Kingdom firms seeking published information on either United Kingdom suppliers of goods and services or on firms in western Europe or North America as potential buyers of United Kingdom goods and services. I understand that chambers will charge for their services. My Department will no longer maintain its own database of such information. I am currently considering whether to extend this arrangement to other overseas markets where there is good published information.

Single Market

Mr. Butler: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the frontier controls on the movement of goods between EC member states following the completion of the single market on 1 January 1993.

Mr. Heseltine: 1. The Edinburgh European Council recognised the completion of the single market by its end 1992 target date.

2. Perhaps the most visible sign of the completion of the single market will be the changes in the general regime for trade in goods at our frontiers with other member states of the European Community. These changes will not apply to the movement of goods between the United Kingdom and countries outside the Community.

3. Customs are making very considerable changes to controls for the single market. Formalities, forms and fiscal frontiers will end for intra-EC traffic. In particular the single administrative document will be abolished. Her Majesty's Customs calculates that reduced documentation will save British business £135 million a year. As a result of these changes EC travellers will see a panoply of controls traditionally associated with customs at the border vanish, including red and green channels, the need to make a declaration and quantitive or value restriction on goods brought back for personal consumption.

4. Baggage and car hall layouts will therefore no longer present an impression of barriers to travellers; screens, baggage benches and notices barring the way will all be removed. All of this amounts to no visible sign of a regular or routine Customs presence. In the single market, Customs are confident that travellers and freight traffic will now move freely through the Customs area, subject only to spot checks, conducted on the basis of intelligence and sharply focused profiles, on a small proportion to detect illicit traffic in a few high priority areas.

5. Her Majesty's Customs will, above all, continue their vigilance against traffic in illicit drugs. The money laundering provisions which form an important adjunct in the fight against drug smuggling will likewise remain in place. Licences will also still be needed for the movement of licit drugs, in keeping with our international obligations under the Vienna conventions. Her Majesty's Customs will also continue to seize obscene material imnported from other EC member states.

6. As my right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade announced on 10 December, a new Export of Goods (Control) Order will come into force on 31 December 1992. Under this order, licences will still be needed for the export to all destinations of dual use goods, weapons, explosives, munitions and firearms and nuclear goods. It will remain an offence to export these goods to EC member states without a licence.

7. EC visitors wishing to bring firearms into the United Kingdom will continue to need prior permission to do so from the police. Commercial firearms movements will be covered by the harmonised Community licensing regime introduced by the weapons directive. Under this regime we will be notified of all firearms movements to, or through, the United Kingdom and a specific licence will still be needed to import the most dangerous firearms which are prohibited in the United Kingdom. The ban on individuals importing stun guns and CS gas sprays, the private possession of which is prohibited in this country, will continue. The import into the United Kingdom of other forbidden weapons will remain prohibited.

8. Licences will continue to be required for the export of cultural goods over certain monetary thresholds. This licensing system will be policed, inter alia, by selective frontier checks.

9. The EC waste shipments regulation will permit member states and their competent authorities to exercise controls on all cross-frontier shipment of wastes, including bans in prescribed circumstances. This will therefore render the existing United Kingdom import controls on asbestos waste unnecessary. However, in the intervening period after 1 January 1993, but before the regulation comes into force, it will continue to be an offence to import asbestos waste into the United Kingdom.

10. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment announced on 1 December the arrangements for trade in wildlife, and products derived from the wildlife trade, following the completion of the single market. My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is separately announcing changes in connection with the completion of the single market in relation to agriculture, fisheries and food.

11. In addition, the Government have been reviewing, along with other member states, all the other prohibitions and restrictions on trade between the United Kingdom and other member states of the European Community, the enforcement of which has in the past heavily depended on the information available from the single administrative documents. Traditionally, these prohibitions and restrictions have applied to a range of goods imported or exported from or to both EC and non-EC countries. For a great many of these goods, the risks have been predominantly on trade between the United Kingdom and non-EC countries. The Government have therefore reviewed the rationale for those prohibitions and restrictions, some of which are historical, with a view to determining which can only be enforced effectively and proportionately by means of export and import controls. Throughout the review, the Government's main concern has been to retain the highest possible standard of protection for the United Kingdom, consistent with our Community obligations. Where it has been decided that frontier controls need not be retained, therefore, any restrictions on the sale, use or manufacture of these items on the territory of the United Kingdom will remain in place.

12. In other areas, the Government's review has revealed a number of prohibitions and restrictions which derived from moribund legislation, or legislation which has been overtaken. It has been a specific offence to import articles bearing devices which imply Government sanction or guarantee. Domestic protection against this abuse is, however, provided by the—more general—provisions of the Trade Descriptions Act. Although the prohibition of imports of goods bearing a false indication of origin has been enforced actively, alternative domestic protection is also available under the Trade Descriptions Act.

13. The recent legislation to prohibit certain types of dangerous dogs only needed the security of an import ban during the transitional period. Now that the legislation is fully in force, and the deadline for obtaining a certificate of exemption in respect of these types of dogs has passed, the offence of possession of an un-exempted dog in the United Kingdom provides adequate protection. The separate announcement by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture will cover other frontier controls on animals.

14. Further cases of prohibitions and restrictions have been overtaken by EC legislation: our national prohibitions on the import of specific carcinogenic substances and matches made of white phosphorus have been overtaken by EC legislation on dangerous substances. The spread of common safety standards in the EC, particularly through the "New Approach" industrial standards directives, make it no longer necessary to retain Her Majesty's Customs' formal powers to detain unsafe consumer goods at the frontier, though Customs will continue to liaise closely with trading standards authorities in cases where information about such goods becomes available to them. The increasing body of harmonised food law and legislation on medicines in the European Community makes our national frontier controls on foodstuffs and medicines from next year unnecessary. The national United Kingdom controls on the import of textiles and clothing will become redundant on the completion of the single market, and will be subsumed into a genuinely Community-wide regime.

15. We have identified a further set of prohibitions and restrictions which are rarely used, and where the Government feel confident in relying in future on inland offences, which already carry the greatest weight of enforcement. These are described below.

16. The import control on substances—chiefly goat hair—which might be infected with anthrax, affects imports destined for only a few United Kingdom processing sites. However, the legal obligation of all processors of these substances to handle them correctly and prevent any risk of infection will prevent any increased hazard to health. The prohibition on the supply and use of certain sizes of lead fishing weights by anglers has played an important role in reducing the poisoning of swans and other water fowl. The main legislative weapon has been the National Rivers Authority byelaws; the associated frontier control has rarely been used. Similarly, the frontier zones have not proved an effective place to challenge counterfeit. So from next year there will be no importation or exportation offence for counterfeit currency, and fictitious postage stamps and the dies for making them as far as goods travelling between the United Kingdom and EC countries are concerned.

17. A similar pattern appears in intellectual property. Powers for owners of intellectual property to request Her Majesty's Customs to seize counterfeit or pirate goods, that is goods that infringe trademark or copyright, have never been used to detain goods imported from the EC. In practice, enforcement of intellectual property rights inland has been the norm, either with rights owners taking legal action themselves or by the enforcement of criminal offences. From next year, the option of action at the frontier will cease for goods entering the United Kingdom from the EC.

18. The prohibition on the import of horror magazines had also fallen into disuse, and from next year the Government are content to rely on the offence of possession for selling or hire and other offences which penalise those who seek to profit from such material. Similarly, the prohibitions on the import and export of lottery material are now rarely used, and other powers already exist to deal inland with unlawful lottery material. As regards imports of nuclear materials, we have concluded that there is sufficient control of these materials within the United Kingdom to enable the associated frontier control on their import to be abolished.

19. Finally, frontier controls on unapproved CB radios and cordless telephones play in important role in forestalling the use of equipment using the wrong radio frequencies. Such equipment can cause serious interference and endanger life and limb by interrupting radio use by emergency services. However, the main danger here is equipment from outside the Community. Our controls on third country traffic in CB radios and cordless telephones will be retained and restrictions on manufacture, sale and possession will continue to be vigorously enforced.

Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what preparations his Department is making for the nuclear non-proliferation treaty first preparatory committee meeting for the 1995 review.

Mr. Eggar: Within Whitehall, primary responsibility for the nuclear non-proliferation treaty lies with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. As such it will take the lead in preparations for the meeting of the first preparatory committee, which is to be held from 10 to 14 May next year. My Department works closely with the Foreign Office on this subject, and will support preparations for the meeting as appropriate.

British Coal

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will take action to ensure that the present redundancy scheme operated by British Coal is extended beyond the current termination date of March 1993.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for British Coal. It would however seem reasonable for the corporation not to determine their redundancy arrangements from 1 April 1993 until the outcome of the coal review and the current statutory consultations are known.

Private Finance

Sir John Stanley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in what areas of his Department's responsibilities he has introduced, or may introduce, private finance; and if he will describe in each case the procedures by which private finance is sought.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade will be taking full account of the private finance initiative announced in the autumn statement and of the guidance which has been published by the Treasury in determining his priorities for departmental expenditure and in considering how to encourage a still closer partnership between his Department and the private sector.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Waterson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made as to whether the coverage of the assisted area map is likely to include travel-to-work areas on the south-east coast.

Mr. Sainsbury: The needs and circumstances of all areas, including those on the south-east coast, are currently being considered as part of the assisted areas map review.

Energy Council

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions have taken place in the Eurapean Energy Council in regard to the requirement to renegotiate by 31 December 1995 the agreement on the co-operation between the United States and the European Atomic Energy Community—1958—during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Council.

Mr. Eggar: None. Co-operation between Euratom and the USA is a matter for the Foreign Affairs Council. Discussions in the Council working group during the United Kingdom presidency have been of a general nature.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will take steps to verify the recent financial projections British Nuclear Fuels plc has made in regard to THORP at Sellafield.

Mr. Eggar: British Nuclear Fuels plc has advised me that for the United Kingdom to abandon the THORP project would cost the country as a whole over £1 billion —at a 6 per cent. discount rate—and some 3,000 jobs, even if there were no requirement to repay overseas customers their investments. This projection, which was made with the assistance of the accountants Touche Ross and Co., which has been discussed in detail between my officials and BNFL. While I am not in a position to verify every figure, the methodology is considered to be sound and we have no reason to believe the numbers to be inaccurate.

Nuclear Power Policy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the relationship between the energy policy review and the forthcoming 1994 review of nuclear power policy.

Mr. Eggar: The 1994 review of the future prospects for nuclear power will need to take account of any relevant conclusions reached as a result of the current coal review.

Preston Farm Industrial Estate

Mr. Devlin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions his Department has had with the Teesside development corporation about future developments at Preston Farm industrial estate, Stockton-on-Tees.

Mr. Sainsbury: None recently. However, officials of the Department of the Environment have regular meetings with the Teesside development corporation to discuss a range of issues.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will announce a decision on assistance from his Department to the proposed hydroponics plant at Preston Farm industrial estate, Stockton-on-Tees.

Mr. Sainsbury: I am not aware of any application to my Department for assistance for a hydroponics plant in the north-east region. But in any event such applications are confidential matters between applicant and the Government.

Companies House

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the potential conflict of interest concerning an official of Companies House being a non-executive director of a company subject to penalty for the late filing of accounts.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: In accordance with standard DTI procedures, when an official is offered the post as a non-executive director, the relevant line manager is informed. Guidance is given to ensure that if a conflict of interest arises with his her official duties, the individual will stand aside.

Late Filing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many company directors and how many public limited companies of which they are directors have been given mandatory late filing penalties; how many company directors and companies have been given extensions of time for late filing; and what is the average length of time between warning letters in relation to late filing and sequential prosecution action by the Registrar of Companies (a) from April 1991 to March 1992 and (b) from April 1992 to October 1992.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Since the introduction of late filing penalties in July 1992, some 48,640 penalties have been levied on companies in Great Britain whose accounts have been filed late with Companies House. The penalties are levied on the company not on the directors. No extensions have been given for late filing: extensions can only be granted in exceptional circumstances before the period of time allowed for filing has elapsed. In the six months to November 1992, 2,003 applications were received and 559 were granted. The length of time between the issue of warning letters for late filing and subsequent prosecution depends upon the circumstances of each individual company and the available court time, but is usually about nine months.

Auditors

Mr. Butler: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the first annual report of the recognised supervisory bodies on the regulation of auditors under part II of the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have received the joint first annual report of the three institutes of chartered accountants on their activities as recognised supervisory bodies for the regulation of company auditors, and have placed copies in the Library. I expect to receive shortly the reports of the other two recognised supervisory bodies. My Department will be discussing the contents of the reports with the bodies.

Wave Energy Review

Mr. Stern: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the report of the wave energy review will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butler: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the report of the wave energy review will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have today placed a copy of the main report of the wave energy review in the Libraries of both Houses.

The review, which has been overseen by the wave energy steering committee, which has independent members, has involved close liaison with the wave energy teams included in the review. There is generally good agreement with the wave energy teams over the methodology and values in the review.

I will now consider the report in the light of the report of the renewable energy advisory group and in the context of the Government's energy policy and the coal review and will announce decisions in due course.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Stern: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the report by the renewable energy advisory group will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butler: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the report by the renewable energy advisory group will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have today published the report by the renewable energy advisory group and placed a copy in the Libraries of both Houses.

I shall give careful consideration to the report's recommendations in the context of the Government's energy and environmental policy and the coal review and announce decisions in due course.

I am particularly grateful to the chairman and all the members of the renewable energy advisory group for their efforts in producing this report.

Iran

Mrs. Chaplin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the export licensing policy towards Iran.

Mr. Heseltine: The Government are considering carefully the criteria that should be applied in exercising its policy of rigorous scrutiny of export licence applications for Iran. While this consideration is taking place, I have decided that no licence applications will be granted for Iran until January 1993. Licences which have already been granted and trade in non-licensable goods will not be affected.

Offshore Licensing

Mrs. Chaplin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the 14th offshore licensing round.

Mr. Eggar: I am very pleased with the response to the round shown by the oil and gas industry. We received 96 applications from groups involving 62 companies for 122 blocks offered in the first two stages of the 14th round. The number of blocks applied for is the highest since the 4th round, over 20 years ago. The response shows there is still a major commitment to exploring in the United Kingdom continental shelf.

I am particularly encouraged by the sustained level of interest shown in exploring the southern basin of the North sea which historically has been associated with major gas finds.

Applications were received for a wide variety of blocks, with considerable interest shown in a number of relatively new areas such as the Rona ridge—west of Shetland—Cardigan bay and the Solway firth. As we anticipated, there will be some tough competition for the popular blocks in oil and gas areas.

The applications we have received will help maintain the momentum of activity on the UKCS into the next century in both gas and oil areas. It is confirmation that oil and gas companies are confident they will be able to secure cost reductions, which will allow them to develop the discoveries they make economically. This is increasingly important given the number of oil provinces worldwide and other sources of gas against which the UKCS must now compete.

Recycling

Mrs. Chaplin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he proposes to take on the recycling of waste.

Mr. Heseltine: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and I have today published a report prepared by Environmental Resources Limited for our Departments. The report sets out a range of options for the use of economic instruments to promote the recovery of resources from waste. It identifies a number of different approaches which could be effective in promoting recycling and my Department has therefore invited comments on these from interested parties by 31 January 1993.

I have arranged for a copy of the report to be placed in the Library of the House.

Patents and Licences

Dr. Moonie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance his Department provides for patenting or licensing of any products or processes developed from work funded by the Department.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 15 December 1992]: The Department is aware of the importance of protecing intellectual property arising from work for which it provides financial assistance. Recipients of DTI funding are required to take reasonable steps to exploit the results of their projects, including making arrangements for intellectual property rights. The scope exists under the collaborative schemes to include in eligible costs reasonable patenting costs incurred by small and medium-sized companies, and in the case of SMART and SPUR, the expense of patenting in the United Kingdom and overseas can be claimed as an eligible cost.

Coal Industry

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the number and total cost of consultancies commissioned into the coal industry in the financial years 1990-91, 1991-92 and so far this year.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 15 December 1992]: The Department of Energy commissioned only one consultancy on the coal industry in 1990-91, from Alan Oakes. On grounds of commercial confidentiality, the costs of individual consultancies is not released.

In 1991-92 the Department of Energy commissioned six consultancies on coal privatisation at a cost that year of £3·3 million. A further two consultancies have been commissioned by the DTI in 1992-93 and expenditure on privatisation consultants in total was £1·2 million in the first six months of this year.

In addition, a number of consultants have been used as part of the Department's coal research and development programme, managed by the energy technology support unit at Harwell.

Coal Mines

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many representations he has received in the last three months from businesses wishing to take over existing pits in Wales; how many different firms have sent such offers; what criteria he is using to judge each request; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 24 November 1992]: My Department has received representations from four businesses interested in existing pits in Wales.

On the question of consideration of expressions of interest in closing pits, I refer to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Hague) on 15 December, Official Report, columns 145-46.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessments he has made of the social, economic and environmental costs and potential benefits of a plan for coal-fired electricity generation based on fluidised bed combustion and flue gas desulphurisation.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 16 December 1992]: My Department is aware of a number of assessments of the economic and environmental advantages of fluidised bed combustion systems for electricity generation as an alternative to conventional pulverised coal fired plant that may require flue gas desulphurisation. The Government are committed to achieving the emission reductions required by the EC large combustion plant directive.

Patents

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals the United Kingdom Patent Office has to continue to act as an international preliminary examining authority after 1 June 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 16 December 1992]: The Comptroller General of the Patent Office has discussed with other members of the European Patent Organisation's administrative council whether the office should continue to act as an international preliminary examining authority after 31 May 1993. He has also consulted the World Intellectual Property Organisation. The administrative council has concluded that the provisions of the protocol on centralisation of the European patent convention, under which this work will cease on 31 May 1993, should prevail but has commissioned a wide-ranging study of the relationships between the European Patent Office and the offices in member countries and of the needs of small and medium-sized firms.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how the principles of subsidiarity will be applied with regard to the relationship between the patent offices of member states of the EC which are contracting states of the European patent convention and the European Patent Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 16 December 1992]: The European Patent Office is not a Community body—the European patent convention is a free-standing treaty and the principles of subsidiarity do not directly affect the relationship between the patent offices of contracting states and the European Patent Office.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what fee is charged for international preliminary examinations for patents by (a) the European Patent Office and (b) the United Kingdom Patent Office; and what assessment he has made of the effect of the new protocol for centralisation, requiring United Kingdom applicants for international preliminary examinations to have these carried out at the European Patent Office on the development of innovation in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 16 December 1992]: The European Patent Office charges DM 3,000 for international preliminary examinations and the United Kingdom Patent Office charges £130. The effects of the protocol on innovation in the United Kingdom cannot be quantified with precision but do not effect the innovator's ability to seek national patents. The 1973 treaty, which provides for these examinations to be conducted by the European Patent Office after 31 May 1993, can only be amended by unanimous agreement of the 17 contracting states. The Comptroller General of the Patent Office has, however, discussed with the other members of the European Patent Organisation's admininstrative council the need to ensure that the European patent convention and its protocol on centralisation, which date from 1973, do not inhibit the process of innovation in the United Kingdom and Europe.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from, or on behalf of, patent agents in the United Kingdom with regard to the implementation of the European protocol on centralisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 16 December 1992]: None. The Comptroller General of the Patent Office has, however, had a number of discussions with representatives of the patent agent profession on this matter in the course of the last 18 months.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his estimate of the proportion of the worldwide total of international preliminary examinations under the patent co-operation treaty which are currently undertaken by the United Kingdom Patent Office.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 16 December 1992]: It is estimated that the United Kingdom Patent Office currently undertakes about 13 per cent. of the worldwide total of international preliminary examinations under the patent co-operation treaty.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what procedures are necessary to ensure that the United Kingdom Patent Office may continue to act as an international preliminary examining authority.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 16 December 1992]: Continuation of the United Kingdom Patent Office's work as an international preliminary examining authority after 31 May 1993 would require a unanimous decision to this effect of the 17 contracting states of the European Patent Organisation.

Regional Aid

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what assessment he has made of the effect of the reduction in his Department's budget by 1995 for spending on regional financial assistance; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what were the amounts of regional financial assistance expenditure in 1979 and 1991; and if he will increase the funding in future years.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 16 December 1992]: In the financial year to the end of March 1980, £272 million was spent on regional financial assistance. Total expenditure in 1991-92 amounted to £159 million.

The allocation of funds to individual programmes is currently being considered and will be published in the trade and industry expenditure plans report in February 1993.

Pit Closures

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with the chairman of British Coal about the release of financial information to representatives of the work force at the 10 collieries currently scheduled for closure.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 4 December 1992]: British Coal is fully aware of the importance I attach to the statutory consultations being conducted in a genuine manner, and to the provision of information necessary for that.

Electromagnetic Compatibility

Mr. Sproat: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the estimated total compliance cost to all businesses and as to (a) the setting up cost and (b) the typical cost for a small business on-going annual cost arising from the regulation sponsored by his Department giving effect to EC directive 89/336 on electromagnetic compatibility; and what is the estimated public expenditure cost of enforcing this measure annually.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 14 December 1992]: The United Kingdom regulations on electromagnetic compatibility arise from an EC treaty obligation to implement a directive. Approximately 60,000 manufacturing companies with 200 or more employees and another 9,000 each employing fewer than 200 people will be affected. It is not possible to calculate the cost for a typical small business and difficult to estimate costs to industry as a whole as companies will not all choose to comply at the same time during the transitional period running to 31 December 1995. It will, therefore, be some time before a reliable estimate of compliance costs can be made. Enforcement will be carried out from within existing resources and no significant extra cost is expected.

EC Regional Development Fund

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much European regional development fund expenditure there has been in the United Kingdom's assisted areas in each year since 1984-85 (a) at current prices and (b) at 1984-85 prices.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 17 November, Official Report, columns 131-32.

Disposable Nappies

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to introduce specific safety regulations governing the flammability of disposable nappies.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 11 December 1992]: These products are subject to the general safety requirement under section 10 of the Consumer Protection Act 1987.

My Department has no plans to introduce specific safety regulations on the flammability of disposable nappies.

Coal Mining

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what action he will take in order to provide new employment opportunities in areas which have lost mining jobs since 1988;

(2) what plans he has to increase employment in coal mining areas;

(3) what new investment initiatives have been proposed for revitalising areas which have previously been economically dependent on the British coal industry;

(4) what proposals he has for attracting new high technology industry to declining mining areas.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 16 December 1992]: Since 1988 there have been a number of measures to provide new employment opportunities in areas which have lost mining jobs. Those areas which are also assisted areas are, amongst other things, eligible for regional selective assistance which provides funding for firms with projects that safeguard or create employment. Within the assisted areas, English Estates has also been able to provide sites and premises for business. In addition most of the areas concerned are eligible for and benefit from support under the European structural funds objective 2 and RECHAR programmes. British Coal Enterprise has also been active in these areas and its initiatives have successfully created employment for many former British Coal employees.

More recently, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade announced on 13 and 19 October a substantial package of measures to assist areas which may suffer from job losses in the mining industry. The measures include—an £85 million programme of premises/sites provision by English Estates; a £75 million package of training/counselling measures; enhanced assisted area status for Barnsley, Doncaster and Mansfield; £11 million of unallocated European structural funds; £5 million coalfield areas fund for local authority measures; the deployment of enterprise zones where appropriate; nearly £2 million for the Tyne and Wear development corporation; funding for the emerging East Midlands development organisation; the extension of regional enterprise grants for small firms; and extra help for inward investment promotion and for local regeneration agencies. In addition, British Coal will clear the sites of any closed collieries quickly and British Coal Enterprise is implementing measures to assist ex-British Coal employees. Lord Walker is acting as a co-ordinator of these measures and is advising my right hon. Friends the President of the Board of Trade and the Secretary of State for Wales. The shape and timing of these latest measures will be reconsidered in the light of the outcome of the coal review.

Nuclear Material

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to publish in the MM20 business monitor series on trade statistics details of the movement by air into and without the United Kingdom of (a) nuclear fuel rods and (b) plutonium.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 7 December 1992]: The MM20 business monitor series does not include details of mode of transport.

Oil and Gas Exploration

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received about the 14th round of offshore oil and gas production licences and its implications for wildlife areas in (a) Cardigan bay, (b) the Pembrokeshire islands, (c) Lundy island, (d) the Moray Firth and (e) the Wash.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 16 December 1992]: Since the announcement of the current licensing round, I have received approximately 350 letters regarding licensing in Cardigan Bay. Some 100 of these refer also to the Pembrokeshire islands and Lundy island; areas adjacent to these islands have not been offered for licensing in this round. About 30 of the letters also refer to the implications of licensing for wildlife in the Moray firth, an area which already has an established oil production industry. No other representations on licensing have been received concerning the Pembrokeshire islands, Lundy island, the Moray firth or the Wash.

Coal Prices

Mr. Churchill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade by how much the price of British coal, delivered to the power station, has increased or decreased in each of the past six years expressed as an index, taking 1985-86 as 100; and what has been the equivalent increase or decrease in the price of electricity to the domestic consumer.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 4 December 1992]: The available information expressed in 1985 prices, is as follows:

	Average Prices of All Coal Purchased by Major Electricity Generating Companies:	Fuel Price Index for Domestic Electricity:
Index 1985 = 100
1985	100	100
1986	98	99
1987	88	94
1988	89	93
1989	81	93
1990	73	94
1991	68	97

Deflated by the GDP (market prices) deflator.
Source: Based on information published in Energy Trends Tables 26 and 28.

The cost of fuels such as coal represents less than a third of the total price of electricity to domestic consumers, and is only one of the many factors that dictate the final price.

Telecommunications

Mr. Lewis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what advisory bodies have been established under section 54 (i) of the Telecommunications Act 1984; and if he will list their members.

Mr. Leigh: The advisory bodies established under section 54 (i) of the Telecommunications Act are: the Advisory Committee on Telecommunications for Small Businesses; the Advisory Committee on Telecommunications for Disabled and Elderly People; the English Advisory Committee on Telecommunications; the Wesh Advisory Committee on Telecommunications; the Scottish Advisory Committee on Telecommunications and the Northern Ireland Advisory Committee on Telecommunications. The membership of each committee is as follows:

Military Plants (Conversion)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to provide a substantive answer to the question of 22 May from the hon. Member for Newport, West concerning military to civil industrial conversion.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 23 October 1992]: The meeting confirmed that the conversion of military plants in eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union may be seen as an end in itself, but where there are no commercial means to achieve it is not of direct interest to my Department.

Board of Trade

Mr. Pope: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the functions of the Board of Trade; who are its members; and when it last met.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 7 December 1992]: Under the Order in Council of 23 August 1786, the Board of Trade was appointed to deal with all matters relating to trade and foreign plantations. Its members are the Lord Archibisop of Canterbury, the First Lord Commissioner of the Treasury, the First Lord Commissioner of the Admiralty, Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, the Chancellor and Under Treasurer of the Exchequer, the Speaker of the House of Commons, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and the Paymaster General. The last meeting of the board, which was held to coincide with its bicentenary, was on 21 March 1986.

Mr. Pope: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he proposes to answer the question from the Member for Hyndburn of 18 November regarding the Board of Trade.

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave today.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Quality

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many EC countries have been or are currently being prosecuted for failing to implement EC directives on water quality; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My Department holds details of the number of infraction cases referred to the European Court of Justice following a reasoned opinion for the period 1983-92. This information in respect of water quality directives is as follows:

1983-87
Belgium	titanium dioxide waste
Belgium	pollution of groundwater
Greece	pollution of groundwater
Greece	mercury and cadmium discharges
Italy	water quality for freshwater fish
Italy	pollution of groundwater
Netherlands	pollution of groundwater
1988
France	drinking water
Germany	pollution of groundwater
Italy	water quality for freshwater fish
1989
Belgium	drinking water
Belgium	quality of surface water for drinking, and measurement and sampling of surface water
France	quality of surface water for drinking, and measurement and sampling of surface water
Germany	quality of surface water for drinking, and measurement and sampling of surface water

Empty Office Buildings

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated numbers of empty office buildings in the Greater London area on 1 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Information on the number of empty office buildings in Greater London is not kept by this Department.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what part he expects electricity generated by combined cycle gas turbine stations to play in reducing United Kingdom carbon dioxide emissions to 1990 levels by the year 2000.

Mr. Maclean: Combined cycle gas turbine stations emit around half as much carbon dioxide (CO_2) as conventional coal fired plants per unit of electricity generated. The discussion document, "Climate Change: Our National Programme for CO_2 Emissions", published on 14 December, sets out a number of options for limiting CO_2 emissions. Decisions on the programme as a whole will be taken in the light of decisions taken pursuant to the coal review.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the breakdown of local authority revenue for each year from 1979-80 to 1992-93, with estimates for 1993-94, in terms of (i) Government grants, (ii) non-domestic rates and (iii) domestic rates or community charges or council tax, expressed both in pound million and as a percentage.

Mr. Robin Squire: The available information is as follows:

Local Authority Revenue Expenditure

	Revenue Expenditure	Government Grants		Non-Domestic Rates		Domestic Rates/Community Charges
	£ million	£ million	Per cent.	£ million	Per cent.	£ million	Per cent.
1981-82	20,106	11,234	56	5,013	25	4,034	20
1982-83	21,952	11,705	53	5,685	26	4,548	21
1983-84	23,263	12,584	54	6,042	26	4,382	19
1984-85	24,119	13,126	54	6,361	26	4,707	20
1985-86	24,284	13,069	54	6,740	28	5,094	21
1986-87	26,630	13,402	50	7,566	28	5,912	22
1987-88	28,980	14,274	49	8,088	28	6,539	23
1988-89	31,240	14,469	46	8,819	28	7,689	25
1989-90	33,282	14,707	44	9,595	29	8,487	26
1990-91	35,893	15,004	42	10,429	29	10,109	28
1991-92	40,137	20,820	52	12,408	31	6,381	16
1992-93	42,934	23,246	54	12,306	29	7,213	17

Notes:

1. For the years 1981-82 to 1989-90, local authority expenditure is taken to be "relevant expenditure" plus expenditure on certain non-relevant items such as net expenditure on mandatory student awards. It represents spending to be financed by rate support grant, relevant specific grant, rates and balances. This measure of expenditure is net of sales, fees and charges, interest receipts etc. For the years 1990-91 to 1993-94 local authority expenditure is "revenue expenditure to compare with TSS" which is expenditure to be met from revenue support grant, specific and special grants in aggregate external finance, non-domestic rates, community charges/council tax and appropriation from reserves. In 1991-92 this also included community charge grant.
2. For the years 1981-82 to 1989-90 Government grants comprise aggregate Exchequer grant and rate rebate grants. For 1990-91 to 1992-93 Government grants included are revenue support grant, specific and special grants in aggregate external finance, community charge grant (1991-92), community charge benefit grant and transitional relief-community charge reduction scheme grant.
3. For the years 1981-82 to 1989-90, this represents non-domestic rate yields net of rate relief. For the years 1990-91 to 1993-94 this represents the distributable amount from the non-domestic rates pool.
4. Net of domestic rate rebates for the years 1981-82 to 1989-90. Net of community charge benefit grant and transitional relief/community charge reduction scheme grant for the years 1990-91 to 1992-93.
5. The information is not available for years prior to 1981/82.
6. The column percentages do not add to 100 per cent. because of withdrawals from or additions to reserves.

For 1993-94, total standard spending—excluding care in the community—is £41·168 billion of which, it is estimated, £23·061 billion—or 56 per cent.—will be met by revenue support grant, specific and special grants in aggregate external finance, council tax benefit grant and the council tax transitional reduction scheme grant, £11·559 billion—or 28 per cent.—will be met by the distributable amount from the non domestic rates pool and £6·541 billion—or 16 per cent.—will be met by council tax net of estimated council tax benefit grant and council tax transitional reduction scheme grant.

Pilot Plant Emissions

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to ask Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to make any additions to its guidance relating to pilot plant emissions and novel processes following the appeal by ICI against the setting of quantitative release limits for its HFC32 experimental production unit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The appeal by ICI has yet to be determined by the Secretary of State, and therefore no further advice can be given in relation to this appeal at this stage.

However, as a general principle, it is reasonable to set quantitative limits for all prescribed processes, after due consideration of all credible potential releases. If, due to the novel nature of a process, greater awareness of release limits improves with operation, then the authorisation may be amended to reflect this. In line with Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's precautionary approach to pollution control, quantitative release limits are required in order to demonstrate compliance, through monitoring, with the requirements of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, particularly the requirement to apply best available techniques not entailing excessive cost/best practical environmental options.

Vehicle Noise

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional resources will be granted to local authorities and the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency towards the implementation of the extended noise nuisance abatement powers under the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Maclean: In June, my Department consulted on proposals to extend the statutory abatement procedures of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to include noise in the street. The responses to this consultation are currently being considered. If new legislation is introduced, potential savings and additional costs will be taken into account in revenue support grant settlements for the appropriate financial year.

Local Authorities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each English and Welsh local authority (a) its population, (b) its number of employees, (c) the number of employees per thousand population and (d) the political party in control.

Mr. Robin Squire: I have today placed the information requested about local authority employees, for England, in the Library of the House. The information shows staff numbers for all general services taken from the joint staffing watch.

Staffing levels of local authorities in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Aerials and Antennae

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what planning guidance he has issued in relation to the control of aerials and antennae on high grounds.

Mr. Baldry: We will publish a revised planning policy guidance note 8 "Telecommunications" on Monday 21 December 1992.

Recycling

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will exempt local authority expenditure on recycling from the financial costs mechanism of the standard spending assessment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: Standard spending assessments reflect the revenue costs of providing a standard level of service across the full range of local authority services, including recycling. Under the provisional capping criteria, which my right hon. and learned Friend announced in his statement on 26 November, no local authority expenditure would be outside the capping regime.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to which local authorities his Department has circulated the British Nuclear Fuels' application for authorisation to operate the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield, under section 8(4A) of the Radioactive Substances Act 1960; and what criteria were used by his Department to decide in which local authorities radioactive disposal from THORP is likely to take place.

Mr. Maclean: The four applications received from BNFL for authorisation under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960—RSA 60—to dispose of radioactive waste from Sellafield, including proposed discharges from THORP plant were sent to Cumbria county council and Copeland district council. These local authorities were identified because, as required by section 8(4) of RSA 60, they are the ones in whose areas the Sellafield discharge points are located.

However, on 16 November 1992, the chief inspector of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution acting jointly with the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food initiated wide-ranging formal public consultations involving a large number of local authorities. This consultation is about the applications themselves, additional information supplied by BNFL, draft authorisations and related explanatory memorandums.

Council Tax

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the total cost to public funds of (a) introducing and (b) administering the council tax.

Mr. Robin Squire: The cost to local authorities in England of preparing for the council tax is estimated to be £156·1 million.

The local authority associations have estimated that the cost of collecting the council tax in 1993-94 will be 40 per cent. lower than the cost of collecting the community charge, with further reductions in later years when transitional problems have been dealt with.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps a householder may take if he or she feels that a mistake has been made in the boundary of his or her property in the council tax assessment.

Mr. Robin Squire: Anyone who wishes to correct a factual error in a draft valuation list may now approach his or her listing officer at the local office of the Valuation Office agency. Where the listing officer agrees, such an error will be amended before the final list is compiled on 1 April 1993. If the listing officer does not agree, however, a householder will between 1 April and 30 November 1993 be able to lodge a formal proposal to alter the compiled list.

Primates

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 16 November, Official Report, column 48, what further investigations the Government have made into the evidence of the import of wild primates from Kenya; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We are not aware of any evidence that the export of primates from Kenya poses a threat to the survival of wild populations. Each application to import primates into this country is examined by our scientific advisers, the Joint Nature Conservation Committee, and allowed only if they are satisfied that there will be no harm to the species.

Homelessness

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many emergency cold weather hostels there are in the Greater London area; and if he will list their locations.

Mr. Baldry: To provide immediate shelter for people who would otherwise sleep rough over the winter, my Department is funding 400 bedspaces in nine temporary shelters in central London. The shelters will be open between 1 December 1992 and 31 March 1993. In addition, we are planning to provide up to 300 further places across London, which can be opened at short notice in the event of exceptionally severe weather. The nine winter shelters being funded by my Department are:

Managing agency	Address
London borough of Camden	25 Parker street, WC2
London borough of Lambeth	Cynthia Moseley centre, Oval way, SE11
Crisis	147 Tooley street, SE1
Single Homeless Project	1 John street, WC1
St. Mungo's	10-11 Bulstrode place, W1
Centrepoint	Soho Women's hospital, Soho square, WC2
Salvation Army	1 St. Ann's street, SW1
Salvation Army	23-27 Tudor street, EC4
English Churches Housing Group	156 St. John street, EC1

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what have been the extra resources given by his Department for homeless people living outside the Greater London area between 1 January and 1 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: In the current financial year the Department is paying £6·1 million in grants under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 to nearly 150 voluntary organisations throughout England which provide direct practical help to people who are homeless or at risk of becoming so.

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the numbers sleeping rough in London at the most recent convenient date and the number of empty hostel places as at the same date.

Mr. Baldry: The 1991 census found that on the night of 21 and 22 April, there were 1,275 people sleeping rough in London. A count by voluntary sector organisations in central London on 5 November 1992 found around 420 people sleeping rough—less than half the number who were estimated to have been sleeping on the streets of central London before my Department's rough sleepers initiative began in 1990-91. Information about the number of empty hostel places available at any one time is not held centrally.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homeless households are currently living in temporary accommodation in England.

Mr. Baldry: The latest available estimate for the number of homeless households living in temporary accommodation in England relates to 30 September and appears in table 4(d) of "Households found accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England: Statistics for the third quarter 1992", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance his Department is providing to schemes linking provision of accommodation for homeless young people to training.

Mr. Baldry: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on Tuesday 15 December, Official Report, columns 94-95.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has that homeless families place themselves in bed-and-breakfast or temporary accommodation; and if he will provide an estimate of the total number of self-placed families living in such accommodation in each local authority area.

Mr. Baldry: The Department has no information about this.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make extra resources available to assist the homeless to have clean and dry accommodation over the Christmas period.

Mr. Baldry: In addition to the 2,550 places in various types of accommodation so far provided in central London under the rough sleepers initiative, we are providing a further 400 bed spaces in temporary shelters this winter. The shelters will be open in central London from 1 December 1992 to 31 March 1993. We are also planning to provide up to 300 further places across London, that can be opened at short notice in the event of particularly severe weather.

Nationally, the Government are providing over £6 million in grants this year to voluntary organisations throughout England which give direct practical help to homeless people. The primary responsibility for help to people sleeping rough in severe weather rests with local authorities. The local authority associations have accepted this responsibility through their support for the winter watch guidelines published by Crisis and Shelter.

Private Sector Housing

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of private sector housing starts in (a) the west midlands and (b) Walsall for 1991-92.

Mr. Baldry: It is estimated that private enterprise housebuilding starts amounted to 13,100 dwellings, and housing association starts to 2,100 dwellings, in the west midlands standard statistical region during the financial year 1991-92. The corresponding figures reported for the Walsall local authority area were 503 and 159 dwellings.

Stockport Metropolitan Borough

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what decisions he has taken in respect of the future local government boundary of Stockport metropolitan borough; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The Cheshire and Greater Manchester (County and District Boundaries) (No. 2) Order 1992 was made on 26 August 1992, giving effect to the Secretary of State's decision on changes to the City of Manchester and Stockport local government boundary from 1 April 1993.

A draft order was issued on 4 December 1992 showing the Secretary of State's decision on Stockport's boundaries with Tameside, High Peak in Derbyshire and Macclesfield in Cheshire.

I am sending the details of both these sets of changes to my hon. Friend.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on the measures which he is taking to implement compulsory competitive tendering.

Mr. Robin Squire: Regulations and guidance to be issued under section 9 of the Local Government Act 1992 are expected to be in place early in the new year. These regulations and guidance will clarify the statutory framework for services currently subject to compulsory competitive tendering.

On 10 November, Official Report, columns 743-45, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment announced his decisions following consultation on proposals to extend competition to local authorities' professional services. A preliminary meeting about the detailed implementation of these decisions has been held with the local authority associations, the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, the Audit Commission, the Accounts Commission, and the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage contract saving his Department uses for assessing savings as a result of council compulsory competitive tendering on contracts valued at above £100,000 and below £500,000.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Secretary of State does not assess the savings on individual local authority contracts. Research carried out by the Institute of Local Government Studies for the Department of the Environment indicated that following competition there was an overall reduction of about 6 to 7 per cent. in the cost of work subject to compulsory competitive tendering under the Local Government Act 1988, whether the service was carried out in-house or by a private contractor.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the current level for the de minimis level would be for compulsory competitive tendering if it had been upgraded in line with the retail prices index.

Mr. Robin Squire: The amount is £132,041.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many contracts valued at between £100,000 and £500,000 have been put out to tender by councils under compulsory competitive tendering in each year since 1988.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to adjust the de minimis level to take account of inflation since 1988 for local authority compulsory competitive tendering.

Mr. Robin Squire: There are no proposals to adjust the de minimis level, although it is kept under review.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average cost of putting a contract out to tender for councils under compulsory competitive tendering.

Mr. Robin Squire: Research carried out by the Institute of Local Government Studies for the Department of the Environment indicated that the average cost of preparing for competition was about 2·5 per cent. of the total contract value.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 19 November, Official Report, column 301, if he will (a) make a statement on decisions taken at the meeting of the International Radioactive Waste Department Advisory Committee in Vienna from 27 to 29 October and (b) arrange for a copy of the documentation submitted by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Maclean: The answer is as follows:

(a) No decisions were taken at the meeting of the International Radioactive Waste Advisory Committee subgroup in Vienna, 27 to 29 October 1992, since it was convened solely as a discussion forum to help develop an international consensus on principles and criteria for disposal of solid radioactive waste, with particular reference to safety indicators for disposal in geological formations. A copy of the minutes of the meeting, prepared by International Atomic Energy Agency staff, has been placed in the Library.

(b) HMIP did not submit documentation to this meeting, but the HMIP representative participated fully in the discussions.

Roads (Public Paths)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to clarify the requirement for vehicular use in respect of the definition of roads used as a public path in the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949.

Mr. Maclean: The Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 sought to dispel any confusion surrounding roads used as public paths—RUPPs—by requiring highway authorities to acknowledge the rights found to exist. Where vehicular rights exist, RUPPs must be reclassified as byways open to all traffic—BOATs—which are defined as routes over which the public have a right of way for vehicular traffic, but which are used mainly by walkers and riders.

I am aware of a growing concern about the reclassification procedure. A working party of the rights of way review committee has been considering a number of relevant issues including the definition of a BOAT. The working party has recently drawn up recommendations which we will be considering carefully.

Pollution (Consultations)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what targets have been set for Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to reply to inquiries made to the inspectorate on matters subject to a public consultation period.

Mr. Maclean: Members of the public may make representations to Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution about applications for authorisation and other legislation under integrated pollution control. It is Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's practice to acknowledge such representations at the earliest opportunity.

British Waterways

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy for moneys raised from the sale of British Waterways properties to be spent on improvements to the waterway system.

Mr. Maclean: Moneys raised from the sale of British Waterways' properties are reinvested for the benefit of the waterways.

Planning Guidance (South-east England)

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what appraisal has been undertaken of the environmental impact of his proposals to base regional planning guidance in the south-east on a requirement for 855,000 houses to be built between 1991 and 2006; if he will publish it; and what alternative levels of development have been considered.

Mr. Baldry: The proposals referred to are those contained in my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State's letter of 9 July 1992 to the chairman of the London and South East Regional Planning Conference—SERPLAN—inviting SERPLAN to put forward proposals for the distribution of new housing provision in the south-east. The letter which was sent to my hon. Friend at the time asked SERPLAN to have regard to various criteria including environmental constraints in different parts of the region, the protection of green belts, the avoidance of development pressure on areas of outstanding natural beauty and the need to optimise the use of urban land. The suggested provision of 855,000 net additional dwellings over the period 1991 to 2006 was arrived at after considering a wide range of views put to my Department, including suggestions for higher and lower provision.

SERPLAN's views on the housing distribution, together with those of others will be taken into account in deciding the content of new draft regional planning guidance for the south-east which will be published shortly for consultation.

Development Plans

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the extent to which the establishment of an urban regeneration agency will result in a reduction in the proportion of housing development taking place outside Greater London and other urban areas.

Mr. Robin Squire: When the URA comes into being it will bring vacant, derelict and under-used land back into use in partnership with the private sector and local authorities. The agency will focus on urban land, but it is not possible to estimate the impact of this on the amount of development, including housing, on land outside urban areas. All schemes that the agency is able to bring forward on vacant and derelict land will, however, relieve pressure on other sites, many of which might otherwise be in rural areas.

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what importance will be given to development plans in terms of the guidance provided in paragraph 5 of planning policy guidance note 1.

Mr. Baldry: Paragraph 5 of PPG1 explains that applications for development proposals should be allowed, having regard to the development plan and all material considerations, unless the proposed development would cause demonstrable harm to interests of acknowledged importance. Section 54A of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 requires planning decisions to be determined in accordance with the plan, unless material considerations indicate otherwise. It follows that the contents of a development plan are of pivotal importance in deciding planning applications, as is explained in more detail between paragraphs 25 and 31 of that guidance.

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authority development plans placed on deposit since 10 February to which his Department has objected on the ground of an omission of environmental policies contained in any of the new or revised planning policy guidance notes issued in 1992.

Mr. Baldry: Of the 59 development plans[1] placed on deposit on or after 10 February 1992, my Department has made 260 objections on environmental grounds to the following 55:

Environmental considerations should permeate the policies of the development plan as a whole, which should be as concise as is consistent with providing the framework for development. Authorities need to apply national policy guidance in the light of local circumstances; not all such guidance will be relevant to every plan. The departmental objections on environmental grounds related to policies not conforming with national policy guidance. Examples are inconsistency with national policies on the green belt, nature conservation, countryside and the rural economy, and omission of policies for waste disposal, as well as objections to policies considered too restrictive, too vague, or not relating to land use.

Asylum

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional resources will be available for local authorities for the settlement of asylum seekers and refugees.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave yesterday to the hon. Member for Warley, West (Mr. Spellar) at column 318.

Urban Programme

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources have been received by urban programme authorities in (a) the first round and (b) the second round of city challenge.

Mr. Robin Squire: Sums of £82·5 million and £150 million will be available for the first round and second round city challenge winners respectively each year for five years.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to consider the action plans of each of the city challenge departments.

Mr. Robin Squire: Round II city challenge partnerships are required to submit their action plans to the Department by 31 December. The plans will be assessed against published guidance and decisions will be announced in February.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment his Department has made of the loss of training places which will result from the reduction in the urban programme.

Mr. Robin Squire: The urban programme will support an estimated 74,097 training places in 1992-93. Because of the increase in total resources available for the urban programme and city challenge, from £319 million in 1992-93 to £408 million in 1993-94, I would expect to see a corresponding rise in the number of training places.
Source (training places): UP Submissions 1992-93.

PSA, Wick

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes following the investigation of management practice at the Property Services Agency office, Wick.

Mr. Redwood: The investigation has confirmed that some irregularities have been committed by an officer in the Wick office and appropriate disciplinary action is being considered.

Sizewell B

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response Her Majesty's Government have received from the European Commission to the submission on Sizewell B made on 13 May.

Mr. Maclean: The favourable opinion of the European Commission was published in the Official Journal of the European Communities on 26 November 1992, reference number L344/40. A copy is available in the Library of the House.

Fire Advisory Panel

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to review the membership of the Fire Advisory Panel in order to include greater representation from fire brigade officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Fire Advisory Panel members who have fire service experience provide valuable input to the discussions, but I see no need to add more fire brigade officers to the panel.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the criteria used to appoint members of the Fire Advisory Panel.

Mr. Baldry: Members of the Fire Advisory Panel are chosen for their expertise in areas relevant to the scope of those aspects of fire safety most closely concerning the building regulations.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the current members of the Fire Advisory Panel and indicate whether each member has served or currently serves as a member or officer of the Society of Fire Safety Engineers, or has had or currently has experience as a professional firefighter.

Mr. Baldry: The current members of the Fire Advisory Panel are:

Dr. E. Marchant, Mr. R. Read, Mr. S. Ham, Mr. L. Davies, Mr. A. Morris, Dr. P. Warren, Mr. T. Ashton, Mr. D. Wright, Mr. P. Dalloway, Mr. F. Hoehnke, Mr. D. O'Brien, Dr. S. Melinek, Miss N. Bovill, Mr. A. Porter, Mr. T. Shields, Mr. W. Malhotra, Mr. A. Ferguson (chairman), Mr. I. Macpherson, Mr. A. Edwards, Dr. J. Denney, Mr. L. Turner, Dr. G. Cooke, Dr. P. Beaver, Mr. R. Graham, Mr. D. Stewart, Dr. A. Macpherson, Mrs. B. Menzies.

Two of these members, Mr. Wright and Mr. Graham, have professional firefighting experience. I understand that the Society of Fire Safety Engineers amalgamated with the Society of Fire Protection Engineers to form the Institute of Fire Safety—IFS. The Department has not asked members whether they are affiliated to the IFS, but I understand that nine of them are.

Housing Act 1985 (Grants)

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a list of the voluntary organisations that have received grants under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 in the past three years and the nature of projects for which the grants have been specifically allocated.

Mr. Baldry: I have today placed in the Library information about the nationwide programme of grants to homelessness voluntary organisations in respect of the current financial year and the two previous financial years.

Riverbus

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the funding of Riverbus by the London Docklands development corporation.

Mr. Baldry: The London Docklands development corporation has made a contribution of £83,000 towards the funding of Riverbus to help the service to continue operating in the short term.

Southern Water

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will prosecute Southern Water following the contamination of water supplies in southern Hampshire by the crypto-sporidium organism.

Mr. Maclean: The drinking water inspectorate is investigating the circumstances of this case and will advise my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State on what action, if any, should be taken.

Forest Strategies

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will issue guidance on the preparation of forest strategies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I am pleased to be able to announce today the issue of a new circular, jointly with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales which provides guidance to relevant local authorities on the drawing up of forestry strategies for their areas. The issue of the circular follows up a consultation exercise held earlier in the year, announced as part of the action for the countryside initiative.

The main thrust of forest policy has changed over recent years. Increasingly new forests are designed with multiple objectives in mind. The value of forests for landscape, recreation and wildlife, as well as a general environmental resource, is now seen by the Government as being equally important as timber production. Accordingly, it is increasingly important that new forests are located in the right places. Indicative forestry strategies will provide a means of identifying preferred locations for new woodlands as well as areas where such expansion may be inappropriate, because of environmental or other reasons.

I am arranging for copies of the circular to be placed in the Library of the House.

Environment Council

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Environment Council on 15 and 16 December.

Mr. Howard: I chaired the Environment Council which met in Brussels on 15 and 16 December. My hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside represented the United Kingdom. Many of the United Kingdom's presidency objectives were achieved.

The Council agreed a regulation on ozone-depleting substances, accelerating the schedule for phasing out their production and consumption within the Community. Halons are to be phased out by the end of 1993, chlorofluorocarbons and carbon tetracholoride by the end of 1994, with a cut of 85 per cent. by the end of 1993, and 1,1,1-trichloroethane by the end of 1995, with a cut of 50 per cent. by the end of 1993. The Council also looked forward to early proposals from the Commission for ratification by the Community and its member states for the Copenhagen amendment to the Montreal protocol, and for the control of hydrochlorofluorocarbons, HBFCs and methyl bromide.

The Council adopted a common position on a new directive to apply stringent standards on exhaust pollutants and evaporative emission controls from light-duty vehicles. The same technical solutions developed for passenger cars will be applied to all passenger vehicles, vans and light goods vehicles below 3·5 tonnes. The standards will come into force on 1 October 1993 for new types, and 1 October 1994 for all vehicles entering into service.

The Council agreed a resolution setting out its response to the Commission's fifth environmental action programme, "Towards Sustainability". The programme maps out a broad strategy for the Community's environmental policy until the end of the century. The Council noted that the programme constitutes a good basis for the implementation in the Community of "Agenda 21" and that Community environmental policy will be guided by the principle of subsidiarity in the light of decisions reached at the Edinburgh European Council. The Council recognised inter alia the importance of the integration of environmental concerns into other policy areas; the use of new approaches such as economic instruments and voluntary schemes such as eco-labelling and eco-auditing; the need to take account of the costs and benefits of action or lack of action; the need to improve the implementation and enforcement of Community legislation; and the need to keep the implementation of the programme under regular review.

The Council reached agreement on a decision on ratification by the Community and its member states of the United Nations Environment Programme's Basel convention on the control of transboundary movements of hazardous wastes and their disposal. The Council will decide on the date of ratification after the adoption of the waste shipments regulation. The date of ratification will, if at all possible, be no later than three months prior to the second meeting of the parties to the convention which is likely to be in February/March 1994, so that the Community and its member states can become full parties to the convention in time for that meeting.

The Council reached political agreement, subject to the opinion of the European Parliament and a general reserve by one member state, on a regulation introducing an eco-management and audit scheme. The aim of the scheme, which is a voluntary one, is to encourage effective environmental management of industrial sites and regular public reporting of environmental impacts. The Government believe that the scheme will provide the incentive for industry to compete in delivering substantial environmental improvement.

The Council held a useful discussion of the progress that has been made on the various elements of the Community's climate change strategy, and on the framework convention on climate change. There was general agreement that the Community and its member states should aim to ratify the convention by the end of 1993 at the very latest. There was also agreement that the council should reach agreement on the proposal for a monitoring mechanism as soon as possible, and that work should continue on the carbon/energy tax proposal. This work will be carried forward under the Danish presidency.

The Council held a useful first discussion on the question of ensuring the effective implementation and enforcement of Community environmental legislation, based on a report from the Commission on the current position in member states. The Commission undertook to produce these reports on a regular basis, and the Council agreed to discuss the subject annually in the future. A number of proposals were made for improving the collaboration between the Commission and the member states on this question, and the Council welcomed in particular the successful establishment of the network of environment enforcement authorities following its first meeting at Chester in November.

The Council considered for the first time the Commission's proposal for a directive on packaging and packaging waste and invited the Committee of Permanent Representatives—COREPER—to continue their work on this issue. The directive is designed to prevent distortions to the single market in this area while ensuring a high level of environmental protection.

The Council noted the good progress which had been made on the Commission's proposal for a revision of controls on the wildlife trade—the CITES regulation—and invited COREPER to take the discussion forward.

The Council noted the decisions of the Edinburgh Council on the locations of various European bodies. They reaffirmed the importance of reaching a speedy decision on the site of the European Environment Agency. Meanwhile, there was general agreement with the Commission's plans for entering preparatory work for the agency.

The Council formally adopted a directive on procedures for harmonizing the programmes for the reduction and eventual elimination of pollution caused by waste from the titanium dioxide industry.

The Commission announced proposals for a formal European launch of the eco-labelling scheme in June.

Housing

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce the Housing Corporation's approved development programme, local authorities' housing investment programme allocations, the distribution of resources for estate action and the details of the housing revenue account subsidy determinations.

Sir George Young: I am today announcing a number of decisions about the provision of resources for housing in 1993-94.

Today, I am informing local housing authorities of their housing investment programme—HIP—allocations for 1993-94, some £1·9 billion in total.

These HIP allocations will support the investment programmes of local authorities which, as we have already announced, will receive a major boost for the remainder of 1992-93 and in 1993-94 and later years, as a result of the Government's decision to allow local authorities to spend virtually all of the capital receipts which they receive in the period from 13 November 1992 to 31 December 1993. Some £1 billion of additional housing capital expenditure should take place over the period 1992-93 to 1994-95 as a result of this change, which is being supported by the new capital partnership programme announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Of the HIP allocations that I am today announcing, some £1,380 million are general purpose allocations, or housing "annual capital guidelines". In July, I confirmed to local authorities that 40 per cent. of these would be distributed on the basis of a statistical assessment of local housing needs, leaving 60 per cent. to be allocated on a discretionary basis in relation to published criteria. The primary criterion has been the efficiency and effectiveness of local authorities in making use of capital resources to meet housing needs, and discretion has also been exercised significantly in relation to needs and other factors not adequately reflected in the statistical assessment. My regional offices have carefully considered the strategy statements submitted by each local housing authority, and their bids, and Ministers have reached their decisions on the allocations in the light of the advice provided by regional controllers.

The picture emerging from this process demonstrates very clearly the success of the new developments in the Government's housing policies, introduced over the past two years. The performance of local authorities across the country has improved substantially, both in their role as landlords of nearly 4 million council houses, and in the encouraging development of the enabling role of authorities. This has been accompanied by substantial changes in their perception of the broad and vital role in encouraging the private sector. Welcome new efforts have also been made to produce housing strategies and plans which are more accessible and to involve housing interests, tenants and residents in their preparation. In addition, the measures that we have taken this year to draw together the local authority HIP process, with the approved development programme—ADP—process of the Housing Corporation has got off to a good start. This has assisted in establishing coherent local housing strategies, and in demonstrating the considerable scope for effective co-ordination of the very large sums which Government are investing in local housing needs, through the programmes of local authorities and housing associations.

Arising from the assessments of performance, we have again been able to direct resources to a greater degree to local authorities who are best able to make use of them, while withholding resources to some degree from authorities where significant improvements still need to be made. I am glad to be able to publish today the names of the authorities who are the best performers in each region under the HIP process. All other authorities will have the assessment of their performance and proposals conveyed to them, partly in letters which are being sent out today from the Department's regional offices, and more fully in the discussions which will continue to take place in the continuous cycle of the HIP process. I am glad that many of the local authorities who were identified as the worst performers last year have made significant improvements in their performance and proposals, and I hope that it is encouraging to them that these improvements can be recognised through the allocations that I am announcing today. It is essential that, even where improvements are being made, better performance is sustained, and that proposals for greater progress are delivered. We shall return to this in future HIP rounds. Those authorities who are average performers should also look to do better, so that overall the standards of local authorities as landlords and enablers will continue to rise.

A further £370 million has been allocated for private sector renewal and housing defects, in the form of "specified capital grant", to assist councils with their expenditure in these areas. Taking account of local authorities' greater access to usable capital receipts, we propose to reduce the rate of Exchequer contribution from 75 to 60 per cent., so that the above allocations will support a higher total expenditure on private sector renewal and housing defects nationally than in the current year. The Department is consulting authorities on this proposed change. As with the annual capital guideline allocations, 40 per cent. of these resources have been distributed on a statistical assessment of local needs and 60 per cent. on a discretionary basis.

I am depositing tables in the Library of the House showing the 1992-93 allocation to each authority of the annual capital guideline and of specified capital grant. Together, these comprise the HIP allocations. I am also depositing a list of the names of authorities in each region who have been assessed as the best performers.

We have conducted a consultation exercise, over the last few months, into the future development of the HIP process. I am grateful for the many responses to this exercise on a range of issues relating to the strategies and programmes of local housing authorities. I shall be making an announcement early in the new year on our conclusions to this exercise, which will be followed by proposed working arrangements to ensure the timely launch of the HIP round for 1993.

The estate action budget for 1993-94 will be £356 million. Of this, some £113 million will be available for new schemes, the remainder being for schemes already under way. Local authorities are today being notified of the outcome of their bids for resources for new schemes next year, as well as of the resources being provided for continuing schemes. The tables in the Library show the latest position on the distribution of these resources between authorities.

The number of new schemes in next year's programme is at present 166. I am placing a list of these in the Library. Final approval will depend on confirmation of the extent to which authorities are able to contribute to overall scheme costs by using capital receipts freed-up as a result of the Secretary of State's announcement on the capital partnership programme. So far, it has been possible to increase the number of new schemes in the programme by almost 20 per cent. as a result of the capital partnership initiative.

Turning to the revenue expenditure of local housing authorities, I have today made the housing revenue account subsidy determination for 1993-94. I am placing copies of the determinations in the Library.

On subsidy allowances for management and maintenance, I confirm the proposals to increase allowances by 3·75 per cent.—1 per cent. in real terms—overall and to continue to distribute the increase through a system of targeted allowances reflecting authorities' relative need to spend.

For rent guidelines, I am confirming the proposal for an average increase in guidelines of 7·75 per cent.—5 per cent. in real terms. This will result in an average increase in guideline rents of £2·12 per week over those which apply this year, with a range of between £1·50 and £3 for individual councils, bringing the national average guideline rent to £29·40. Responsibility for setting actual rents, however, remains with individual local authorities. Housing benefit will normally meet the whole of any rent increase for the 70 per cent. of tenants receiving it.

We have already announced that £597 million more than originally planned will be made available to the Housing Corporation this year to boost the housing market. This has increased the estimated output from the corporation's approved development programme this year from 47,000 completions to 65,000 completions. The implementation of this programme is proceeding satisfactorily and we are confident that the resources will be spent in full. Over the next three years, the ADP is expected to provide a further 154,000 homes for rent or shared-ownership. Lower interest rates and competitive prices, as well as the increased contribution which we hope to obtain from the private sector, should enable us to maintain the programme at a lower cost to the taxpayer than previously projected.

In view of the importance of housing association rehabilitation projects to inner city regeneration and as a contribution to making the best use of existing stock, I have asked that the corporation should aim to maintain the proportion of such projects at 18 per cent. of new approvals for rent next year, pending completion of the Department's research into this subject.

Decisions on ADP allocations and local authority HIP allocations are now taken within a co-ordinated framework. Local authorities, the Housing Corporation and local housing associations have co-operated closely in preparing local programmes as part of a single housing strategy, and we have been able to consider the two programmes in parallel in taking decisions about the distribution of HIP resources. The tables in the Library also show indicative new ADP allocations for each local authority area for schemes to be approved in 1993-94, which are used for planning purposes, together with the full-life value of housing association schemes under way at 1 April 1993. Final ADP allocations will be announced in February next year. In future, the two processes will run to a common timetable.

These various allocations, combined with the measures on the use of capital receipts, continue the Government's commitment to social housing investment within a coherent framework involving local authorities, housing associations and the private sector. They also sustain the intention of helping the most neglected council estates. Local authorities should continue the encouraging improvements that they have made over the past year in response to our policies and, in particular, to improve further the standards of their management and the efforts that they make to draw the resources of the private sector into meeting housing needs.

EC Acquired Rights Directive

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the EC acquired rights directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 11 December 1992]: This information is not held centrally.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the results of the annual meeting of the convention to control toxic waste which met in Uruguay in early December.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 14 December 1992]: The main issue discussed at the first meeting of the contracting parties to the Basel convention was that of movements of waste from Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries to developing countries. The conference adopted a decision containing the following key elements: a request that industrialised countries prohibit transboundary movements for disposal to developing countries; agreement that, until the conference takes further action and until the convention is reviewed in 1995, transboundary movements for recovery and recycling operations take place in accordance with the provisions of the convention an in particular with the requirement that waste be handled in an environmentally sound manner; and a request to developing countries to prohibit the import of hazardous wastes from industrialised countries. The United Kingdom presidency, on behalf of the European Community, made a statement explaining the European Community's position as set out in the recently agreed waste shipments regulation. The statement said that the regulation will prohibit exports for disposal except to European Free Trade Association countries and will strictly control exports for recovery to ensure the environmentally sound management of that waste in developing countries. The statement noted that Denmark, under its presidency of the European Community, would seek to promote a ban on the export of waste from the European Community to all developing countries.

Other decisions established a useful platform for work leading to the second meeting of the parties planned for February/March 1994. The conference decided on an open-ended ad hoc committee which will consider proposals on liability and compensation, a revolving fund for emergencies, technical guidelines and regional training centres for developing countries.

Lecturers (Council Elections)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in what circumstances lecturers in further education colleges are barred from standing in local elections for councils with responsibility for education.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 14 December 1992]: Lecturers in further education colleges are currently barred only from standing for election to the local education authorities of which they are employees. When further education colleges transfer to the new further education sector on 1 April 1993, lecturers at the colleges will become employees of the corporations established to conduct the colleges. In these circumstances such lecturers will be entitled to stand for election to any council.

Shropshire

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will give the actual cash sums paid by central Government to Shrewsbury and Atcham borough council in support of (a) revenue and (b) capital expenditure in the years for which figures are conveniently available and the projected figures for 1993-94;

(2) if he will give the actual cash sums paid by central Government to Shropshire county council in support of (a) revenue and (b) capital expenditure in the years for which figures are conveniently available and the projected figure for 1993-94.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 15 December 1992]: Local authorities report the following:

Displaced Persons

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial assistance will be given to local authorities who provide accommodation and other facilities to refugees from the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Robin Squire: As announced by my hon. Friend the Member for Housing and Planning on 16 November, Official Report, column 54, we propose to make available a special grant to assist the small number of local authorities worst affected by the recent influx of displaced persons from the former Yugoslav republic. My Department will be writing to local authorities shortly in order to obtain information on which to base the grant.

House Renovation Grant Scheme

Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the outcome of this Department's review of the house renovation grant system.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his answer, 16 July 1992, c. 1047]: During recent months, it has become clear that the present renovation grant system is placing increasing financial pressure on a growing number of local authorities, mainly because of the demands of mandatory grants. I have concluded that there is a need to take a further thorough look at the operation of the system, in particular to examine whether it remains appropriate given the likely availability of resources in future years. Accordingly, my Department will be issuing a consultation paper early next year setting out possible options for change. I shall want to consider very carefully the views expressed by local authorities and others in response to this document.

I have today separately announced the resources which we are making available in 1993-94 to support local authorities expenditure on renovation grants, on other aspects of private housing renewal and on dealing with defective housing. I am pleased to say that, taken together with authorities' increased spending power from receipts next year, these provide for higher total expenditure than in the current financial year.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 11 January 1993

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Conduct of Inquiries

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what representations have been made to him about those conducting legal inquiries on behalf of Her Majesty's Government giving press briefings during the inquiry.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The hon. Member has omitted to mention the inquiry in which he is interested, and therefore I regret I am unable to answer his question without further detail being provided.

Complaints Body

Mr. French: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make it his policy to establish a body equivalent to the Solicitors Complaints Bureau as a statutory body.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Government believe that the maintenance of professional standards is, in the first instance, for the professional body concerned. The Law Society has since 1986 delegated its statutory powers in respect of professional misconduct to the Solicitors Complaints Bureau. Matters of discipline and serious breaches of the society's rules of professional conduct are for the Solicitors Disciplinary Tribunal, a statutory and independent body with a lay majority, to consider and act upon. In order to ensure that public confidence is maintained, the Government also established the Office of the Legal Services Ombudsman, under provisions in the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990. The ombudsman acts as an effective independent scrutiny of the way in which the Law Society carries out its statutory duties; he also has the same powers in respect of the General Council of the Bar and the Council for Licensed Conveyancers.

Legal Aid Leaflets

Mr. Cox: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the languages in which legal aid leaflets are available in courts or prisons in England and Wales.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Legal Aid Board produces leaflets in the following languages: English, Welsh, Arabic, Bengali, Chinese, Farsi, French, German, Greek, Gujerati, Hindi, Italian, Portuguese, Punjabi, Spanish, Turkish, Urdu and Vietnamese. The board supplies leaflets in any of these languages to courts or prisons on request.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Butte Mining

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Attorney-General what is his current estimate of the date of completion of the inquiries by the Serious Fraud Office into share dealings in Butte Mining.

The Attorney-General: An SFO investigation into aspects of the affairs of Butte Mining plc commenced in June 1992. The SFO target for cases generally is one year from acceptance for investigation to transfer to Crown court. It is policy not to divulge operational details relating to the progress of particular investigations.

TRANSPORT

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the findings of the research commissioned in 1990 as to how aircraft noise affects people's sleep will be made available.

Mr. Norris: My noble Friend Lord Caithness has received a report on the field study into aircraft noise and sleep disturbance which describes the study and its results. This is published today by the Department of Transport. Copies will be placed in the House libraries.

This has been one of the most comprehensive studies of the subject carried out anywhere in the world. The research has been carried out by teams led by Professor J. A. Horne, Loughborough University of Technology; Dr. K. I. Hume, Manchester Metropolitan University; and Professor I. D. Diamond, University of Southampton; under the overall direction of Dr. J. B. Ollerhead of the Civil Aviation Authority's Department of Safety, Environment and Engineering. I am grateful for the effort and expertise which they have devoted to this study.

People vary greatly in how they react to noise. This is true also of the effect of aircraft noise on people's sleep. However, one of the conclusions of this study is that, once asleep, very few people living near airports are at risk of any substantial sleep disturbance due to aircraft noise.

Road Building (Filler)

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the extent to which blast furnace slag has been approved for use in motorway embankments.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Blast furnace slag is approved in the Department's Specification for Highway Works for use as general fill, as selected granular fill and as a capping material in motorway embankments. A copy of the specification is in the Library.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what regulations govern the choice by contractors of the type of fill material for use in major road building projects.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Contractors are required to satisfy the specification for each particular scheme. This specification incorporates the Department's Specification for Highway Works and lays down additional requirements as necessary including any environmental constraints.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will undertake and publish a comparative study of the costs of using (a) blast furnace slag and (b) freshly quarried stone as fill material for major road building projects.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A study was carried out in 1991 by the Department of the Environment into the economics of using mineral and industrial waste materials as substitutes for naturally occurring aggregates. The study included a comparison of the costs of using steel blast furnace slag as a replacement for crushed rock. The report was published (ISBN 0 11 7524840) and a copy was placed in the House of Commons Library.

Traffic Calming

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department has spent on traffic calming measures in each of the last three years; and what savings in deaths and serious injuries on roads are estimated to have resulted.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Traffic calming is one part of a range of measures used in undertaking accident remedial schemes. The information requested is not available centrally, and could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to introduce the regulations enabling local authorities to introduce traffic calming measures on class A roads.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We hope to lay traffic calming regulations before the House in the new year. These will apply to class A as well as to other roads.

Channel Tunnel (Rail Freight)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will name the parliamentary constituencies in Greater London through which channel tunnel rail freight services will run when the tunnel opens.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail expects channel tunnel freight services to run on railway lines in the following Greater London parliamentary constituencies:

Battersea, Beckenham, Brent East, Brent North, Brent South, Chelsea, Chislehurst, Croydon Central, Croydon North East, Croydon North West, Croydon South, Dulwich, Ealing Acton, Ealing North, Ealing Southall, Enfield North, Enfield Southgate, Fulham, Hackney South and Shoreditch, Hammersmith, Hampstead and Highgate, Harrow East, Harrow West, Hayes and Harlington, Holborn and St. Pancras, Hornsey and Wood Green, Islington North, Islington South and Finsbury, Kensington, Lewisham Deptford, Lewisham East, Lewisham West, Newham North West, Norwood, Orpington, Peckham, Streatham, Tooting, Tottenham, Uxbridge, Vauxhall.

13. Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects British Rail to receive for trialling on rails in Great Britain a pre-production series channel tunnel passenger service train.

Mr. Freeman: I understand from British Rail that it hopes to begin trials in June 1993.

Rear Seat Belts

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has of (a) the reduction in deaths and serious injuries resulting from the requirement for car passengers to wear rear seat belts and (b) the cost to the motor manufacturers of the requirement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It has been estimated that full compliance with the rear seat belt wearing requirements would save at least 100 lives and 1,000 serious injuries a year, but since the requirement has applied to adults only since July 1991, there is insufficient statistical evidence to demonstrate the actual savings. In the six months July to December 1991 deaths and serious injuries to adult rear seat passengers fell by 14 per cent. and to child rear seat passengers by 12 per cent. compared with the corresponding period in 1990, but it is not known how much of this reduction can be attributed to seat belt wearing.

The wearing regulations impose no additional cost to motor manufacturers: all new cars since October 1987 have been required to be fitted with rear seat belts.

Construction Contracts

230. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of state for Transport if he will list for each of the last 10 years major construction contracts awarded by his Department worth over £250,000 at current prices, indicating in each case which construction company was awarded the contract; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I regret that the full information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, the following information shows, for each of the last five years, all new road construction contracts with award (cash) prices of £250,000 or more.

Rail Privatisation

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 14 December, Official Report, column 32, if he will make it his policy to make the draft guidance to be given to the franchising authority available to hon. Members before the Second Reading debate on the British Rail privatisation legislation.

Mr. Freeman: We intend to make the draft guidance to be issued to the franchising authority available to hon. Members at the commencement of the Committee stage of the Bill.

Expenditure (London Boroughs)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give his Department's expenditure, by London borough, for each of the past five years, on (a) major trunk roads, (b) local main roads via transport supplementary grant, (c) bus improvements, (d) rail improvements and (e) cycle facilities.

Mr. Norris: This information is not held in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Red Routes

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the expenditure, by borough, of funds from his Department on roads adjacent to red routes in London.

Mr. Norris: The latest estimates of expenditure on approved works on roads adjacent to the pilot red route are:

(a) Haringey	717,000
(b) Islington	690,000
(c) Hackney	229,000
(d) Tower Hamlets	954,000

Private Car Ownership

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are his Department's projections on the increase in private car ownership in (a) Greater London, (b) England and Wales and (c) Scotland over (i) the next five years, (ii) 10 years and (iii) 15 years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The number of private cars alone is not forecast. The Department's forecasts of the number of cars normally kept in (a) Greater London and (b) England and Wales and (c) Scotland are:

Millions

	(a)	1	(c)
1991	2·4	18·7	1·5
1997	2·7 to 2·8	21·1 to 22·0	1·7 to 1·8
2002	2·9 to 3·1	22·9 to 24·6	1·9 to 2·0
2007	3·0 to 3·4	24·5 to 26·9	2·0 to 2·2

[1] (b) includes (a).

The range in the forecasts is associated with the expected range in GDP growth and fuel prices.

Cycles

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions his Department has held with (a) Westminster city council and (b) the City of London regarding their policies on cycling and parking of cycles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: My Department discusses cycling issues with the London boroughs collectively through the London Cycling Forum, chaired by the London Planning Advisory Committee. We have given advice in a series of local transport notes on provision for cyclists, including cycle parking.

Parking

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's estimate of the number of (a) on-street, (b) public off-street and (c) private off-street parking facilities in inner London; what the figures were for 1988; and what he expects to be the provision in 1994.

Mr. Norris: My Department has not made any estimates of parking provision in inner London. However, a survey conducted for the London Planning Advisory Committee in 1990 found (a) 81,000 on-street parking places, and (b) 42,000 places in off-street public car parks. These estimates cover all boroughs in inner and central London except Islington and the London Docklands Development Corporation who did not respond to the survey, and Hackney who did not provide information about on-street parking. Information on (c) private off-street parking facilities is not available.

Departmental Property

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list (a) the total number of residential properties owned by his Department, (b) the number of such properties which are empty, and (c), (b) as a percentage of (a).

Mr. Norris: Yes. On 30 September 1992, when the last return was compiled:

(a) the total number of residential properties was 3,283: apart from 15 used by coastguard services they were held as a result of road schemes;

(b) 666 were empty; and

(c) the empty properties were 20·4 per cent. of the total. However, of these, 597 (18·3 per cent.) either have been in the Department's ownership for three months or less; are awaiting demolition; are in the process of being sold or are vacant for other good reasons, for example, because they are uninhabitable or are specialised and particularly difficult to let. Only 69 properties (2·1 per cent.) remain unlet without good reason.

British Rail Rolling Stock

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish details of all locomotives and rolling stock that British Rail (a) has moth-balled, (b) intends to declare surplus to requirements or to dispose of for scrap and (c) has disposed of, or sold for scrap, during the past year.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail has provided the following information:

(a) InterCity has 40 coaches in store, with plans to store another 35; 40 surplus sleeper coaches are also in store, and a purchaser is being sought for these; 74 damaged or defective locomotives are in store awaiting a decision.

(b) About 300 locomotives have been withdrawn and are awaiting sale by competitive tender.

(c) Sixty-seven locomotives were sold during 1992, of which 12 went to preservation societies or other private users. In the past two years InterCity has disposed of 235 life-expired coaches for scrap; a further 100 coaches have been sold to the private sector or transferred to other parts of BR.

Some life-expired electric and diesel multiple units are becoming surplus as new rolling stock is introduced on Network SouthEast regional railways. Detailed figures are not readily available.

BR is always interested to hear from those who wish to be included in tender lists for surplus rolling stock. Stock which contains asbestos may require the attention of a special contractor.

Driving Tests

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reasons differing provisions apply in respect of the consequences of failure to pass a test within two years to (a) holders of provisional motorcyclist licences and (b) car drivers holding provisional licences; and what plans he has to bring the two provisional licences into line with each other.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A provisional motorcycle licence is valid for a maximum period of two years and may not be renewed within a year of expiring. Provisional car driving licences remain valid until the holder reaches the age of 70. The reason for these differing provisions is that the holder of a provisional motorcycle licence is entitled to ride unaccompanied and, without this limitation on the period of validity of such a licence, there would be no incentive to attain the standard required to obtain a full licence.

A2 (Dualling)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of the design consultancy project for the dualling of the A2 between Lydden and Dover; and when, how, and for how long the public consultation process is to operate.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The design consultants are continuing to investigate route options for the A2 Lydden to Dover scheme. Public consultation is planned for late spring 1993. It will include the distribution of information leaflets with questionnaires, a press notice, advertisement in the local press and a public exhibition. A six-week period is proposed for receipt of comments from the public.

Road Schemes

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those road schemes added to the Government's roads programme since the publication of the White Paper, "Trunk Roads: England into the 1990s."

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The 32 schemes which have been added to the national roads programme since the 1990 White Paper are as follows:

National roads programme entries

A303—Ilminster bypass

A41—Christleton bypass
A428—Turvey bypass
A39—Kilkhampton bypass
A49—Woofferton bypass
A65—West of Gargrave bypass

M25—Slip road—Clacket lane motorway service area
M5—Junction 29-30
M23—Widening junctions 9-10
M27—Widening junctions 4-12
M25—Second stage widening

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the trunk road and motorway schemes that have been through a formal period of public consultation during the last 12 months and indicate those schemes where comments on a no-road option were specifically invited.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The following trunk road and motorway schemes have been through a period of formal consultation within the last 12 months:
M1—Widening of junctions 6A-10.
M1—Widening of junctions 10-15.
M1-M62 link.
M3—Widening of junctions 2-4.
M6—Widening of junctions 11-16.
M6—Widening of junctions 16-20.
M25—Junctions 12-15 improvement.
M40—Widening of junctions 1A-3.
M56-M62—Greater Manchester western and northern relief road stage 2*.
M62-M606 link.
M63—Widening of junctions 6-9.
A1(M)—Redhouse to Ferrybridge.
A1—Gateshead western bypass.
A2-A282—Dartford improvement.
A3—Hindhead improvement.
A3—M40 to B4031 improvement.
A12—Pakefield to Kessingland.
A16—East Keal bypass.
A17—Leadenham to Sleaford improvement.
A19—Norton to Parkway improvement.
A19—Shipton-by-Beningbrough bypass.
A19—Thormanby bypass.
A21—Silverhill improvement.
A26—Beddingham to Itford Farm diversion.
A27—Lewes to Polegate improvement.
A30—Woodleigh junction.
A36—Beckington to east of Bath.
A39—Allins to south Penlean improvement.
A41—No Mans Heath and Macefen bypass.
A41—Milton Green bypass.
A46—Newark Widmerpool improvement.
A49—Woofferton bypass*.
A50—Blythe Bridge Queensway Meir section.
A51—Improvement at Burford and the Green bypass.
A52—Radcliffe-on-Trent to Grantham improvement.
A54—Kelsall bypass to A556 improvement.
A57-A628—Mottram/Hollingworth/Tintwistle bypass*.
A63—Castle street.
A63—West of A1.
A64—Malton-Seamer.
A64—York-Malton.
A65—Coniston Cold bypass.
A66—Longnewton grade separated junction.
A259—Walland Marsh improvement.
A303—Ilminster bypass dualling.
A516—North of Etwall improvement.
A523—Improvements Poynton-Macclesfield*.
A595—Duddon Bridge improvement.
A1079—Shiptonthorpe bypass.
A6120—Seacroft and Crossgates bypass.

While none of the public consultations had a "no road" option, those schemes marked with an * did contain a question of whether a new road/bypass was necessary. It is, however, our policy to put forward only routes which we consider feasible and are prepared to build.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those road schemes deleted from the Government's road programmes on (a) economic, (b) environmental and (c) other grounds since the White Paper, "Trunk Roads: England into the 1990s".

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: One scheme, A59 Copster Green bypass, has been deleted from the national roads programme since the White Paper, "Trunk Roads, England into the 1990s". This was on economic grounds. The A6 Market Harborough to Desborough scheme has been transferred from the national programme to the regional programme of under £5 million schemes.

National Parks

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made concerning transport policy implications in respect of the Countryside Commission's proposals to strengthen national parks for the 21st century; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Government made a full response to the Countryside Commission's national parks review in January this year.

My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Transport and for Wales are responsible for policy on trunk roads in national parks. The Government's policy remains as it has been: no new trunk roads will be constructed or an existing road upgraded unless there is a compelling need which cannot be met by any reasonable alternative means. This policy has been most recently reflected in our announcement in September that the A628/A616 would not be upgraded to dual carriageway through the Peak district national park.

Other transport needs are a matter for local authorities, passenger transport executives and British Rail, in consultation with the national park authorities where appropriate.

Nuclear Material

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply of 8 December, Official Report, column 599-600, relating to the transport of small quantities of plutonium, what was the mass of the largest single small quantity exported for which he has records; and whether his answer encompasses all nuclear materials transported from the United Kingdom since such transport began.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Individual shipments of small quantities of radioactive material are not notifiable to the Department.

The previous response referred to shipments made by British Nuclear Fuels plc and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority since 1981.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to re-establish his Department's advisory committee on the safe transport of nuclear materials.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No: ACTRAM was disbanded because its work was completed. Any future issues relating to the transport of radioactive waste will be covered by the Department of the Environment's radioactive waste management advisory committee.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received over the transport of nuclear materials to, from and within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norris: Forty-three parliamentary questions (including this one).

Freight Traffic

14. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about his plans to implement his policy of encouraging freight to transfer from road to rail.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government want to see freight moving by rail wherever practical. If rail freight is to flourish it must be competitive with road and other forms of transport. The introduction of private sector skills and access to new sources of funding is the best means of securing an efficient and competitive rail freight industry in the United Kingdom.

Heavy Lorries

15. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment has been made of the increase in heavy lorries registered outside the United Kingdom on United Kingdom roads after the opening up of the single market; and if he will make a statement on the steps taken to ensure the roadworthiness of such vehicles.

Mr. MacGregor: The number of foreign lorries on our roads has risen by 19 per cent. in the past five years. This compares with a 52 per cent. increase in the number of British lorries travelling to the continent in the same period. British and foreign vehicles are checked at ports and at the roadside for compliance with the law on safety, weight limits and drivers' hours.

Transport Supplementary Grant

16. Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what level of financial support he will give to local authorities through the transport supplementary grant.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: As explained in my right hon. Friend's statement to the House on 15 December 1992, the funds available through transport supplementary grant for 1993-94 total £1,047 million. Of this, £431 million is transport supplementary grant and the rest is allocated as borrowing approvals.

Jubilee Line Extension

17. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the most recent state of the arrangements for the commencement of work on the Jubilee line extension; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: We have made provision for the Jubilee line extension to be constructed subject to a satisfactory agreement being reached with the administrators of Olympia and York Canary Wharf on the terms on which they are to contribute towards its cost. Negotiations with the administrators are continuing.

Roads (Private Investment)

18. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement on the measures which he is taking to attract private investment in capital spending on roads.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall publish this year a Green Paper on the basis for charging for the use of inter-urban roads. One option to be considered is direct charging, for use of such roads, which would greatly increase opportunities for private investment. The Green Paper will also examine the scope for attracting more private finance through joint ventures and through contracts for the design, build and operation of roads.

Rail Fares

19. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take the necessary steps to ensure that the fares charged for travel on British railways are broadly in line with those which apply in other EC member states; and what assessment he has made of the service provided by such railways.

Mr. Freeman: Meaningful comparisons are difficult to make, given the very different operating conditions in each country. However, it is clear that fares could be reduced only if subsidies were increased. It would be wrong to ask taxpayers to fund bigger subsidies. Passengers, who are the main beneficiaries of rail services, should bear as much as possible of the costs.

Passengers Charter

20. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he plans to meet the chairman of British Rail to assess the effectiveness of the passengers charter.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend and I meet the British Rail chairman frequently and discuss a range of issues including the operation of the passengers charter.

InterCity Services (Gloucestershire)

21. Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effects of British Rail privatisation on InterCity services to and from towns in Gloucestershire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Freeman: Involving the private sector in the operation of the railways through franchising will lead to an improvement in the quality of all passenger rail services, including InterCity services to and from Gloucestershire.

Road Lighting

22. Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to reduce the level of pollution from road lights in rural areas.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: In future, trunk road lighting in rural areas will use lanterns designed to limit light pollution. General guidance will be published to make lighting more environmentally sensitive.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the increased energy costs that will arise as a result of increased street, road and motorway lighting over the next five years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The energy costs for road lighting over the next five years will depend on a number of factors such as the type of lamp used, increases in the road length lit, and any changes in the unit costs of electricity.

By far the largest users of energy for street and road lighting are local highway authorities and no central records are kept. On all-purpose trunk roads and motorways, detailed plans are subject to change according to circumstances, but on present assumptions the overall energy consumption seems likely to rise in the order of 20 per cent. over the next five years.

Networker Trains (Kent)

23. Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the chairman of British Rail about the ordering of the proposed networker express trains for the Kent coast services.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of British Rail regularly to discuss current issues. The Chancellor's autumn statement enables BR to order on lease an additional £150 million of new rolling stock over the next three years. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my right hon. Friend the Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) on 17 December, Official Report, c. 337-38.

Drink-driving

25. Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress in reducing deaths linked to drink-driving.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Considerable progress has been made in our continuing campaign against drinking and driving in changing public attitudes and so reducing the number of deaths caused by those who drink and drive.

The percentage of drivers/riders killed who were over the legal limit has fallen from 30 per cent. in 1981 to 19 per cent. in 1991. In 1991 some 700 people were killed in accidents where a driver or rider was over the legal limit compared with 1,540 in 1981 and 800 in 1990.

London Buses Ltd.

27. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements he has made for the disposal of assets held by London Buses Ltd.

Mr. Norris: Following my announcement on 4 December that we intend to proceed with early privatisation of London Buses Ltd., we shall be working up our proposals in more detail, including their implications for the assets held by the company, over the coming months.

EC Environmental Rules

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last had discussions with the European Commissioner for the Environment on the application of the Community's environmental rules to the United Kingdom road programmes.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: During the United Kingdom presidency, my right hon. Friend met Mr. van Miert, then Commissioner for Transport and the Environment, on a number of occasions to discuss various matters including the national road programme in England. Trunk roads in the rest of the United Kingdom are the responsibility of the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland.

A20 (Dualling)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the current progress of the A20 road dualling between Dover and Folkstone and the expected date for completion.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The A20 Folkestone-Dover scheme is being constructed in three contract lengths. The scheme is expected to be completed by late summer 1993.

Submarine Notification Scheme

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement on the responsibility of Commander Ancona with respect to the Subfacts scheme; to whom he is directly responsible; and what is the working relationship of Her Majesty's Coastguard with the Royal Navy and the Ministry of Defence in the operation of the scheme;

(2) what representations he has received concerning the comments of Commander Ancona of Her Majesty's Coastguard regarding the operation of the Subfacts notification scheme; what action he has taken as a result; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Commander Ancona as Chief Coastguard is head of Her Majesty's Coastguard which, as part of marine directorate of the Department of Transport, is responsible for the initiation and co-ordination of civil maritime search and rescue (SAR). He is directly responsible to the director of marine emergency operations. Responsibility for fishing vessel safety rests with the surveyor general's organisation within the Department.

Following the sinking of the fishing vessel Antares in November 1990, the Chief Coastguard, agreed to HM Coastguard broadcasting Subfacts information for the inner Clyde submarine exercise areas on behalf of MOD. The scheme was subsequently extended to the outer Clyde, and Rona and Raasay exercise areas. The Royal Navy under the aegis of the Ministry of Defence provides HM Coastguard rescue centres Clyde, Oban and Belfast with Subfacts information, which is broadcast on marine VHF 6 times per day at staggered four-hourly intervals from several aerials. Subsequently consideration has been given to the most appropriate way of continuing to promulgate this information to fishermen.

Infectious Waste (Imports)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of all shipments of infectious clinical waste for disposal from Germany to the United Kingdom in the last 12 months, including tonnage, port of entry, packaging, labelling and temperature-controlled conditions.

Mr. Norris: The details of individual shipments of clinical waste are not normally recorded by the Department. In these instances, permission has been given for the importation of certain goods subject to stringent conditions.

The packages are of a type designed and tested to comply with standards laid down by the United Nations Economic and Social Council's Committee of Experts' Recommendations on the Transport of Dangerous Goods and those of the German Federal Institute for Material Research and Material Tests. Packages are labelled and marked "WASTE, INFECTIOUS SUBSTANCES AFFECTING HUMANS" UN 2814, Class 6.2 and carried in refrigerated containers where the temperature is kept below 5 deg. C. We have been informed that about 400 tonnes have been shipped through Harwich during the last 12 months.

Baggage Reconciliation

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has had with the airlines on baggage reconciliation.

Mr. Norris: The Department has had considerable discussion and consultation with the airlines and their representative bodies over a number of years.

Manchester Airport

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy on the ownership of Manchester airport.

Mr. Norris: It is for the local authorities who own the airport to decide, taking into account the needs of those who live in the area and the customers who use the airport. Manchester airport has developed over the last decade into one of the major world airports. We understand the airport company has plans for substantial further development, including in particular a second runway and the second phase of the new terminal. In view of our desire to see more private sector participation in airport provision, supplementary credit approvals will not be granted for such development work. So if the owners wish to see the airport continue to develop, they will need to use their own resources or look to the private sector to fund major expansion, either through a joint venture or outright sale.

Harrogate Western Bypass

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will order an official environmental impact assessment of the chosen route for the western bypass for Harrogate adopted by the North Yorkshire county council.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I understand that an environmental statement will accompany a planning application for the Harrogate western bypass to the county planning authority. In the event that no statement is provided, reserve powers are available to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to require its preparation. A decision on the use of such powers would be taken at the time.

Loan Capital

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the extent to which local authorities plan to obtain capital receipts from the sale of share or loan capital in airport companies between 13 November and 31 December 1993.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend has made no estimates. All capital receipts by local authorities from the disposal of share or loan capital in public airport companies realised during the period referred to will be usable to finance expenditure for capital purposes.

West Coast Main Line

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the estimated cost of the British Rail proposals of essential investment in the west coast main line over the next three years.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that British Rail intends to commence work soon on renewing infrastructure on the west coast main line. The timing of this work, and therefore the cost over the next three years, will be decided in the spring when British Rail have completed its next corporate plan.

Compulsory Purchase

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what account he takes of householders' mortgage debts in the compulsory purchase of property required for road schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Mortgage debts are not a factor. Compensation is assessed at full market value and may be used to release an outstanding mortgage debt. My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning is actively reviewing what action might be necessary in the event of compensation for properties acquired by compulsory purchase orders falling short of the mortgage debt. We have no evidence of such cases at present.

Coach Accidents

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the statistics for (a) serious injuries and (b) minor injuries incurred in accidents involving coaches in the last 10 years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The attached table shows the number of people killed, seriously injured and slightly injured in road accidents involving buses and coaches in Great Britain from 1982 to 1991.

Casualties in accidents involving bus and coaches, by severity: Great Britain 1982-1991

				Casualties
	Killed	Seriously injured	Slightly injured	Total
1982	279	2,508	13,803	16,590
1983	263	2,376	13,669	16,308
1984	245	2,263	13,867	16,375

	Killed	Seriously injured	Slightly injured	Total
1985	211	2,397	13,666	16,274
1986	227	2,204	13,234	15,665
1987	199	2,179	13,040	15,418
1988	188	2,214	13,321	15,723
1989	223	2,088	14,467	16,778
1990	225	2,000	14,232	16,457
1991	189	1,771	12,637	14,597

M6

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the estimated cost of the widening of the M6 motorway from junctions 11 to 20.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The estimated works cost is £570 million.

Electric-powered Cars

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his policy towards the Coventry city council plans to introduce a public network of electric-powered cars.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 17 December 1992]: I welcome Coventry city council's efforts to seek involvement in a trial of a limited rental fleet of electric cars under the collaborative European THERMIE programme.

The results of such trials should help inform customers, who ultimately determine the success of any vehicle development, and give useful data to those with specific technical, research and commercial interests.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Market Testing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will undertake a review of market testing in the light of the European Court of Justice rulings on the validity of Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 on public sector activities which have been or could be contracted out.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. The general position in relation to the services which are being market tested by central Government Departments and agencies is unaffected by recent decisions of the European Court of Justice—it remains the case that in some cases the regulations will apply if the service is subsequently supplied by an outside contractor; in others they will not.

Departmental Property

Mr. Straw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list (a) the total number of residential properties owned by his Department, (b) the number of such properties which are empty and (c), (b) as a percentage of (a).

Mr. Jackson: The Office of Public Service and Science does not own any residential properties.

AIDS

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the present and past members of the AIDS-directed programme committee.

Mr. Robert Jackson: The present members of the Medical Research Council AIDS-directed programme steering committee are:

Dr. G. C. Schild (Chairman)
Dr. J. Karn
Professor J. Neil
Dr. D. Tyrell FRS
Professor A. J. McMichael
Professor J. Almond
Professor G. Dodson
Dr. J. Darbyshire
Professor A. C. Minson
Professor A. Rickinson

There are three vacant positions on the Committee at present in the process of being filled.

Past members of the Committee are:

Professor T. Blundell
Dr. M. Crumpton
Dr. R. Dwek
Professor W. Jarrett
Professor K. Murray
Dr. M. Perutz
Dr. D. A. Rees
Professor C. B. Reese
Dr. P. Greenaway
Dr. J. Skehel
Professor A. Williams

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the total spending on the Medical Research Council AIDS-directed programme; to which research projects grants have been made under this programme; what is the amount of each grant awarded; and who are the heads of the research groups for each project funded by this programme.

Mr. Robert Jackson: Between 1987-88 (when the programme began) and 1991-92, the Medical Research Council has spent £27·8 million on its AIDS-directed programme.

A list of research project grants made under this programme, the amount of each grant awarded and the heads of the research groups for the projects funded by this programme has been placed in the Library.

Research Vessels

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what consultations he has had with the Natural Environmental Research Council on (a) the deficit in the budget of the Institute of Oceanographic Sciences, (b) the laying up of research vessels and (c) the proposed relocation of the research vessels service from Barry to Southampton; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert Jackson: None. These are matters for the Natural Environment Research Council.

Civil Service

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will provide, by outlet, a breakdown of the amount spent on recruitment advertising for the civil service in the ethnic minority media in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not centrally held. The majority of civil service recruitment is undertaken by individual departments and agencies who are responsible for selecting their own advertising media.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the guidelines governing the appointment of full-time civil servants to be non-executive directors of private companies; how many full-time civil servants are non-executive directors of private companies; what studies he has undertaken into potential conflicts of interests involving such appointments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: One of the principles of conduct which binds the civil service, set out in the personnel management handbook, is that civil servants must not take part in activities which might conflict with the interests of their Departments; or impair their usefulness as public servants; or be inconsistent with their position as public servants. It is for the Departments and individuals concerned to ensure that these requirements are met in each case.

In addition, my Department is publishing this month a new guidance note on the appointment of civil servants as non-executive directors to supplement the rules and procedures followed in departments. I will arrange for copies to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses. The Government continue to support and encourage this and other forms of interchange between the civil service and outside organisations. Approximately 65 full-time civil servants are currently non-executive directors of private companies.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

English Tourist Board

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the reasons underlying the decision to reduce the English tourist board's grant for the coming financial year.

Mr. Key: I refer to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn, Hatfield (Mr. Evans) on 13 November 1992, Official Report, columns 997-98. I believe that the case is now much less strong for central Government funding of the promotion of tourism in England. The English tourist board (ETB) has done a great deal over the years to raise standards, to improve access to information, and to show the industry how their products can be developed and marketed. As the industry matures, and the regional tourist boards develop, it is appropriate for other bodies to carry on many of the ETB's central activities. That is reflected in the allocations of Exchequer grants for tourism over the next three years.

However, I also believe that central Government support for the regional tourist boards should continue. I believe that this support should be targeted much more closely than at present on areas of need where tourism might be an instrument of economic regeneration. The English tourist board is currently working on proposals for support to the regional tourist boards.

Works of Art

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) pursuant to his answer, 30 November 1992, Official Report, column 43, what definition is used of works of art;

(2) pursuant to his answer, 30 November 1992, Official Report, column 43, when the computerised inventory of the works of art in the occupied royal palaces was begun; and when it is expected that the exercise will be completed;

(3) if he will publish an inventory of the contents of the occupied royal palaces, excluding works of art, which are public property and not owned by the sovereign.

Mr. Brooke: Work on preparing a computerised inventory of the royal collection, which is being carried out by the royal collection department of the royal household, began in early 1991, and it is expected that the exercise will be completed in 1997. This is a major undertaking, involving the individual inspection, numbering and recording of every object. Information about the contents of the royal palaces, other than works of art, is not available.

The inventory will cover pictures, drawings, books, furniture, sculpture, metalwork, textiles and ceramics.

Sports Fields

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what information he has in regard to the number and areas of public sports fields that have been sold to the construction of buildings over the past two years.

Mr. Key: No such information is held centrally. That is why the Great Britain Sports Council's grant in aid settlement from the Government for 1991-92 included £500,000 to enable the establishment of a register of recreational land, in conjunction with the National Playing Fields Association, and Central Council for Physical Recreation. We will then, for the first time, know the number and size of playing fields in England. The register should be up and running by June 1993.

My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Wales will be considering with the Welsh Sports Council whether the register of recreational land should be extended to Wales.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Benefits

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing the number and proportion of people who were (a) claiming and (b) receiving supplementary benefit or income support in 1979 and 1991 in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie, who replied to the hon. Member on 23 December 1992.

Letter from Mr. Wylie, to Mr. Graham Allen, dated 23 December 1992:

As I am responsible for social security operational matters your recent Parliamentary Question on the number and proportion of people who were claiming and receiving Supplementary Benefit or Income Support in 1979 and 1991 has been passed to me for reply.

I regret that there are no statistics available on the number and proportion of people who were claiming Supplementary Benefit or Income Support as the data held does not distinguish new claims from repeat claims. I hope however that the following information will be helpful.

Year	Number of new and repeat claims for supplementary benefit or income support	Number of customers receiving supplementary benefit or income support	Proportion of population receiving supplementary benefit or income support Percentage
1979	42,098	115,359	[1]10·75
1991	146,563	201,265	17·00

[1] Estimated figures can only be given for 1979 as there was no census held that year.

A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report and copies will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing the number and proportion of children who were in families receiving supplementary benefit or income support in 1979 and 1991 in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie. However, I understand that the information is not available in the form requested.

Waterways

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to develop (a) the Newry canal and (b) other waterways in Northern Ireland for recreational and tourist use; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The future development of the Newry canal for tourism and leisure use will be considered upon completion of the feasibility study which I understand is to be commissioned shortly by the four councils through whose area the canal flows. The Department of Agriculture, as the drainage authority for Northern Ireland, and the Northern Ireland tourist board will contribute to the cost of the study. The tourist board is prepared to consider reasoned proposals for the tourism and leisure development of Northern Ireland's heritage waterways where the investment of public funds will yield commensurate benefit to the local economy without damage to the environment.

Ferry Service (Ballycastle)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made towards provision of roll-on, roll-off facilities at Ballycastle; and if it will make it his Department's policy to introduce ferry services between Ballycastle and Scotland.

Mr. Atkins: Ballycastle harbour is owned by Moyle district council. Subject to the availability of a Government grant the council hopes to undertake improvements at both Ballycastle and Rathlin harbours to enable the upgrading of the Rathlin island ferry service. The council's plans include the construction of a roll-on/roll-off ramp at Ballycastle. It has not been possible to allocate the necessary resources to these proposals within the current public expenditure round.

It is the Government's view that the introduction of ferry services between Ballycastle and Scotland is a matter for the commercial judgment of ferry operators.

Lone Parents

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in how many cases, where income support is being paid to a single mother, the absent parent is paying maintenance.

Mr. Hanley: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie, who replied to the hon. Member on 5 January 1993.

Letter from Mr. Wylie to Mr. Seamus Mallon, dated 5 January 1993:

As I am responsible for Social Security operational matters your recent Parliamentary Question on the number of cases where income support is being paid to a single mother and the absent parent is paying maintenance, has been passed to me for reply.

The most recent information available is set out below.

Year	Court Order paid direct to single parent	Voluntary Payment paid direct to single parent	Court Order diverted to Department	Voluntary Payment diverted to Department	Total
1990	3,640	660	580	80	4,960

These figures include a small number of single fathers for whom there is no separate data available.

I hope you find this information helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report and copies will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many single parents are in receipt of income support; and how many of these are (a) male and (b) female.

Mr. Hanley: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie, who replied to the hon. Member on 5 January 1993.

Letter from Mr. Wylie to Mr. Seamus Mallon, dated 5 January 1993:

As I am responsible for Social Security operational matters your recent Parliamentary Question on the number of single parents in receipt of Income Support and how many of these are (a) male and (b) female has been passed to me for reply.

The most recent information available is set out below.

Year	Total number of one parent families	Total fatherless families[1] (female claimants)	Total male claimants[2]
1990	27,060	26,020	1,040

Notes:

[1] the total number of female single parents includes 860 widows and 160 partners of prisoners,
and

[2] the total number of male single parents includes those who are widowed or divorced, for which there are no separate statistics.

I hope you find this information helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report and copies will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to ensure that single parents, in receipt of state benefit, will not be penalised either because the absent parent fails to pay maintenance, or because the absent parent cannot be identified because of a perceived threat to the child or its mother.

Mr. Hanley: It already is Government policy to ensure that whenever the child support scheme is introduced in April 1993, parents with care who are in receipt of benefit and who have co-operated with the Child Support Agency in providing information about the absent parent, will not be penalised as a result of the absent parent failing to pay maintenance.

Similarly it is already Government policy to ensure that parents with care in receipt of income support, family credit or disability working allowance are not penalised for refusing to name the father of the child if they can show to the satisfaction of the Child Support Agency that to do so would carry the risk of causing harm or undue distress to the parent with care or to the child.

Electricity

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what statutory right of access for third parties there will be to the proposed Scotland-Northern Ireland electricity interconnector.

Mr. Atkins: During the first 15 years the capacity of the interconnector is reserved to NIE plc. Thereafter, subject to the interconnector having spare capacity and the regulator establishing a suitable trading system, direct trade across the interconnector will be possible.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what capacity in megawatts is presently proposed for the Scotland-Northern Ireland electricity interconnector; and to what extent this proposed capacity is sufficient to allow third party access.

Mr. Atkins: The capacity of the proposed interconnector is 250 megawatts. All the available capacity is reserved to NIE plc during the first 15 years. Thereafter, subject to the regulator establishing a suitable trading system, generators, NIE and its supply competitors will be able to trade across the interconnector up to its maximum capacity.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the agreement between Northern Ireland Electricity and Scottish Power on the proposed Scotland-Northern Ireland electricity interconnector constitutes a formal contract.

Mr. Atkins: NIE and Scottish Power have entered into legally binding heads of agreement and formal contracts are being drawn up.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what calculation his Department has made of the differential in electricity prices for large industrial users in Northern Ireland as opposed to the rest of the United Kingdom following (a) the introduction of the new bulk supply tariff, (b) the application of the transitional arrangements to the BST and (c) the expiry of these arrangements in 1994-95.

Mr. Atkins: Terms to supply consumers using more than 1MW of electricity are contained in individual commercially confidential contracts. It is not, therefore, possible for the Department to make such comparisons.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Birmingham Airport

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to increase the numbers of customs officers at Birmingham airport engaged in anti-smuggling activities in 1993; and what plans he has to respond to the proposed introduction of flights from the United States of America.

Sir John Cope: The Birmingham collection executive unit, as part of its ongoing analysis of staffing needs, has increased from 1 January 1993 the anti-smuggling staff based at Birmingham international airport. This is to take into account the perceived increase in risks in relation to the new American traffic.

Discussions are also taking place with both the airport authority and the major operator of transatlantic flights for provision by Customs of the appropriate number of staff for duties other than anti-smuggling.

Eurofed

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer at what stage are negotiations on the location of the Eurofed; when a final decision is to be made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: No decision has been taken on the location of the European Monetary Institute or the European Central Bank and there is no firm timetable for this decision.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what efforts he has made to support the case for locating all or part of the proposed Eurofed, or the EMI which precedes it, in Edinburgh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: I have consistently drawn the attention of my EC colleagues to the advantages for the Community in establishing the new monetary institutions in the United Kingdom.

Alcohol Tax

Sir David Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to move towards a uniform method of drinks taxation, and to eliminate the higher rates of duty on Scotch whisky and other United Kingdom spirits.

Mr. Lamont: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Mr. Streeter) on 17 December 1992, Official Report, col. 377.

Bonus Payments

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce proposals for higher rate tax bands for bonus payments in excess of £6 million per year.

Mr. Dorrell: No.

Family Incomes

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table which sets out for a two-child family on (a) half average earnings, (b) three quarters average earnings, (c) average earnings, (d) one and a half average earnings, (e) twice average earnings, (f) five times average earnings and (g) 10 times average earnings the increase in net income to be derived from (i) a 1p cut in the standard rate of income tax in the 1993-94 financial year, (ii) an increase in personal allowances, over and above indexation, which incurred the same cost as a 1p cut in the standard rate of income tax and (iii) an increase in child benefit which incurred the same cost as a 1p cut in standard rate income tax, both assuming and not assuming similar increases in the income support and family credit children's rates separately.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate, on the same basis as the ready reckoner published in the autumn statement, what is the effect on a one-earner, two-child family of spending in 1993-94 the same sum on (a) a 1p cut in the basic rate of income tax, (b) raising income tax thresholds above their indexed levels, (c) raising child benefits assuming (i) no change in income support and family credit rates and (ii) corresponding changes in income support and family credit rates.

Mr. Dorrell: The effects of the various changes to income tax and child benefit on a married man with two children are shown in the table. Each of the changes would cost £1·5 billion a year, that is the cost in a full year of a 1p cut in the basic rate of income tax. Estimates are based on projections of the 1990-91 survey of personal incomes.

Increase in income after tax[1] (£ per week) compared with indexation[2] in 1993-94 for a married man[3] with two children

	Multiple of average earnings[4]
	½	¾	1	1½	2	5	10
Increase derived from
(i) 1p cut in basic rate	0·39	1·29	2·20	4·02	4·31	4·31	4·31
(ii) 10·25 per cent. increase in personal allowances	1·16	1·16	1·16	1·16	1·84	1·84	1·84
(iii) increase in child benefit
(a) £3·35 per week per child[5]	6·70	6·70	6·70	6·70	6·70	6·70	6·70
(b) £2·15 per week per child[6]	4·30	4·30	4·30	4·30	4·30	4·30	4·30

Notes:
[1] Disregarding any change to entitlement to social security income—related benefits except in item (iii)b.
[2] Calculations based on the standard assumption that 1992-93 allowances' lower rate band and the basic rate limit have been indexed by 3·25 per cent. for 1993-94.
[3] Assumed to have no tax reliefs and allowances other than the personal allowance and the married couple's allowance.
[4] Average earnings assumed to be £363·3 per week.
[5] Assuming no change in income support and family credit children's rates.
[6] Assuming corresponding changes in income support and family credit children's rates.

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide figures for 1979 and 1989 showing, on an equivalent income basis, the proportion of households consisting of (a) one adult with children, (b) two adults with children, (c) non-retired without children and (d) retired in each quintile of (a) original income and (b) post-tax income, as defined in the annual articles in Economic Trends on the effects of taxes and benefits.

Mr. Nelson: The information is not available in the precise form requested because only one method of ranking is used to produce the annual article in Economic Trends and this uses equivalised disposal income. The data for 1979 were first published on an unequivalised basis and have been reworked on an equivalised basis. The figures are given in the table:

Percentage of household types within each quintile group of eqivalised disposable income, 1979 and 1989

Household type	Quintile groups of equivalised disposable income
	Botto m	2nd	3rd	4th	Top	All house holds
1979
1 adult with children	6	3	2	2	1	3
2 adults with children	16	32	43	33	18	28
Non-retired without children	11	23	33	51	73	38

1989
1 adult with children	10	6	3	1	1	4
2 adults with children	15	20	33	29	22	24
Non-retired without children	19	24	40	55	67	41

3 or more adults with children	3	6	7	6	3	5
	100	100	100	100	100	100

The figures in the table are rounded and may not add up to 100.
Source: Central Statistical Office, based on Family Expenditure Survey.

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) working families with children and (b) childless people in work had incomes below the tax threshold at the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Dorrell: There are an estimated 450,000 working families with children and 1·1 million childless people at work who have incomes below the income tax threshold and are therefore not liable to income tax in 1992-93. For this purpose, income is calculated as total income for income tax purposes, excluding any non-taxable social security benefits, less tax reliefs and is compared witht he appropriate levels of personal tax allowances. The estimates are based on information projected from the 1990 and 1991 family expenditure surveys and are therefore provisional.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Straw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has made of the effect on levels of employment and prices and on the balance of payments of (a) an additional £2 billion of local authority revenue expenditure financed by (i) local taxation and (ii) additional revenue support grant and (b) an additional £2 billion of local authority capital expenditure financed by (1) the use of set aside capital receipts and (2) borrowing.

Mr. Portillo: The effects on levels of employment, prices and on the balance of payments of the measures mentioned would depend on a number of assumptions about economic behaviour at both local and national level, as well as the precise details of these measures.

EC Spending

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of spending by the EC, expressed in pounds sterling in 1992; and what percentage increase in this spending is envisaged by 1999 following the Edinburgh Council of 11-12 December.

Sir John Cope: Following the adoption of the third supplementary and amending budget, the budget of the European Communities for 1992 amounts to 63,907 million ecu in commitment appropriations, or £52 billion, at the exchange rate prevailing on 30 November 1992 (£1 = ECU 1·2290) and 61,097 million ecu in payment appropriations, or £49·7 billion. The Edinburgh European Council agreed a financial perspective for the next seven years which provides ceilings for spending in 1999 of 84,089 million ecu, £68·4 billion, for commitment appropriation and 80,114 million ecu, £65·2 billion, for payment appropriations—all in 1992 prices. These represent increases of 31·6 per cent. and 31·1 per cent. respectively over spending in 1992.

However, the 1999 figures are ceilings for the budget, not targets for spending levels. Actual spending in 1999 will be set in the budgetary procedure for that year and will reflect the rate of economic growth achieved in the next seven years, as well as other factors such as enlargement of the Community. Spending is constrained by the legally binding ceiling on own resources for payment appropriations, which will be 1·27 per cent. of Community GNP in 1999.

Personal Taxation

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much in real terms the average annual tax payments of a man with no allowances and reliefs other than the married couple's allowance earning (a) £5,000, (b) £10,000, (c) £15,000 and (d) £20,000 have changed since 1978-79.

Mr. Dorrell: Income tax for a married man as a percentage of gross income is as follows:

Income in 1992-93 £	Income tax[1] 1992-93 per cent.	1978-79[2] per cent.
5,000	0	0
10,000	11·1	11·9
15,000	15·7	18·9
20,000	18·0	22·4

[1] Assuming that the only allowances and reliefs available are the married man's allowance in 1978-79 and the personal allowance plus the married couple's allowance in 1992-93. In each case the wife is assumed to have no income.
[2] Calculations for 1978-79 are based on the income tax regime for that year applied to levels of income adjusted from the 1992-93 figures in line with the change in average male earnings.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements are to be made for the publication of statistics of trade with the European Community in 1993.

Mr. Nelson: With the completion of the single market on 1 January, most border formalities for goods traded with other member states are abolished. As the associated documentation forms the source of the current visible trade statistics, normal publication of figures for trade with the European Community will be suspended while a new system for the collection of the statistics, Intrastat, becomes established. The monthly press notice published on 28 January, showing December's trade figures, will be the last in the present form. Details of our trade with non-EC countries will continue to be published monthly.

Aggregate figures for whole world trade, including that with the European Community, for the first quarter 1993 balance of payments and GDP will be published in mid-June 1993. Shortly thereafter it is planned to resume the publication of the monthly "Balance of Payments—Current Account" press notices with aggregate figures for intra-Community trade.

The initial pattern of publication of detailed figures for visible trade with the European Community will be a quarterly volume containing monthly details at eight-digit commodity code level, which should be available shortly after the resumption of the monthly press notices. The monthly information will also be available from Customs and Excise-approved marketing agents.

This initial delay in the publication of figures is planned to be reduced as the year progresses.

Unit Trust Holdings

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed to the tax rules which apply to unit trust holdings owned by life assurance companies.

Mr. Dorrell: On 30 December 1992 I announced changes to the new charge to tax on life assurance companies brought in by the Finance Act 1990. The charge arises on the deemed disposal of their holdings in authorised unit trusts and certain offshore funds.

For most companies the charge is due to come into effect for accounting periods beginning on 1 January 1992. We propose to defer the charge for one year so that it relates first to accounting periods beginning on or after 1 January 1993.

The existing measures can, however, produce a higher tax charge than was intended; and we propose to bring forward amending legislation in the 1993 Finance Bill to counter this effect. There will also be amendments to the transitional provisions.

The Inland Revenue press release of 30 December 1992 containing the text of my announcement, and further details of the proposals, has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Employee Share Schemes

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how soon he expects to announce details of the introduction and operation of approved employee share schemes up to the end of March 1992.

Mr. Dorrell: Estimated figures for the year ended March 1992 will be issued shortly in an Inland Revenue press release.

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Inland Revenue next intends to revise and update its booklets and leaflets on approved employee share schemes to include in particular reference to buy one get one free matching share offers and the single company PEPs facilities.

Mr. Dorrell: The Inland Revenue is planning to issue revised versions of these booklets and leaflets, reflecting recent changes in legislation, in the course of this year.

Matrix Churchill

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review the actions of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in respect of its dealings with Matrix Churchill to assess whether compensation should be paid to the ex-employees of Matrix Churchill.

Sir John Cope: The Government have already established an independent inquiry under Lord Justice Scott with broad terms of reference which will enable Her Majesty's Customs and Excise actions in the Matrix Churchill case to be fully examined. It would be inappropriate for me to undertake a separate review.

As regards the issue of compensation, I would draw the hon. Member's attention to the advice of my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General to the House on 10 November 1992, Official Report, c. 746-47, that if there is a prosecution which subsequently fails or is withdrawn for any particular reason, representations can be made, but is has never been the policy for there to be formal compensation in these circumstances.

Departmental Property

Mr. Straw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list (a) the total number of residential properties owned by his Departments, (b) the number of such properties which are empty and (c), (b) as a percentage of (a).

Sir John Cope: The only residential properties owned by the Chancellor's Departments are two owned by Customs and Excise. Both are fully occupied.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the implications for staffing levels and confidentiality of Inland Revenue services being offered to private tender; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We have received a number of representations about the market testing of services in the Inland Revenue. Any implications for staffing levels will depend on the outcome of particular market tests; we believe that, if work is contracted out, there are sufficient safeguards to ensure that the privacy of information about taxpayers will continue to be properly protected.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many claims have been submitted in the former deposits of BCCI under the provisions of the Deposit Protection Board; how much has so far been paid to them; and how much is to be paid.

Mr. Nelson: As at 7 January 1993 some 16,700 claims had been lodged with the Deposit Protection Board. Of these the claims so far processed have given rise to compensation payments totalling £60·5 million. The size of the eventual payment to these claimants will depend on the scale and nature of claims still to be processed.

Redundancy

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, what guidelines he has established for the use of non-disclosure agreements as part of redundancy and early retirement settlements in the public service; if he will set up a study into how many former officials of non-departmental public bodies have signed such agreements in such circumstances; and what premium was paid to them for signing such agreements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Employees generally have an implied duty not to misuse confidential information which they have obtained in the course of their employment. In most situations, this would restrict disclosure of confidential information without proper authority. The duty continues to apply even after they have left.

There are no central guidelines or instructions which require former employees of non-departmental public bodies not to disclose the terms of their redundancy or early retirement settlements. My right hon. Friend has no plans to set up a study of the kind suggested. I should not expect redundancy or early retirement arrangements to include an agreement restricting disclosure of the terms of any financial settlement. Details of such settlements will in any event be available to the Comptroller and Auditor General in the course of any audit or inspection he undertakes of a body's records.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Financial Management

35. Mr. Steen: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, what developments have taken place in financial management and scrutiny of House expenditure in the current financial year.

Mr. Beith: As well as the establishment of the domestic committees and the Finance and Services Committee, good progress has been made in improving financial management systems in House Departments. These include the allocation of departmental budgets and delegation of authority to incur expenditure and approve payments. Further improvements are planned by the Director of Finance and Administration.

Contracting Out

Mr. David Evans: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will make a statement on policy towards contracting out of House of Commons services.

Mr. Beith: Services are contracted out where this can meet the requirements of the House and provide benefits in quality, efficiency and value for money.

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chairman of the Public Accounts Commission if he will make a statement on the resources available to the National Audit Office to undertake effective auditing of all projected next steps agencies.

Sir Peter Hordern: The Comptroller and Auditor General is the statutory auditor of all the agencies. The National Audit Office's corporate plan for 1993-94 to 1997-98, considered and approved by the commission in July 1992, includes resources for the audit of existing agencies and those expected to be established over the next five years.

Domestic Committees (Oral Questions)

42. Mr. Hain: To ask the Lord President of the Council what plans he has to allow time for answering of oral questions by Chairmen of the domestic Committees.

Mr. Newton: None. Oral questions are already answered on behalf of the House of Commons Commission, and now that the Finance and Services Committee has been nominated, arrangements will be made for its Chairman also to answer oral questions as appropriate. For the other domestic committees, there are no plans to go beyond the existing provision for their Chairmen to answer written questions.

PRIME MINISTER

Scottish Constitution

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the people whom he has consulted in connection with his stocktaking exercise about Scotland's constitutional position.

The Prime Minister: I have had frequent opportunities to hear views from people of all political persuasions and from many backgrounds, including the church, the law, business, academic life, the arts and the media.

India

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister which cities he intends to visit on his next visit to India.

The Prime Minister: I shall visit Delhi as a guest of the Indian Government on republic day on 26 January. I shall also visit Bombay.

UN Population Conference

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Prime Minister (1) in which country the United Nations conference on world population will be held; and on what dates;

(2) what proposals the Government have to involve relevant non-governmental organisations in preparation for the 1994 United Nations conference on world population;

(3) what proposals the Government have to enable (a) relevant non-governmental organisations and (b) hon. Members to attend the 1994 United Nations conference on world population;

(4) which Government Department is to be responsible for the 1994 United Nations population conference.

The Prime Minister: The international conference on population and development will take place in Cairo from 5 to 13 September 1994. A decision will be taken shortly on which Government Department will also take prime responsibility for United Kingdom preparations for the conference. The Government will make proposals shortly for how hon. Members and relevant non-governmental organisations might be involved in the preparations.

Committee of Permanent Representatives

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has to apply the decision to improve transparency in the activities of the European Council to the availability to Parliament of (a) the minutes of COREPER and (b) proposals prepared by COREPER for the Council prior to their consideration by the Council.

The Prime Minister: There are no such plans.

EC Monetary Reserve

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister why the European Council in Edinburgh concluded that the EC's monetary reserve should be halved between 1994 and 1995; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The decision was taken in the light of the recent reform of the CAP, which involves a shift away from price support towards direct payments to producers. That should make CAP expenditure progressively less susceptible to the impact of fluctuations in the dollar/ecu exchange rate.

EC Agriculture Spending

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister why the European Council concluded on 11-12 December that agriculture spending by the EC would fall between 1993 and 1994; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The figures to which my hon. Friend refers are those for the agricultural guidelines in constant 1992 prices. The guideline is calculated in real terms by up-rating the 1988 baseline figure by 74 per cent. of the estimated growth in real Community gross national product (GNP) between 1988 and the year in question. This calculation takes place when the Commission submits its preliminary draft budget. For 1993, therefore, the guideline was calculated in May 1992. Subsequently, the estimate of Community GNP was revised downwards. Although the decision was too late to affect the 1993 figure it will be reflected in the guideline for 1994 and thereafter. The estimate for the guideline for 1994 to 1999, used by the European Council in its future financing plans, takes account of this latest information.

European Environmental Agency

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements were agreed at the Edinburgh summit for the siting of the European Environmental Agency.

The Prime Minister: It was agreed at the European Council that the siting of the European Environmental Agency will be decided by common agreement between member states at a forthcoming European Council, giving appropriate priority to member states who do not at present provide the sites for Community institutions.

Edinburgh Summit

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if section A (Citizenship) on page 5 B of part B of the "Conclusions of the Presidency" in Edinburgh was designed by the Council to apply to all member states.

The Prime Minister: The section referred to by the hon. Member was designed to meet Danish concerns but it represents an interpretation of the provisions of the Maastricht treaty relating to citizenship of the union which was agreed by all member states and is true for all of them.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what procedures he proposes for ratification of the intergovernmental agreement reached at Edinburgh on Danish qualifications to the Maastricht treaty.

The Prime Minister: The decision does not require ratification.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on how Her Majesty's Government propose to implement the decision set out at paragraph 7 of the Edinburgh declaration on the conclusions of the United Kingdom presidency of the European Council to increase public investment in decision-making.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom will work closely with other members of the Council, the Commission and Parliament to ensure that the measures on transparency agreed in Edinburgh are put into practice as soon as possible.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister why the European Council in Edinburgh concluded that there should be no increase in the provision of loan guarantees between 1993 and 1999; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Edinburgh European Council endorsed the conclusions of the ECOFIN Council in October that the Community's growing international responsibilities had led to an increase in the level and scope of lending to non-member states backed by guarantees on the EC budget, and that considerations of prudent budgetary management and financial discipline called for the establishment of a new financial framework, including an appropriate form of provisioning. The European Council accordingly agreed that a guarantee fund should be established, with a target size of 10 per cent. of the Community's outstanding liabilities arising from external loans and guarantees; and that this should be financed by a reserve in the financial perspective not exceeding 300 million ECU in each year from 1993 to 1999 (in 1992 prices), from which payments would be made into the fund in proportion to the value of new loans agreed. This framework will be sufficient to allow continuing significant levels of new lending to non-member states guaranteed on the EC budget.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister if he will give the names of the persons signing their names as plenipotentiary of each relevant state to the intergovernmental decision relating to Denmark at the European Council meeting in Edinburgh.

The Prime Minister: The decision relating to Denmark was not signed. This does not affect its character as an agreement binding in international law between the parties to the treaty on European union on how certain of its provisions are to be interpreted and applied.

Princess of Wales

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Prime Minister what advice he received from sources outside the Government concerning the constitutional position of the accession to the throne of the Princess of Wales, before making his statement to the House of 9 December.

The Prime Minister: The advice which I took on this matter is confidential.

Gambling

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will describe the process by which concerned people can contribute to and respond to Government ideas on maintaining, abolishing or changing the restrictions on stimulation of gaming or gambling.

The Prime Minister: The processes are the same as those for any other aspect of Government policy. As necessary, the Government issue consultation documents on particular aspects of the gambling controls. In addition, interested parties may at any time make their views known direct to Government or via Members of Parliament.

Iraq (Equipment)

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Prime Minister what information he has on the comparative sales of machine tools to Iraq from (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the United States of America, (c) France, (d) Italy and (e) COMECON countries in 1987, 1988 and 1989.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 24 November 1992]: The information requested for the first four countries is set out in the following table:

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who will be responsible for paying compensation as a result of the late delivery to St. Helena of a new power generator.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A 1 MW diesel generator was provided last year for the use of St. Helena's public works and services department at a cost of £562,000 to aid funds. It was supplied by Mirrlees Blackstone Ltd., shipped on schedule abord the RMS St. Helena arriving on 4 May 1992, and taken over by the public works and services department on 21 July 1992 following installation and commissioning tests. No delay in delivery occurred and the question of compensation does not arise.

Southern Africa

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment his Department has made of the impact of the current and forecast rains on the prospects for the drought-affected areas of southern Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have been asked to reply.

Initial reports of the rains are encouraging for most parts of the region, but good rains over the next two months are critical. We shall continue to monitor the situation closely with the relevant international organisations and NGOs; and are ready to assist, particularly in areas where the rains have failed or where for other reasons people have been unable to plant.

Timber

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to ensure that timber imported into the United Kingdom has not been logged from tribal people's land without their free and informed consent.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Except as provided for under the convention on international trade in endangered species, the United Kingdom does not restrict timber imports and has no plans to do so. Questions of land and forest ownership rights are primarily the responsibility of the Governments of the countries where the forest lie. We are prepared to consider requests from developing countries for aid in forest resource conservation and management.

Malagasy Republic

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress the Minister for Overseas Development has made in sourcing the most appropriate items of equipment, and identifying suitable people to fill the supporting personnel requirements, to implement the Food and Agriculture Organisation consultant's recommendations on locusts in the Malagasy Republic.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Sources for the provision of equipment have been identified. The specification and frequency acceptability of the telecommunications equipment is still being cleared with the Food and Agriculture Organisation co-ordinator and the Madagascan authorities. As soon as these matters are formally cleared procurement of all the equipment will be undertaken and the associated training input put in hand.

Debtor Countries

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total amount of debt interest payments made to the United Kingdom in the past 10 years by each of the severely indebted countries, according to the UN definition; and how much was received by each of them in aid over the same period.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development will write to the hon. Member.

Forests

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how he plans to address the question of tribal people's ownership of their land and resources in the United Kingdom's national plan for forests.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Questions of the ownership of land and resources by tribal peoples are primarily the responsibility of the Governments of the countries in which they live. The United Kingdom national plan for forests will concentrate on activities within this country.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Argentina (Fisheries)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it the policy of Her Majesty's Government to oppose the proposed fishery agreement between the European Community and the Argentine Government unless and until it has agreed to the joint management by Britain and Argentina of stocks of illex squid in the waters of the south west Atlantic.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We support the principle of an EC fisheries agreement with Argentina. We have obtained several improvements to the original proposals and shall discuss them further with Community partners. We have now reached a bilateral interim agreement on fisheries management with the Argentine Government. We shall continue our dialogue with them to achieve adequate conservation measures which protect the economic interests of the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make an estimate of the cost to the Exchequer of contributing to the 28 million ecu financial assistance programme to Argentina under the proposed EC fishery agreement to enable Spanish and Portuguese vessels to fish in Argentinian waters.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

The draft EC/Argentina Fisheries Agreement provides for the granting of 27·5 mecu in technical and scientific assistance to Argentina over a five year period; at the normal rate of United Kingdom contributions to the Budget the cost to the Exchequer would be about £800,000 per annum. Additional sums will be paid to EC vessel owners and their Argentinian partners for joint ventures involving EC vessels fishing in Argentinian waters and the cost would depend upon the number of boats taking up the opportunities. The fishing opportunities available under the draft agreement are not confined to Spain and Portugal but are available to vessel owners throughout the Community.

British Consular Offices

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British consular offices there are in each Latin American country; if he will list their locations; and what was the number of such offices in 1987.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In Latin America there are currently 41 British consular offices, including honorary consular offices. A list follows. In 1987 there were 33 such offices. The increase in the number of consular offices is the result of the extension of the honorary network. Honorary consuls provide assistance and advice to British national at minimal cost.

Kazakhstan

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings he, or his officials, have had with the President of Kazakhstan; and what was discussed.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs met President Nazerbayev of Kazakhstan during his visit to Britain in October 1991 and during his visit to Alma Ata in January 1992. The development of relations between the United Kingdom and Kazakhstan, including the good prospects for trade and other matters, including regional and security matters, were discussed.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current diplomatic link between the United Kingdom and Kazakhstan; and when he expects to appoint a British ambassador to Kazakhstan.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom recognised Kazakhstan on 31 December 1991. Sir Brian Fall, who resides at Moscow, is accredited as Her Majesty's ambassador to the Republic of Kazakhstan and presented his credentials in Alma Ata on 27 October 1992. We have established a small British embassy in Alma Ata, headed by a resident chargé d'affaires.

Cyprus

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress made in implementation of United Nations Security Council resolution 789 of 24 November on Cyprus; and what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on Cyprus.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Inter-communal negotiations chaired by the United Nations Secretary-General will resume in New York in March. Security Council Resolution 789 sets out a series of confidence-building measures. These have been accepted in principle by President Vassiliou of Cyprus, but not yet by the Turkish side.

We continue to play a full part in supporting the efforts of the United Nations to achieve a negotiated settlement to this tragic dispute.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to station British forces in Macedonia in former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom was not asked to contribute forces to this operation and has no plans to do so. United Nations Security Council resolution 795 authorised deployment of troops and observers in Macedonia which has initially involved Canadian troops pending the arrival of Scandinavian forces.

CSCE

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the conference on security and co-operation in Europe Council meeting in Stockholm of 15 and 16 December.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary, represented the United Kingdom at the Council Meeting of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe which took place on 14 and 15 December in Stockholm.

The Stockholm meeting marked a further stage in the transition of the CSCE from an organisation primarily involved with setting standards of behaviour in the fields of human rights and international security to one whose task is also to prevent and if necessary end conflicts.

The Council endorsed the work of the international conference on former Yugoslavia. It agreed a detailed policy intended to help prevent the spread of the fighting into other parts of the former Yugoslavia and to tighten sanctions. The CSCE missions in Kosovo, Sandjak and Vojvodina will be reinforced.

The Council took steps to promote long-term solutions to the conflict in Moldova. The CSCE will continue to press for agreements to be concluded on the early and complete withdrawal of foreign troops from the territories of the Baltic states and will also dispatch a mission to Estonia to address human rights issues between the different communities in Estonia.

Plutonium Shipments

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations from other Governments the United Kingdom Government have received concerning the sea shipment of plutonium from the European Community.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom has received few such representations from other Governments. It is for those Governments to decide whether to make their views public. Any shipments of plutonium from the United Kingdom would meet or exceed the relevant international safety standards.

UNESCO

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the Government now have to rejoin UNESCO; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No decision has yet been taken on a possible resumption of membership.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 16 June 1992, Official Report, columns 490-91, if he has signed a certificate under section 27 of the Data Protection Act 1984 since his answer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has signed no such certificate since my previous answer, Vol. 209, c. 491.

Turkey

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the British Government are making to the Government of Turkey on the recognition of the rights of minorities and people of non-Turkish origin.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are in regular contact with the Turkish Government on the subject of human rights.

The issue was more recently discussed during the visit of the Turkish Prime Minister in November. Mr. Demirel reiterated his Government's commitment to their programme of reforms which aims at improving human rights, including those of members of minorities, and increasing democratisation in the country.

We welcome this commitment on the part of the Turks and look forward to the early implementation of the Government's programme.

Russia

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what complaints have been received from United Kingdom students now studying in Russia; and what action has been taken by the British embassy.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In May 1992, during a routine visit by the student liaison officer of the British embassy in Moscow, British students studying at Voronezh state university complained about poor conditions at their hostel. Representations were duly made to the university in May, and again in September by the student liaison officer.

The student liaison officer next visited the university on 9 December 1992, accompanied by the embassy doctor. The doctor judged that the repairs satisfied the minimum requirements for student accommodation.

Angola

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current situation in Angola.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Nations is continuing its efforts to secure full implementation of the Bicesse peace accords. We strongly support these efforts and deplore the recent violence in Lubango and elsewhere in Angola. Dialogue between the government of Angola and UNITA based on respect for the Bicesse accords and the outcome of the elections of 29 and 30 September is now essential if progress is to be made towards peace and democracy in Angola.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current state of relations between Her Majesty's Government and Angola; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have a good working relationship with the Government of the Republic of Angola.

Somalia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held with the current and incoming United States Administration on the role and objectives of the United States and other troops in Somalia, their command structure, and their date of evacuation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We maintain close contact with United States authorities and the coalition forces on all aspects of the Somali crisis. The United States authorities have made clear that United States troops will not be withdrawn until the objectives of Security Council resolution 794 have been achieved.

EC Summits

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the (a) security costs and (b) total costs of holding the (i) Birmingham and (ii) Edinburgh summits.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The costs for the two European Councils are as follows:

		£ million
(a) Security costs:	Birmingham	0·35
	Edinburgh	2·50
(b) Total costs:	Birmingham	2·65
	Edinburgh	9·30

These figures are approximate as not all bills have been received.

Maastricht Treaty

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each of the subject areas of EC legislation that may fall within the negative assent procedure under the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Under the Maastricht treaty the negative assent procedure applies to the following areas:

Article 49:	Free movement of workers
Article 54(2):	Right of establishment
Article 56(2):	Treatment of foreign nationals
Article 57(1):	Mutual recognition of qualifications
Article 57(2):	Right of establishment
Article 100a(1):	Single market legislation
Article 126(4):	Education incentive measures
Article 128(5):	Culture (with unanimity)
Article 129(4):	Public health
Article 129a(2):	Consumer Protection
Article 129d:	Trans-European networks
Article 130i:	R & D framework programmes (with unanimity)
Article 130s(3):	Environment multiannual action programmes

Thailand

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current position relating to Karyn Smith, convicted of drug smuggling in Thailand.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Karyn Smith is serving a 25-year prison sentence in Klong Prem women's prison, Bangkok. She was sentenced on 20 December 1990. With the support of our embassy in Bangkok, Miss Smith has submitted an appeal for clemency to the King of Thailand.

EC Legislation

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each of the subject areas of EC legislation that are now subject to qualified majority voting.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The articles under which the Council of Ministers may currently act by qualified majority, together with the subject areas to which they apply, are set out in the treaty of Rome as amended by the Single European Act.

Alois Brunner

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the Prime Minister's answer of 10 December, Official Report, column 755, what representations he has received calling for actions by the United Kingdom Government in respect of Alois Brunner.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Apart from the hon. Member's previous question, we have received no recent representations in respect of Alois Brunner. Brunner was recently reported to have died, although we have no confirmation of this.

Visas

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many visas at each British overseas post have been (a) applied for, (b) granted, (c) refused and (d) have a decision pending since visa requirements were introduced upon certain former Yugoslav nationals wishing to visit the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The method of collecting statistics at posts worldwide does not normally allow us to establish the number of applications by nationality. For an initial period, however, we are monitoring the effect of the visa regime on former Yugoslav nationals on the visa sections at Belgrade, Vienna, Zagreb, Budapest, Sofia, Rome, Milan, Florence, Naples, Dusseldorf and Paris. At these posts 1,715 applications were received from former Yugoslav nationals: 1,251 were granted, 238 were refused and 203 have a decision pending.

Spain

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many staff of the British embassy in Madrid monitor the enforcement of EC legislation relating to animal welfare in Spain.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There is one agricultural attaché in the British embassy in Madrid who is responsible for the full range of agricultural matters, including animal welfare.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1992, Official Report, column 357, in how many instances the Governor of St. Helena has refused a request to enable any public officer to be qualified for election to the Legislative Council.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs under what arrangements fishing vessels from member states of the European Community can fish in St. Helena waters; and what reciprocity there is for British fishermen.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are no arrangements for European Community vessels to fish within the fishery limits of St. Helena. There is no agreement with the Community over fishing rights in these waters.

Chile

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his discussions in Santiago on the case of Jonathan Moyle during his official visit to Chile.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs is in Santiago today. He intends to discuss the Moyle case with the Chilean Government.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what requests he has received for co-operation with the inquiry handled by Judge Alejandro Solis in relation to the death of Jonathan Moyle.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have been in regular contact with Judge Solis since the beginning of his inquiry. On 9 December 1992 the judge expressed his gratitude to our embassy in Santiago for the help he had received. On 4 January 1993 Her Majesty's ambassador asked the judge whether there was anything we could do to assist him. Judge Solis expressed his thanks but had no request for further assistance.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who will represent the United Kingdom at the chemical weapons convention signing conference in Paris; what is Her Majesty's Government's attitude toward the preparatory commission and its method of operation; what initiatives are proposed by the United Kingdom to advance the elimination of chemical weapons at the conference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My noble Friend Baroness Chalker of Wallasey will represent the United Kingdom at the chemical weapons convention signing ceremony in Paris. We look forward to the establishment of the preparatory commission and expect to make a full and positive contribution to its work.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Reprocessing

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Cambridge (Mrs. Campbell), 4 November, Official Report, column 308, what will be the proportional increase over current stockpiles of (a) reprocessed uranium and (b) plutonium by 2000 over the current stockpiles; and to what use the additional plutonium and uranium to which he refers will be put.

Mr. Eggar: The quantities of uranium and plutonium that will arise from the reprocessing in the thermal oxide reprocessing plant of spent fuel from nuclear power stations in the United Kingdom represents some 20 per cent. of stocks currently held by British Nuclear Fuels plc on behalf of the generating companies as owners of the material. It is expected that the material will ultimately be burnt in reactors to generate electricity.

Greenhouse Gases

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what resources have been made available to the British Coal Corporation to assist in the retention of methane gas from mines to avoid adding to the release of greenhouse gases.

Mr. Eggar: The process of mining frees the methane contained in coal; for reasons of mine safety, it has to be released from the mines. British Coal work to the practical limits of current technology and make use of about 10 per cent. of this methane. Availability of finance is not a limitation.

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to propose amendments to the existing proposals to establish a multilateral trade organisation set out in the draft final act of the Uruguay round of GATT to secure (a) explicit commitments to the protection of the environment and incomes of the poor in Third-world countries and (b) revisions to the dispute procedures enabling increased accountability of panel members.

Mr. Needham: The GATT already allows for measures to be taken to protect the environment. The proposed Multilateral Trade Organisation (MTO), which is intended to provide the vehicle for the implementation of the results of the Uruguay round, would strengthen the ability of the international trading system to respond to environmental concerns. The Community has made proposals to improve the references to the environment, including wording on sustainable development in the preamble, a ministerial declaration on the environment with a work programme, and giving permanent status to the working party on trade and environment. The members of GATT dispute settlement panels do not act in their own right, but advise the GATT contracting parties, and are accountable in this way to national Governments.

Matrix Churchill

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the documents released to the defence at the Matrix Churchill trial.

Mr. Needham: No.

Record Industry

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimates his Department have made as to the contribution made by the British record industry to British exports.

Mr. Needham: Such estimates are not made by the Department. Exports of the finished product reported by Customs and Excise and published by the British Phonographic Industry Ltd. (BPI) were £196·3 million in 1991. Invisible earnings in the form of royalties returning from overseas were assessed in a report published by British Invisibles to be £486 million in 1988-89. Figures for all exports are shown in the Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics published by the Central Statistical Office.

Toy Imports

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer on 11 December, Official Report, column 838, if he will name the two member states of the EC who impose national quotas on the import of toys made in China.

Mr. Needham: The two member states are Germany and Spain.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to publish his estimate of the average avoidable costs of electricity generation by different means.

Mr. Eggar: The relative costs of electricity generated from different sources are being considered as part of the coal review. The Government intend to publish the conclusions of the review in a White Paper shortly.

Caminus Energy

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when Caminus Energy was appointed as consultants to his Department's energy review; what are its full terms of reference; when he expects to receive their report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Porter) on 20 November 1992, Official Report, column 433.

Industrial Competitiveness

Mr. Hendry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to announce the results of the review being conducted by the industrial competitiveness division of his Department into lessons that can be learnt from other leading industrialised countries.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade receives frequent reports from the industrial competitiveness division, and these are taken into account when considering Government policy.

Trawsfynydd Power Station

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many representations he has had on matters concerning Trawsfynydd nuclear power station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have received some 10 letters from hon. Members forwarding representations from their constituents about the safety of Trawsfynydd nuclear power station. As I have made clear in my replies there is no question of the power station commencing operation until the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate are convinced that it is safe to do so.

Coal Mines

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the amount of investment in new capital machinery at each of the 10 pits currently in the 90-day consultation period in the financial year 1990-91 to 1991-92 and April to September 1992.

Mr. Eggar: The amount of investment in new capital machinery at individual pits is a matter for British Coal.

Miners' Redundancy Payments

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with the chairman of British Coal about extending the corporation's present redundancy terms beyond 31 March 1993.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend has had no such discussions. British Coal's redundancy terms are a matter for British Coal. It would, however, seem reasonable for the corporation not to determine their redundancy arrangements from 1 April 1993 until at least the outcome of the coal review is known.

Colliery Visits

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the collieries that he and his ministerial colleagues have visited, and the date upon which the visits were made, since taking their present offices.

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on 4 November 1992, Official Report, column 314. No further visits have taken place since.

Waste-to-energy Schemes

Mr. Stern: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment his Department has made in his review of energy policy of the economic contribution in terms of job creation and private capital investment which waste-to-energy schemes could make.

Mr. Eggar: The coal review is taking full account of the contribution renewable energy sources can make to meeting the United Kingdom's energy needs.

Personal Protective Equipment

Mr. Butler: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will establish the necessary validation procedures to enable United Kingdom manufacturers of personal protective equipment to obtain a CE mark for their products as required under directive 89/686/EC which came into effect on 1 January 1993.

Mr. Leigh: The Personal Protective Equipment (EC Directive) Regulations 1992, Statutory Instrument 3139, came into force on 1 January 1993. Bodies approved to undertake testing and certification work in relation to the categories of personal protective equipment (PPE) required under the Directive to undergo type examination, will be appointed and notified to the EC Commission in Brussels very shortly. Manufacturers of PPE of simple design protecting against minimal risks are able to self-certify conformity and do not need third party approval to affix the CE mark to such products.

Exporters

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance his Department provides for exporters in the north east; how many firms benefit from such assistance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Under overseas trade services my Department provides a wide range of assistance to companies. In conjunction with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office we are able to offer exporters access to market information facilities and a range of services designed to meet precisely the requirements of business. In the North East there is close co-operation with the chamber movement which has benefited from extra resources through the Department's active exporting initiative and with the Northern Development Company which is responsible for a DTI assisted outward missions programme.

Northern companies may also access the Department's overseas trade divisions, particularly its country desks, its market information services and its major project sections in London. The Department's overseas trade service operates throughout the United Kingdom with various access points, and therefore separate figures are not readily available for take-up by North East firms.

Coal/Water Mixtures

Mr. Dowd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will consider applying for funds under the European Commission's THERMIE programme to finance further research into coal/water mixtures as fuel.

Mr. Eggar: It is for industry, rather than member state Governments, to apply for financial support for projects under the THERMIE programme. The Commission may invite proposals for demonstration projects using coal/water mixtures later this year in the last call for proposals under the THERMIE programme.

Export Licences

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many applications his Department received since 1990 for export licences of (a) machine tools and (b) weapons; and how many of these were (i) approved and (ii) covered by export credit guarantees.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 7 December 1992]: Following is the information:

Applications from 1 January 1990 to 8 December 1992

	Received	Licences issued
Machine tools	1,028	926
Weapons	29,670	27,937

Note: For this purpose "machine tools" is taken to cover any applications falling within headings IL 1075, IL 1088, IL 1091, IL 1370, PL 7027 or ML 18 of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1991 as amended. "Weapons" is taken to cover all ML headings in the Order except ML 18.

Under arrangements applying up to privatisation of ECGD's Insurance Services Group in December 1991, the vast bulk of ECGD's business was underwritten on a basis which did not involve identification of the nature of the goods. It is therefore not possible to provide the information requested in respect of export credit guarantees.

Weapons Exports

Mr. Peter Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total amount of weapons exported to (a) Iraq and (b) Iran in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 8 December 1992]: No lethal defence equipment was exported to either country in 1991, the latest year for which figures are available.

Official Engagements

Mr. Flynn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the official engagements he attended in October and November before 9 am.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 14 December 1992]: The engagements were as follows: on 13 October a Cabinet Committee meeting; on 14 October a meeting with United States trade representatives; on 15 October a Cabinet Committee meeting; on 6 November a meeting with the head of the efficiency unit; on 9 November a regional visit to Folkestone; on 10 November a visit to Yorkshire and Humberside; on 11 November departure for the Anglo-German Summit; on 17 November a regional visit to Liverpool and Manchester; on 24 November departure for Brussels and a briefing session for the Industry Council; and on 25 November a working breakfast with business men in the North West.

EDUCATION

Secondary Heads Association

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to meet the Secondary Heads Association; and how many times he has met the Secondary Heads Association since April.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend expects to meet representatives of the Secondary Heads Association in due course to hear their views on the second report of the School Teachers Review Body. Since April 1992 he has met representatives of the Secondary Heads Association on at least three occasions.

School Visits

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) county infant schools, (b) county primary schools and (c) high schools he has visited since April.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has visited a total of 16 maintained schools since April, including one special school and:

(i) First/Infants
1 county; 1 voluntary controlled
(ii) Primary
2 county; 3 voluntary aided
(iii) Middle
1 voluntary aided
(iv) 3 county; 3 voluntary aided; 1 grant-maintained.

Teacher Organisations

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the teacher organisations he has met since April.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has met representatives from each of the six main school teacher associations: the Assistant Masters and Mistresses Association; the National Association of Head Teachers; the National Association of School Masters/Union of Women Teachers; the National Union of Teachers; the Professional Association of Teachers; and the Secondary Heads Association.

Education Staff

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many full-time and part-time staff are available to each local education authority for education other than at school.

Mr. Forth: The total number of staff employed by local education authorities in England to provide education other than at school is estimated at 2,600 full-time equivalents in January 1992. Reliable figures for individual authorities are not available.

Examinations

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what methods and standards will be used to select pupils for the proposed level 10 examinations in 1994.

Mr. Forth: From 1994, all GCSE examination results will be awarded in terms of levels 10 to 4 instead of the present grades A to G. For each subject, there will be a set of tiered question papers each targeted on a range of levels between 10 to 4. Decisions on the appropriate tier of entry for each candidate will be matters for teachers' professional judgment.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of pupils passed (a) O-levels and (b) CSE for each year from 1980 to 1987; and what percentage passed GCSE in each year since 1988.

Mr. Forth: The available information is as follows.

The estimated percentages of school leavers in England who passed O-level and or CSE from 1980 to 1987 are shown in the table, together with the percentages for GCSE from 1988.

	Percentages of leavers who passed O-level and/ or CSE[1]	Percentages of 16 year olds who passed GCSE[1]
1980	87·7	—
1981	88·5	—
1982	89·3	—
1983	90·1	—
1984	90·2	—
1985	90·3	—
1986	90·0	—
1987	90·2	—
[2]1988	89·9	—
[3]1989	90·9	92·5
1990	91·5	92·7
1991	91·8	93·2

[1] The figures from 1980 to 1991 are based on sample surveys. For the years 1980 to 1987 the percentages relate to those school leavers who gained grades A to E in O-level and/or grade 1 to 5 in CSE examinations.

[2] The GCSE examination was introduced in 1988 and therefore the percentages from that year onwards include leavers who gained grades A to G in that examination and/or O-level or CSE.

[3] From 1989, the school examination survey also collected data for the 16 year old cohort. For these years the percentages of 16-year-olds are also shown.

Ethnic Minorities (Local Government Grants)

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will introduce a grant designed to meet the educational needs of the ethnic minority population of all ages similar to the previous section 11 funding.

Mr. Forth: The assumption that Home Office section 11 grant is to cease is incorrect. Section 11 grant will continue to support existing projects in 1993-94 at the current grant rate of 75 per cent. Thereafter, on current planning assumptions, grant will be available to support the same volume of posts albeit at a reduced rate.

A-level Appeals

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many appeals against A-level results were lodged in the last year for which figures are available; and what were their outcomes.

Mr. Boswell: Appeals against A-level results are made in the first instance to the GCE examination boards. Information on such appeals is not held centrally. If appellants remain dissatisfied they may pursue their concerns with the Independent Appeals Authority for School Examinations, IAASE. In 1991-92 the IAASE heard eight formal appeals on A-level matters. It rejected three, and required the relevant board to reconsider its decision in five.

Parent-Governor Meetings

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many schools in England hold annual parent-governor meetings which are attended by fewer than 10 per cent. of the parents entitled to attend.

Mr. Forth: All parents of pupils registered at a school are eligible to attend the annual parents' meeting. Information as to the numbers of parents attending annual parents meetings is not collected by the Department.

Further Education

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will set out the actual spending by Nottinghamshire county council on further education and sixth form colleges for the financial year 1991-92 and the planned expenditure for 1992-93.

Mr. Boswell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that my predecessor gave to him on 8 December 1992, Official Report, cols. 563-65, where the provisional further education adjustment in respect of Nottinghamshire county council is given as £50·874 million. Its actual expenditure in respect of 1991-92 is not available.

Teacher Education

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement about the future of existing teacher education in higher education institutions.

Mr. Boswell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South (Mr. Hawkins) on 17 November 1992, Official Report, column 123.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the bids for capital allocations from grant-maintained schools and the actual allowances for the 1993-94 financial year.

Mr. Forth: The information is contained in the following tables. Table A lists the applications received for named capital projects from schools with grant-maintained status as at December 1992. Decisions on allocations to these schools have not yet been taken. Table B gives details of the bids received and the actual allocations made to grant-maintained schools under the technology schools initiative. Schools which became grant-maintained on 1 January 1993 have been invited to submit bids by 25 January 1993 for named capital projects and for resources under the technology schools initiative.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many schools in England have held a ballot which resulted in a vote in favour of seeking grant-maintained status.

Mr. Patten: To date 640 schools have voted in favour of applying for grant-maintained status, on the basis of figures supplied by the Electoral Reform Society.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he is taking to ensure an appropriate number of suitably qualified teachers for pupils with severe learning difficulties and sensory impairment.

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to increase the supply of specially trained teachers for children with severe multiple and profound handicap and with acute learning disabilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Identification of the numbers and the training needs of teachers of children with special educational needs is best done by local education authorities, which can determine which categories of special educational needs training are required in their areas.

It is for the Department to provide funds to local education authorities under the grants for education support and training programme to support them with the costs of training. In 1993-94 grant support expenditure will be increased by almost 40 per cent. to £10 million and the previous restrictions on what the grant could cover will be relaxed.

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will now earmark a special element in the overall sum of grants for education support for training to be allocated to the training of teachers for children with severe learning disabilities.

Mr. Forth: The responsibility for training teachers of all children with special educational needs rests with the local education authorities. They are in the best position to determine their own teaching needs. The Government have provided for an increase of 40 per cent. from £7·2 million to £10 million in expenditure which may be supported in training teachers of children with special educational needs.

Schools (Capital Allocations)

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the capital allocations to (a) county schools and (b) voluntary-aided schools for 1993-94.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 16 December 1992 to my hon. Friend the Member for Brecon and Radnor (Mr. Evans), Official Report, columns 267-77. This sets out for each local education authority in England its annual capital guideline for education expenditure in 1993-94, along with the limit of capital expenditure by the governors of voluntary-aided and special agreement schools in each authority's area on which the Secretary of State will be prepared to pay grant in 1993-94.

The annual capital guideline figures provided then did not include supplementary credit approvals to be issued to local education authorities during the course of the financial year. Nor did they include SCAs and grant allocations made under the technology schools initiative. Annex A sets out the SCAs to be given to local education authorities under the technology schools initiative for county and controlled schools and local education authority liability arising from successful voluntary-aided projects. Annex B sets out allocations for voluntary-aided schools.

TOTALS		425

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the bids for capital allocations from (a) county schools and (b) voluntary-aided schools for 1993-94.

Mr. Forth: Copies of lists of capital bids for county and voluntary controlled schools, voluntary aided and special agreement schools and for awards under the technology schools initiative have been placed in the Library.

School Transport

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to exercise his powers under section 55(1) of the Education Act 1944 to make directions with regard to the withdrawal of free school transport by Norfolk county council for many Norfolk children in respect of the failure of the council's information booklet for the year 1992-93 to carry a warning that changes to the arrangements may occur at a later stage.

Mr. Forth: None.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will take steps to require all local authority and grant-maintained schools to publish details of home-to-school transport facilities before each school term.

Mr. Forth: No.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to expand the system of collective home-to-school transport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: None.

GCSE Results

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment his Department has made of the correlation between surplus places in schools, expenditure per pupil, and GCSE results.

Mr. Forth: As my right hon. Friend told the House on 15 December 1992, Official Report, columns 284-85, the Department is investigating these figures and their relationships. I will write to my hon. Friend when that analysis is available.

National Union of Students

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what responses he has had to the consultation exercise with higher education on changing the contribution arrangements of the National Union of Students; and if he will make these available to hon. Members;

(2) what further action he is proposing to take to change the basis on which contributions are made to the National Union of Students.

Mr. Boswell: In the course of the consultations initiated by the Government on student unions, my right hon. Friend has received a number of responses on campus unions and the National Union of Students. In the light of the consultations, the Government are now considering proposals for action. Affiliation arrangements to the National Union of Students are being considered within this framework.

Nursery Education

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list by local education authority the latest figures for the proportion of three and four-year-olds in nursery education.

Mr. Forth: The percentages of three and four-year-olds attending maintained nursery schools or nursery classes in maintained primary schools in each local education authority in England in January 1991, the latest date for which information is readily available, is given in Statistical Bulletin 5/92, copies of which are in the Library.

Youth Service

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish figures showing expenditure by each local education authority on the youth service for each year from 1988.

Mr. Boswell: The latest year for which information on actual expenditure is available is 1990-91. The table shows expenditure on the youth service by each local authority in each of the three years from 1988-89 to 1990-91.

Statutory Provision

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the total spending on statutory education provision per inner London borough for each year since 1988; what it is projected to be in 1993; and what the equivalent figure would have been if uprated by inflation from the 1989-90 figure.

Mr. Forth: The latest year for which information on actual expenditure on education is available is 1990-91. The table gives information for each of the three years from 1988-89 to 1990-91. It is for each inner London borough to determine its spending plans for 1993-94.

Medical Education

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what plans he has to enhance the levels and quality of medical education in the United Kingdom;

(2) what arrangements are in place to monitor (a) the relative cost-effectiveness and (b) the relative quality levels of medical education courses in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Boswell: It is for universities as autonomous institutions to take steps to maintain and enhance the quality of medical and other higher education. The General Medical Council has a statutory role to promote high standards of medical education through recommendations on the curriculum and monitoring of courses. The GMC has recently produced a consultation document on a revised medical curriculum. It will be for institutions to develop their courses within this framework.

The Higher Education Funding Council for England has a statutory duty to secure quality assessment of the higher education which it supports, including medical education. The council is taking forward work on the introduction of assessment across higher education and on the development of a range of performance indicators for all subjects, including indicators of relative costs.

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what estimates his Department has made of the relative costs of medical education courses provided in London and at other centres of medical education in the United Kingdom;

(2) what study Sir Bernard Tomlinson's committee made in the course of the preparation of its recent report of the relative costs of medical education courses in London and the United Kingdom regions.

Mr. Boswell: Details of the costs of medical and other courses for each university in the United Kingdom are shown in the latest volume of "University Management Statistics and Performance Indicators in the United Kingdom", published jointly by the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals and the Universities Funding Council in October 1992. Copies are available in the Library. Sir Bernard Tomlinson's report draws on the CVCP/UFC data on university costs in London and elsewhere.

Departmental Property

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list (a) the total number of residential properties owned by his Department, (b) the number of such properties which are empty and (c), (b) as a percentage of (a).

Mr. Boswell: The Department owns no residential properties.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the schools which he and his ministerial colleagues have visited since April 1992.

Mr. Patten: I, my noble Friend the Minister of State and the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Mid Worcestershire (Mr. Forth), have visited 71 schools so far during our periods in office, made up of

1 Nursery school;
19 Primary schools, including 1 middle school;

HOME DEPARTMENT

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the Government's policy on the European Commission's proposals on data protection in relation to (a) manual files, (b) data subject consent, (c) first communication of personal data and (d) transfers to third countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government are opposed to provisions in the revised draft directive which go beyond the 1981 Council of Europe convention on data processing (Miscellaneous No. 19 (1981) Cmnd 8341) which it considers to represent a principled and practical balance between the interests of data users, data subjects and others. It is opposed to the inclusion of manual data within the scope of the draft directive and to the requirement that in certain specified circumstances data subject consent be obtained before data are processed or first communicated to others. It is broadly content with the provisions on transfers to third countries, but considers that they require further drafting amendments.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many copies of the revised proposal for a data protection directive from the Commission he has sent out; how many were sent to organisations representing data users and organisations representing data subjects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Nearly 400 copies of the draft Directive have been sent to organisations outside the public sector. The consultation list is based on the Data Protection Registrar's standard list, together with those bodies which have approached the Home Office. It is not possible to say, in every case, whether the body primarily represents the interests of data users or data subjects, or both.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what elements in the Commission's proposals for a data protection directive are additional to the Council of Europe convention on data protection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The revised draft directive goes beyond the Council of Europe convention by placing extra restrictions on data users most importantly in the following respects: the application of the data protection provisions to manual files; restrictions on the processing of sensitive data; and the requirement for the data subject's informed consent in various circumstances before data are obtained, processed or communicated to third parties. The Government are opposed to these additional provisions, which they consider would place unnecessary and unjustifiable burdens on data users, with little compensating benefit and in some cases added inconvenience for data subjects.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 19 June, Official Report, column 700, if he has signed a certificate under section 27 of the Data Protection Act 1984 since his answer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary has signed no such certificate.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will seek permission from the respondents to place in the Library their contributions to his consultation exercise on the revised proposal for a data protection directive from the Commission.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The presumption is that responses to the consultation exercise are confidential between the contributor and Government, but I shall place a list of respondents in the Library when the consultation is complete, and the hon. Member may wish to approach them direct to ask for a copy of their submission.

Betting Shops

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will receive a delegation of betting shop employees before making any decision on the relaxation in licensing hours for betting shops.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no present plans to do so. The views submitted by betting office staff following the consultation document published in October 1991 will be taken into account, along with those of all other interested parties.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the likely impact of the evening opening of betting shops on attendances at evening greyhound meetings.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The likely impact is uncertain and would depend on many variable factors. This is one of the issues to which we have been giving careful consideration in the light of the views submitted by greyhoud racing and others during the consultation process.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many meetings Ministers or officials have had with members of the Betting Office Licensees Association since April.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There have been no meetings with Ministers since April 1992, but one has been arranged for 13 January 1993. There have been two meetings with officials.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has had from employees of betting shops about the proposals to extend opening hours into the evening.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since the consultation document was issued in October 1991, we have received 213 representations from betting office staff. In addition, we have received the results of a survey by A. R. Dennis bookmakers in which 4,167 betting office staff took part.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many copies of the consultative document on the evening opening of licenced betting offices were sent out in (a) 1991 and (b) 1992; how many respondents there have been to the document; how many were in favour and how many were against.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Fifty-eight copies of the consultation document were issued in October 1991. No record has since been kept of the number of copies issued on request. Since October 1991, we have received 824 representations, of which 775 were against evening opening and 49 were in favour. We have also received three petitions with more than 2,000 signatures from greyhound racing supporters opposed to evening opening.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration has been given to the petition from Gordon Dennis and the survey carried out by A. R. Dennis among betting office staff concerning evening opening; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The material submitted by A. R. Dennis is being considered alongside the representations from all other interested parties. We will announce our conclusions as soon as possible.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received from members of the public since April over extending the licensing hours of betting shops; how many have been in favour; and how many against.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since April, we have received 199 representations from members of the public, mainly bookmakers, their staff, or those with an interest in greyhound racing. Of these, five were in favour and 194 were opposed. We have also received the results of a survey by A. R. Dennis bookmakers. Of 475 bookmakers who took part, 439 were opposed. Of 4,167 betting office staff who took part, 4,046 were opposed to evening opening.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy that agreement should be reached amongst all affected parties before any relaxation in the licensing hours of betting shops takes place.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I do not consider that such a policy would be either practicable or reasonable.

European Parliament

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the six additional European Parliament seats will be allocated between England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government are developing proposals on how the additional seats allocated to the United Kingdom could best be allocated.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what boundaries the 1994 European elections will be fought following the allocation of six additional seats to the United Kingdom at the Edinburgh summit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Consideration is currently being given to how the European parliamentary constituency boundaries may be re-drawn to accommodate the six additional seats allocated to the United Kingdom in time for the 1994 European parliamentary elections.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) adult and (b) juvenile remand prisoners are currently in prison establishments in County Durham.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The following table shows how many adults, young adults and juveniles held in Prison Service establishments in County Durham on 22 December, which is the latest date for which information is available in County Durham.

Prostitution

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the laws on prostitution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: We consider that the criminal law is well placed to deal with the nuisance caused by prostitution and have no present plans to review the law in this area.

Prison Education

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many potential contractors have bid to provide prison education services in 1993-94; how many bids are from local education authorities; and how many are from colleges of further education.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A total of 155 bids have been received to provide future education services in one or a number of prison establishments. Of these, 121 are from colleges and institutions of further education, 30 from private sector organisations and four from local education authorities.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the consultancy study undertaken into the prison education service by staff from Coombe Lodge and others, earlier in the current year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) on 23 November 1992, Official Report, column 476.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by individual prison establishment which contractor has been successful in winning the bid to provide education services in 1993-94.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The contracts for the provision of educational services in prisons and young offender institutions from 1 April 1993 have not yet been let.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the budgets on a constant price basis for the prison education service for the financial years 1991-92, 1992-93 and the proposed budget for 1993-94.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Expenditure on prison education services in England and Wales is shown in the table, at 1991-92 prices.

United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the latest position regarding the management and funding of the United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The position remains as set out in my reply to a question from the hon. Member on 19 October 1992, Official Report, column 54.

Yugoslav Nationals

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the 150 and 1,000 former Yugoslav nationals released from detention, and their dependants, announced by the Home Secretary last year, have, to date, been received in the United Kingdom; what arrangements his Department has made to accommodate these families; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government have undertaken, in response to a request from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) to accept a total of 1,000 former Yugoslav nationals who have been released from detention camps and their dependants. An initial group of 79 former detainees together with 49 of their dependants arrived on 17 December. We are awaiting confirmation from the UNHCR of the size and timing of arrival of further groups.

We have invited the Refugee Council and the British Red Cross to provide initial reception accommodation for those who wish to take advantage of it. This is being funded by the Government. Following this initial reception period the Refugee Council will arrange more permanent accommodation in the community for the former detainees and their dependants. Some have joined friends or relatives who are already in the United Kingdom, either on arrival or after a short period in reception accommodation.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many former Yugoslav nationals visiting the United Kingdom have applied to extend their visit in the last six months, including applying to extend their visa; how many such applications (a) have been granted, (b) have been refused and (c) a decision is still pending; how many such visitors he now regards as overstaying; and how many such visitors have been removed from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Available information is given in the table. Comprehensive reliable information on the number of applications for extension of stay in this period, and on overstaying, is not available.

Variation of leave decisions[1] on, and removals under enforcement powers of, nationals of the former Yugoslavia, 1 April—30 September 1992

	Number

[1] Excluding dependants.
[2] Figures may understate a little because of recording problems.
[3] Mainly as students, au pairs or on the basis of marriage.
[4] Excluding grants of settlement.
[5] Figures relate to all persons and not just those who have sought an extension of stay.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many former Yugoslav nationals have applied for political asylum on arrival in the last six months in the United Kingdom; how many such applications have been (a) granted, (b) refused and (c) are being considered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In the six months June to November 1992 a total of 2,040 nationals of the former Yugoslavia (excluding dependants), applied for asylum in the United Kingdom at ports of entry. Aside from 40 applications refused on the grounds that they arrived from safe third countries, the remainder of the applications are still under consideration.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many former Yugoslav nationals have been removed or deported from the United Kingdom since August 1992; if he will list in each case the country to which the person was removed or deported; in how many cases the country had indicated prior to removal or deportation it was prepared to accept the person concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In the period August to October 1992, 29 former Yugoslav nationals were refused leave to enter and removed at United Kingdom ports. The majority of these persons were seeking entry as visitors. The information requested on the receiving countries is not available centrally, except in respect of the asylum seekers removed. No asylum seekers have been returned to Yugoslavia since August; seven were removed to safe third countries—three to Germany and four to Sweden—in the period August to December 1992. It is not the usual practice to seek the receiving country's agreement to accept a person refused entry. No former Yugoslav nationals were removed as illegal entrants or under the deportation process in August or September 1992. Data for subsequent months are not yet available.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many former Yugoslav nationals, permitted to enter the United Kingdom as visitors since August 1992, have applied for political asylum; how many such applications have been (a) granted and (b) refused; how many are being considered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available information is that in the period August to November 1992 a total of 1,490 nationals of the former Yugoslavia (excluding dependants) applied for asylum after entry to the United Kingdom. Comprehensive information on their immigration status on application, or date of arrival in the United Kingdom, is not available.

The large majority of these applications are still under consideration.

Probationers

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are his plans for tackling unemployment levels amongst offenders under supervision by the probation service in the current financial year, 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Mr. Jack: The three-year plan for the probation service issued by my Department in December sets an objective for 1993-94 of ensuring effective provision for offenders in relation to employment, partnership with the independent and voluntary sector and others in the local community. Guidance issued in 1990 had already emphasised the importance of working with training and enterprise councils, the Employment Service and others, and in monitoring locally the employment status of offenders at the start and end of probation supervision.

It is for each of the 55 area probation services in England and Wales to draw up detailed plans to achieve this objective which best fits local circumstances within the resources available.

The Association of Chief Officers of Probation operates regional employment forums to discuss best practice in work with offenders to secure employment and training. The Home Office regularly discusses in a national forum with probation service representatives, the Employment Department and the voluntary sector ways of mobilising effective practical assistance for offenders. Discussions with the association and other interested bodies are also in progress about ways in which performance indicators for the work of the probation service should reflect success in ensuring assistance towards employment and training while under probation supervision.

Entry Clearance Officers

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will issue instructions to United Kingdom entry clearance officers regarding his proposed allowance of up to two consecutive applications per person; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The necessary instructions to give effect to the measures, which I announced on 8 December, to protect the interests of visitors when rights of appeal are removed will be issued by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office before the relevant provisions of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Bill are brought into force.

Departmental Property

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) the total number of residential properties owned by his Department, (b) the number of such properties which are empty and (c), (b) as a percentage of (a).

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of Home Office residential properties as at 1 January 1993 are as follows:
(a) 2,594 properties are owned by the Department.
(b) 290 (11.18 per cent.) properties are vacant for various reasons. Of this number 209 (8.06 per cent.) are retained for redevelopment or security reasons, retained for essential reallocation or to be demolished and are not, therefore, available for disposal. The remaining 81 (3.12 per cent.) vacant properties are on the open market for sale.

The above figures do not include properties owned by the Metropolitan police or other police authorities.

Ex-offenders

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what correspondence he has had with the South Glamorgan Probation Service Ex-offenders Employment Forum; what report he has received of the Minister of State's visit to the forum on 11 November; if he will place a copy of such correspondence and report in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: After receiving a letter from the chief probation officer of South Glamorgan I was happy to visit his offices and Her Majesty's prison Cardiff in order to meet members of the offender employment forum and launch the future skills project.

I was most impressed by the successful initiative and co-operation by those involved locally and have thanked the chief probation officer on behalf of all those involved.

Drink Driving

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider increasing periods of driving disqualification and sentences available to the courts for those found guilty of driving motor vehicles with an alcohol content in their blood that exceeds the statutory limit.

Mr. Jack: There is no upper limit on the length of disqualification that a court can impose for offences relating to driving while under the influence of alcohol. We have no present plans to change the existing penalties which permit courts to impose prison sentences of up to six months and fines of up to £5,000 thus giving the courts the powers to impose appropriate sentences on those convicted of driving with excess alcohol in the blood. For the offence of causing death by drink driving we have announced our intention to raise the maximum penalty from five to 10 years imprisonment as soon a suitable legislative opportunity is available.

Crime Prevention

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Government's crime prevention policy.

Mr. Jack: During the past decade, the Home Office crime prevention unit set up by this Government has generated many initiatives leading to successful crime prevention activity. This has been undertaken by individual people and individual businesses; by community groups like crime prevention panels and neighbourhood watches; by the police, local authorities and other statutory agencies; by multi-agency partnerships; and within specific Government schemes. These include not only the Home Office's safer cities programme, but also the urban programme and city challenge. All this activity is linked by the common thread of the partnership, or multi-agency, approach in which a diversity of interests work together in a local community or for a common cause.

The Government intend to build on this good foundation to develop a clear strategy for crime prevention involving all sections of the community.

The four key areas of activity will be as follows:

the number of safer cities projects will be doubled, with a broader management base to bring in a wider range of interests;

a new National Board for Crime Prevention will be set up, after wide consultation with business and voluntary sectors, industry, commerce and the retail world. This should generate new ideas for preventing crime and enable a wide range of expertise to be mobilised, while providing a focal point for smaller groups addressing specific problems. Car crime prevention year has shown how much can be achieved by this kind of approach; the Ministerial group on crime prevention, reconvened with new membership, will be tasked with overseeing the Government's crime prevention strategy and helping to ensure that Government Departments pursue crime prevention objectives in the implementation of their own policies.

there will be support for crime prevention initiatives which do not fall within the scope of safer cities and other Government programmes. The Government will continue to fund Crime Concern to provide a consultancy service for those who wish to set up crime prevention projects, to promote neighbourhood watch, to develop youth crime prevention and other similar activities; we will produce a good practice guide for local crime prevention practitioners; we will fund a number of innovative local projects intended to reduce the likelihood of people turning to crime; and we will encourage all sections of the community to work with the police to prevent crime.

I have placed in the Library of the House a statement providing further details of these new policies.

NHS Premises (Fire Safety)

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plan he has to remove Crown immunity from national health service buildings with respect to fire safety legislation; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what research his Department has carried out into the cost of bringing national health service premises up to the standards required by fire safety legislation; and what cost was estimated.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [pursuant to his reply, 17 December, c. 437]: The Home Office has conducted no research into the cost of bringing national health service premises up to the standards required by the safety legislation. Individual health authorities and trusts are responsible for estimating and meeting the cost of remedial work.

HEALTH

Mental Illness

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance was given to district health authorities in each financial year since 1981-82 regarding the provision of community facilities for the severely mentally ill.

Mr. Yeo: The Department has issued the following guidance to district health authorities on the development of services for mentally ill people. Copies are available in the Library.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the different forms of support for the severely mentally ill which packages of community care can comprise.

Mr. Yeo: These are listed in paragraph 5 of "Development of Services for People with Learning Disabilities (Mental Handicap) or Mental Illness in England", the fourth report prepared pursuant to section 11 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 (House of Commons paper 342).

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were living in hospitals for the mentally ill in England in each district in each financial year since 1981-82.

Mr. Yeo: The information is not readily available centrally in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many community psychiatric nurses there were in England in each financial year since 1981-82; and how many of these were employed wholly or mainly in caring for the severely mentally ill in the community.

Mr. Sackville: Information on the number of community psychiatric nurses as at 30 September each year is given in the table.

Whole-time equivalents

	Community psychiatric nurses
1981	1,080
1982	1,240
1983	1,430
1984	1,880
1985	2,310
1986	2,530
1987	2,770
1988	3,080
1989	3,380
1990	3,600
1991	3,760

Note: Figures have been independently rounded to the nearest 10 whole-time equivalents.

Data are not collected centrally on the number employed wholly or mainly in caring for the severely mentally ill.

Child Care

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is taking to improve the effect of the day care registration system introduced in the Children Act 1989; and if she will issue more guidance to local authorities on this subject.

Mr. Yeo: A circular LAC(93)1 has been issued today to local authorities in England urging them to use the discretion that the legislation allows them to be less rigid in their approach to the regulation of private and voluntary day care services and childminders and to work to encourage increases in the supply of these services. Copies have been placed in the Library.

The circular sets a new climate for providers and registration authorities, emphasising that, in the interests of children and families, authorities must strike the right balance between ensuring standards and encouraging development of provision. In particular, authorities are reminded, first, that underlying the legislation is a presumption that registration should be granted unless the authority has good reason not to register; and, secondly, that the standards set in the Department of Health's earlier guidance are not legally prescriptive. They are points of reference to be taken into account by the registering authority in deciding whether an applicant and his/her premises are fit for the care of young children and, if they are to be registered, what conditions should be imposed.

The circular also announces that the Government propose to amend the Food Premises (Registration) Regulations 1991 to exempt childminders registered under the Children Act 1989 from the requirement also to register their premises with Environmental Health Departments.

Intensive Care Beds

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department has carried out into computer systems for the allocation of intensive care beds; which systems have been identified as the most satisfactory; what guidance is given to health authorities and trusts; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The allocation of intensive care beds, where carried out by computer, is usually a function of the hospital patient administration system. The investigation of this area forms part of the on-going work of the Department.

Psychiatric Patients

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the Boyd inquiry on the homicides and suicides of discharged psychiatric patients.

Mr. Yeo: An up-to-date account of the confidential inquiry into homicides and suicides by mentally ill people is contained in paragraph 23 of the fourth report prepared pursuant to section 11 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 entitled "Development of Services for People with Learning Disabilities (Mental Handicap) or Mental Illness in England" which was laid before the House on 16 December 1992. Copies are available in the Library.

Oral Contraceptives

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will estimate how many women have received prescriptions for oral contraceptives in each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available centrally.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the (a) lowest, (b) highest and (c) average cost per month of oral contraceptives prescribed by the national health service;

(2) what is the cost to the health service of all the oral contraceptives prescribed which cost more than the average;

(3) what is the total cost to the health service of oral contraceptive prescriptions per month.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information is not available in the form requested.

Figures are based on the net ingredient cost of oral contraceptives dispensed by; community pharmacists and appliance contractors, dispensing doctors, and prescribing doctors in England in 1991. The lowest net ingredient cost per prescription was £0·62, the highest £9·12 and the average £5·01. The annual net ingredient cost of oral contraceptives with a cost per prescription greater than £5·01 was £23·79 million.

The total cost of oral contraceptives to the health service per month was £3·14 million.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost to the health service for oral contraceptives for the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: Information is not available in the form requested. The table shows the annual net ingredient cost for oral contraceptives from 1987 to 1991. Figures for 1987 to 1990 are estimates based on a sample of about one in two hundred prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors. Figures for 1991 are actual costs and include all prescriptions dispensed by; community pharmacists and appliance contractors, dispensing doctors, and prescribing doctors.

Estimated Net Ingredient Cost for Oral Contraceptives For England from 1987 to 1991

Year	£ Million
1987	20·01
1988	23·97
1989	27·27
1990	32·09
1991	37·65

Immunisation

Sir Malcolm Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide the figures for the volume of medicines required by the NHS, the costs in administrative terms and the actual costs of the medicines in order to meet the immunisation targets for children for each year since the introduction of the general practitioners' contract; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Under central purchasing arrangements introduced on 1 April 1992, expenditure on vaccines for childhood immunisation is estimated at £40 million in the year 1992-93. This expenditure covers immunisation carried out in general practitioners' surgeries as well as in local clinics. Details of expenditure on childhood vaccines in the years 1990-91 and 1991-92 are not held centrally because prior to 1 April 1992 individual health authorities made their own purchasing arrangements.

Approximately 650,000 children enter the immunisation programme annually. From birth to five years, each child requires four doses of diphtheria, tetanus and polio vaccine, three doses of whooping cough and Hib vaccine and one dose of measles/mumps/rubella vaccine. Contracts are placed with vaccine manufacturers to ensure the required total volumes of vaccine are available to immunise each child.

Progress with the childhood immunisation programme since the GPs' new contract was introduced is set out in the table. These figures cover immunisation carried out in GPs' surgeries and in local clinics. Separate figures in this format are not available.

Immunisation against:	Number of children immunised (England) 1990-91	1991-92 (provisional)
Diphtheria, Tetanus and Polio	587,000 (92)	594,000 (93)
Measles, Mumps and Rubella	552,000 (86)	578,000 (90)
Whooping Cough	539,000 (84)	562,000 (88)

Note: The figure in brackets is the percentage of all children aged two who have been immunised.

Expenditure in England on payments to general practitioners for reaching immunisation targets amounted to £41·138 million in 1990-91 and £49·804 million in 1991-92. Administrative costs associated with the immunisation programme cannot be disaggregated from other NHS administrative costs.

The childhood immunisation programme has been one of the country's major successes in disease prevention. The most recent estimates from the Public Health Laboratory Service's survey show that 95 per cent. of all children by the age of 18 months have been immunised against diptheria, tetanus and polio, 91 per cent. at the same age against whooping cough, and 93 per cent. by the age of 24 months against measles, mumps and rubella. East Anglian region has achieved the "Health of the Nation" target of 95 per cent. cover by 1995 for all diseases, and Oxford, South Western and Wessex have done so for all except whooping cough. There has been no reported death from acute measles since 1989, and reports of all the diseases for which immunisation is available are at record low levels.

Complementary Medicines

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been or is being done under EC programmes on how complementary medicines can be integrated within existing systems of health care delivery; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The scope of the current EC programme on biomedical and health research does not provide for such research and there are no plans to widen the remit of future EC health and medical research programmes to enable the consideration of such proposals. The United Kingdom Government have agreed to sign the memorandum of understanding for the implementation of a European research project on unconventional medicine sponsored by the co-operation on science and technology programme which involves EC and other European states. This project—which is designed to last for five years—will examine procedures for establishing the efficacy of complementary medicines.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the single European market will affect complementary medicines.

Mr. Sackville: The United Kingdom's medicines licensing controls, including those for complementary medicines, are not immediately affected by the launch of the single market on 1 January 1993.

The European Council of Ministers adopted directives 92/73/EEC and 92/74/EEC in September 1992 and these provide for the partial harmonisation of the rules relating to the regulation of homoeopathic medicinal products for use by humans and in animals, respectively. These directives, which are due to be implemented in member states by 31 December 1993, will ensure the continuing availability of homoeopathic medicines within the United Kingdom while making it easier for manufacturers to market their products in other member states. The arrangements for implementing the directives within the United Kingdom will shortly be the subject of wide consultation by the Government with interested parties.

Hospital Admissions

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what information she has concerning the imposition by coronary care units of age limits on admission;

(2) what guidelines her Department issues on the operation of age limits on admissions to hospital services.

Mr. Sackville: Decisions concerning the assessment and treatment of national health service patients are matters for the professional judgment of the clinicians involved in the individual case. A number of factors will influence such decisions, including the patient's ability to benefit from medical intervention; but we have always made it clear that treatment should not be withheld on the basis of age alone.

Free Prescriptions

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines exist for deciding which patients are entitled to free prescriptions.

Dr. Mawhinney: Entitlement to free prescriptions is governed by the provisions of paragraph 1 of schedule 12 to the National Health Service Act 1977, the National Health Service (Charges for Drugs and Appliances) Regulations 1989 [SI 1989 No. 419], as amended,. and the National Health Service (Travelling Expenses and Remission of Charges) Regulations 1988 [SI 1988 No. 551], as amended, copies of which are in the Library.

Smokers

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will estimate the total number of habitual smokers in each regional health authority; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The estimated number in each regional health authority of people aged 16 and over who said in 1990, the latest year for which figures are available, that they "smoke cigarettes nowadays" is given in the table.

Estimated number of people aged 16 or over smoking cigarettes England 1990

Regional Health Authority	Thousands
England	11,280
Northern	790
Yorkshire	850
Trent	1,060
East Anglian	430
North West Thames	730
North East Thames	880
South East Thames	990
South West Thames	700
Wessex	670
Oxford	550
South Western	720
West Midlands	1,220
Mersey	610
North Western	1,090

Notes: Estimates rounded to nearest 10,000.

Schizophrenia

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her policy on the provision of long-term hospital and hostel places for schizophrenia sufferers; and on what basis the number of hospital beds and hostel places has been calculated.

Mr. Yeo: The Government recognise that there will continue to be a number of patients suffering from schizophrenia who will require sanctuary or long-term asylum. The national health service's responsibilities for providing continuing care have been clearly set out in the White Paper "Caring for People" and strongly re-iterated last year in letters to regional health authorities and social services departments from the deputy chief executive of the national health service management executive and the chief inspector of social services.

The form this continuing care should take and the number of places provided is a matter for local decision. Under the terms of the White Paper it is the responsibility of each health authority to agree with the relevant local authorities the level of continuing care it proposes to provide or arrange for its own population so that health and local authority plans are compatible and comprehensive. Authorities should then publish their proposals as part of the local authority community care plans.

Human Growth Hormone

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Wallasey of 15 December, Official Report, column 184, by what method pituitary-derived human growth hormone was extracted from the glands; how and when the method of extraction of human growth hormone changed between 1959 and 1985; and for what reasons, and on whose recommendations, each change took place.

Dr. Mawhinney: I am advised that all the processes followed the same basic principle involving the homogenisation of the pituitary glands in order to release the growth hormone which is found in the pituitary cells. Initially at Cambridge the Raben method was used whereby the pituitary glands were acetone dried, extracted in an acid solution and precipitated differentially with ammonium sulphate. Then, later in the 1960s with the adoption of the Wilhelmi-Hartree method, the pituitaries were extracted in a strong alkaline solution (pH 10). The Lowry method, developed at St. Bartholomew's, used frozen glands with extraction at pH 8·5, a Sephadex G-100 column stage, ion-exchange chromatography and isoelectric precipitation. The Centre for Applied Microbiological Research at Porton Down modified the Cambridge process by the introduction of a G-100 column stage. Kabi also received frozen glands and initially used a process based upon the Roos method which involved extraction at pH 6·5 and a G-100 column stage. From 1982, they moved closer to the Lowry method with a higher pH for initial extraction and an additional chromatography stage.

The changes were authorised by the Medical Research Council and, from 1977, the Department of Health and Social Security after consultation with the joint DHSS/MRC advisory committee for the national pituitary collection and the health services human growth hormone committee. They were intended to increase the yield, potency and safety of the growth hormone product.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Wallasey (Ms Eagle) of 15 December, Official Report, column 184, where the manufacture of the human growth hormone extracted from the pituitary glands obtained in mortuaries took place; between which dates the manufacture of human growth hormone from human glands took place in each location; and what steps were taken by the Medical Research Council and by the health services pituitary collection committee to prevent infected or diseased organs being used in the manufacturing processes in each location.

Dr. Mawhinney: Pituitary glands were processed to produce human growth hormone treatment at the following locations:

1959 to 1980
The laboratory of the Department of Biochemistry of Cambridge University

1977 to 1980
The biochemistry laboratory at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London

1980 to 1985
The Centre for Applied Microbiological Research at Porton Down

1980 to 1985
By Kabi A. B. (Sweden) at their laboratory in Stockholm.

Action intended to prevent the use of infected glands in the manufacture of the growth hormone treatment was required of hospital pathology departments. The Medical Research Council first issued guidance to pathology departments on the glands to be excluded from collection in 1958 and then laid down more stringent criteria in 1977. The joint DHSS/MRC advisory committee for the national pituitary collection issued its criteria in 1981.

Child Abuse

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many private advice organisations specialising in investigating child abuse and training such investigators are operating;

(2) what is the current system of regulation or accountability to public authority for private agencies specialising in advising on child abuse; and what plans she has for changes;

(3) what guidance she issues on the minimum qualifications necessary to practise as an advice agency to children who are being abused or adults who were abused in childhood;

(4) whether she will make it her policy to establish a national register of private agencies that carry out investigations of child abuse, training for investigators, or advice to persons who have been abused;

(5) if she will bring forward proposals to set up a general social services council with the responsibility of setting standards for private agencies offering advice or training in areas such as child abuse, and with powers similar to other professional bodies to suspend or expel members who fail to maintain acceptable professional standards.

Mr. Yeo: It is for the local authority, which has a duty to investigate under section 47 of the Children Act 1989, or for the National Society of Prevention of Cruelty to Children when authorised to act on behalf of the local authority under that provision, to satisfy itself that any person it employs to investigate allegations of child abuse, train investigators, or give advice to persons who have been abused, is appropriately qualified and trained.

There is no additional need for a separate system of regulation or national registration for private agencies involved in such activities. Information is not available centrally on the number of these agencies.

"The Health of the Nation"

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what budgetary provision has been made for 1992-93 and 1993-94 for the publication of the "Health of the Nation" targets.

Dr. Mawhinney: The cost of producing "The Health of the Nation" White Paper, together with nine other supporting and subsequent publications, and making these widely available will be around £2·4 million in 1992-93. This includes the cost of implementation activity such as the forthcoming publication of guidance on each of the key areas and 14 regional conferences taking place from January to March this year.

Allocations for publications, communications and publicity in 1993-94 have yet to be decided.

Bart's Hospital

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to respond to the request made by letter by the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch to meet a delegation of Conservative, Liberal and Labour councillors from Hackney to discuss the future of Bart's hospital.

Dr. Mawhinney: My office has written to the hon. Member to make arrangements for a meeting.

Medical Services

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the regulations which apply specifically to the work of chiropodists, dieticians, medical laboratory scientific officers, occupational therapists, orthoptists, physiotherapists and radiographers; and what plans she has to review them.

Dr. Mawhinney: State registered practitioners are subject to the provisions of the Professions Supplementary to Medicine Act 1960. State registration is a requirement for direct employment in these capacities in the national health service and local authority social services departments, by virtue of directions given under the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 and the Local Authority Social Services Act 1970. We have at present no plans to review these arrangements.

Laparoscopic Surgery

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many surgeons practising laparoscopic surgery are certificated in the competence of such techniques;

(2) what representations from and discussions with the Royal College of Surgeons she has had concerning certification of competence for the practice of laparoscopic surgery;

(3) if she will consider the need for regulations to govern the practice of laparoscopic surgery; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: There is no central certification scheme for surgeons using laparoscopic or other minimally invasive techniques. There have been no discussions with the Royal College of Surgeons concerning any such certification and we have no plans to introduce regulations to govern the practice of this surgery.

Pharmaceutical Prices

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations she has received from the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry during the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme negotiations;

(2) what proposals she has made in her negotiations with the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry on the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme; and when she expects the negotiations to reach a conclusion.

Dr. Mawhinney: Negotiations are now taking place between the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry and my Department on a successor agreement to the 1986 pharmaceutical price regulation scheme. Both sides have put forward various proposals and these are under discussion. Our aim is to reach an agreement which will provide a fair deal for the industry and for the taxpayer and it is not possible at present to predict how long the negotiations will take. In the meantime, the 1986 agreement continues to operate.

Tropical Diseases

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans she has to provide specialist facilities for the diagnosis and treatment of tropical diseases in London and the south-east of England when St. Pancras hospital for tropical diseases is closed;

(2) what change is proposed in the number of beds and availability of specialist staffing for the diagnosis and treatment of tropical diseases in London;

(3) what estimate was made, in considering the future of St. Pancras hospital for tropical diseases, of the implications for the incidence of tropical diseases of the amount of travel by British citizens to tropical countries and the availability of making early diagnoses.

Dr. Mawhinney: The report of the inquiry into London's health service by Sir Bernard Tomlinson and his team recommended that the London hospital for tropical disease at St. Pancras be merged with University college hospital. I understand that his recommendation has been welcomed by the LHTD and its parent institute, the London school of hygiene and tropical medicine as offering significant medical and research advantages.

This, and the other recommendations of the Tomlinson report, is advice to Government. We will announce our response to the report shortly. All proposals on hospital closures or mergers arising from Sir Bernard's report will be subject to established national health service consultation procedures.

Mental Illness

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specific provision has been made in the draft local authority care plans so far received for the care of those in the 16 to 25 years age group suffering from mental illness.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities are not required to send copies of their draft plans to the Department.

Care Homes

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what sources of financial support the Government have provided for care home proprietors so that they can train their staff to the NVQ standards required from April 1993; and how much money is available from each of those sources.

Mr. Yeo: There is no requirement for staff of care homes in the independent sector, or the statutory sector, to have achieved national vocational qualifications by April 1993.

It is for employers to determine what training and qualifications are necessary for staff to carry out their duties to acceptable standards.

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to reply to the letters dated 27 October 1991, 18 December 1991, 19 February 1992, 17 July 1992 and 7 October 1992 from Dr. S. G. Bennett of The Surgery, 51 Hawthorn Drive, Wembury, Plymouth, Devon, about single-handed locum allowances for rural practitioners; why has he received no acknowledgement to any of these letters; for what reasons the letters have not yet been replied to; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Officials from the Department have replied to Dr. Bennett and I have written to my hon. Friend.

Prescriptions

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will state the average net ingredient cost of prescription items charged at the standard rate of £3·75, exclusive of prescriptions which are subject to charge exemption, charge remission or the use of prescription pre-payment certificates.

Dr. Mawhinney: The average net ingredient cost of chargeable prescriptions, excluding those covered by pre-payment certificates, in the family health services in England amounted to £8·37 in the six-month period ending 30 September 1992.

Auditors' Report

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all reports issued by auditors under section 20(3) of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 in the last six months; and if she will make a statement on the action she has taken in each instance.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received one auditor's report under section 20(3) of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990. This relates to loans made by West Midlands regional health authority to a charitable company, Health Management Trust, to assist a subsidiary company, FIP Ltd. The report raises issues concerning the legal status of the loans, on which we are taking advice.

Hospital Beds

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital beds were closed in London teaching hospitals in 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Aids Unit

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many organisations requested funding under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 from her Department's aids unit, for the current and previous financial years; what was the total amount of money requested; which organisations received section 64 funding; how much money the unit distributed in total; and what was the total money available for all projects from section 64 funding.

Mr. Sackville: Forty-one organisations requested section 64 funding from the Department of Health Aids unit in 1992-93, and 32 in the previous year. The total amount requested was £4.172 million in 1992-93 and £4.161 million in the previous year.

The following organisations received section 64 funding in 1991-92 and 1992-93: AIDS Ahead, AIDS and Housing Project, ACET, Aled Richards Trust (91-92 only), Barnardos, BHAN, Blackliners, Body Positive, CARA, Frontliners (91-92 only), Globe Centre, ISDD, Landmark, London East AIDS Network, London Lighthouse, LVSC, Mainliners, Mildmay Mission, National AIDS Trust, National AIDS Manual (92-93 only), NAZ project (92-93 only), Positively Women, SCODA, Streetwise Youth, Strutton Ground Housing Association, Terrence Higgins Trust, Turning Point.

The unit distributed £1.987 million in 1992-93 and £1.892 million in 1991-92.

The total amount of money available for all projects from section 64 was £17.8 million in 1992-93 and £15.855 million the previous year.

Motor Neurone Disease

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment her Department has made of the evidence linking abnormally high levels of motor neurone disease to a high concentration of nitrates in tap water.

Mr. Sackville: The Department is not aware of any evidence of such a link.

Myodil

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps have been taken to ensure that general practitioners are aware of the possible side effects of the use of Myodil and its links with the disease arachnoiditis;

(2) what plans she has to withdraw the product licence for Myodil.

Dr. Mawhinney: Myodil was withdrawn from the market by the manufacturers in 1987 for commercial reasons and the product licence is no longer in force. Myodil would only have been administered by specialists. The product information for Myodil warned of the occurrence of post-myelography arachnoiditis. In view of this, and the fact that arachnoiditis is rare, it has not been considered necessary to issue additional warnings to general practioners about the side effects of Myodil and the possible association with arachnoiditis.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what support is being given to research efforts to determine the percentage of cases of arachnoiditis which arise from the use of the dye Myodil in myelography treatment.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are not currently funding research in this particular area.

Bloomfield Report

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she has yet received the Bloomfield report;

(2) on what date she will make the Bloomfield report available to hon. Members.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has now received the report and will inform the House of its contents shortly.

Abortion

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on how many and which district health authorities in England have run a centralised abortion referral service through community family planning clinic services; and what was the average waiting time between general practitioner referral and hospital appointment, where such centralised services existed, for the last available year.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally.

EC Doctors and Dentists

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to encourage doctors and dentists from European countries to seek employment in England.

Dr. Mawhinney: Employment and recruitment of doctors and dentists are matters for the individual employing authorities. A 1991 survey of doctors from other EC countries showed that around 30 per cent. were actively recruited by English health authorities or trusts.

Departmental Property

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list (a) the total number of residential properties owned by her Department, (b) the number of such properties which are empty and (c), (b) as a percentage of (a).

Mr. Sackville: Information is not held centrally on the properties in the ownership of the national health service. A survey in 1990 indicated that the NHS had some 93,000 units of accommodation, of which 14,000, 15 per cent., were vacant. 90 per cent. of the vacant units were rooms in hospital hostels or shared flats. A further survey is now being undertaken and the results will be made available to the Government's task force on empty residential property.

Raynaud's Disease and Scleroderma

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has to improve facilities for research into and treatment of Raynaud's disease and scleroderma; what representations she has received from the Raynaud's Disease and Scleroderma Society in relation to the future of the Brompton hospital unit; what consultations she has had concerning the impact of the Tomlinson report on non-London originating patients suffering from Raynaud's disease and scleroderma; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department has no current plans for research into Raynaud's disease and scleroderma. The main Government agency for the promotion of medical and related research is the Medical Research Council which receives its grant-in-aid through the Office of Science and Technology. We have recently received two representations regarding the Raynaud's Disease and Scleroderma Society in relation to future of the Royal Brompton hospital to which I will be replying. The views of the society will be taken into account, along with others relating to the specialist hospitals such as the Brompton, when decisions are made on the recommendations of the Tomlinson report. Those decisions will also take into account the implications for non-London originating patients for these and other diseases.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Quantock Staghounds

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the terms and conditions of the permit issued to the Quantock staghounds to hunt on Forestry Commission land.

Mr. Curry: The terms and conditions set out in the permission given to the Quantock staghounds hunt by the Forestry Commission are as follows:

1. The permission is limited to scheduled hunting days only.
2. Vehicles may only be taken into the Great Wood on specified routes, and subject to a speed limit of 15 mph.
3. Priority of passage is given at all times to forestry and other traffic, and to pedestrians.
4. The Quantock staghounds hunt to indemnify the Forestry Commission in the sum of £500,000 in respect of claims for damage, loss, or injury to Forestry Commission employees and property, similarly third party claims arising from exercise of the permission.
5. The Forestry Commission cannot accept any responsibility for loss, damage or injury suffered by the hunt or their followers during their exercise of the permission—which is given on the basis that it is at the user's own risk.
6. The permission does not give or imply any exclusive or permanent user rights by the hunt and their followers.
7. Hunt followers to carry windscreen stickers or other means of identification.
8. Smoking to be prohibited.
9. No carcase to be gralloched within 30 ft of running water.
10. One landrover or similar vehicle will be allowed to travel on the general road network to collect carcasses as an exception to the general rule but for no other purpose.
11. The staghounds to be responsible for the observance of the commission's byelaws by members of the hunt and their followers.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many vehicle permits have been issued to hunt followers in the Quantocks area to enable them to follow the hunt on Forestry Commission land.

Mr. Curry: Somerset county council, in liaison with the Forestry Commission, has issued 126 vehicle permits to hunt staff and followers for the 1992-93 season. No separate record is kept of permits issued to hunt followers.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what provisions are made for the ownership of the carcase or for payment when a deer is killed by the Quantock staghounds on Forestry Commission land.

Mr. Curry: The ownership of the carcase passes to the Quantock staghounds hunt without any payment.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what monitoring arrangements and procedures are in place to ensure that the conditions of the permit held by the Quantock staghounds are adhered to.

Mr. Curry: Senior members of the Quantock staghounds hunt attend at least one formal meeting each year with Forestry Commission staff. Contacts are also maintained, as necessary, between the commission and the hunt's vehicle steward. In addition, Forestry Commission staff carry out random checks on hunt days to ensure that the conditions of the permit are being followed.

Dairy Farmers

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the level of indebtedness among dairy farmers in each year since 1974.

Mr. Gummer: The following table shows the average level of total liabilities on dairy farms in England, together with the proportion that these represent of total assets, for each year from 1978-79. Comparable information for earlier years is not available. Data for 1991-92 will be published in "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom".

Dairy Farms in England: Indebtedness[1]

Accounting year ending on average mid-Feb	Total External Liabilities (£'000 per farm)	External Liabilities as a percentage of Total Assets
1978-79	15·4	8

Farm Incomes

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his Department's assessment of the impact of sterling devaluation on farm incomes in 1992 in each sector of agriculture.

Mr. Curry: It is not possible yet to estimate the impact of the recent depreciation in the value of sterling on farm incomes in 1992. However, it is estimated that the fall in the value of sterling and the associated devaluation of the green pound should increase agricultural net product by around £700 million or 14 per cent. in a full year.

Veterinary Inspection Fees

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what consultation his Department had with abattoirs in the north west region prior to announcing the recent increase in veterinary inspection fees;

(2) what recent representations he has received from farmers in the north west region about increases in veterinary inspection fees and their impact upon competition in the meat trade.

Mr. Soames: Consultation took place earlier this year with interested parties, including organisations representing the interests of abattoirs and farmers, on the proposed Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992, in accordance with section 48 of the Food Safety Act 1990.

In the last five months the Department has received seven letters from Members of Parliament within its northern region about veterinary inspection costs. One of these concerned representations from two farmers. We have received no direct representations from farmers in northern region about increases in veterinary inspection fees and their impact on competition in the meat trade, but a number of representations have been made by other interests including abattoir owners and livestock auctioneers.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food by how much in both cash and percentage terms veterinary inspection fees for abattoirs have recently been increased; what was the reason for that increase; upon what basis the fees for individual abattoirs are calculated; what estimate he has made of the net effect in overall annual average payments of such fees in both cash and percentage terms for an average-sized abattoir; what form the notification of the recent increase in veterinary inspection fees took to individual abattoirs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Veterinary inspection fees are charged to abattoirs under the Fresh Meat and Poultry Meat (Hygiene, Inspection and Examinations for Residues) (Charges) Regulations 1990, which provide for the recovery of costs incurred by local authorities in providing for inspection and supervision of abattoirs. Detailed information on charges for individual abattoirs is not available, but work carried out by independent consultants earlier this year on behalf of this Department estimated the cost of implementing the supervision requirements in the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1992 as £33 million per annum, compared with £25 million previously. Both figures are based on 1991 costs and slaughterhouse numbers. The additional cost of veterinary supervision in medium-sized slaughterhouses was estimated to represent £5·4 million of this increase. However, we estimate that the guidance on veterinary supervision levels issued by the Department on 30 November would reduce this to £3·4 million. A copy of this guidance was placed in the Library of the House.

Local authorities are required to consult abattoir operators about the proposed charges at individual premises and to consider any representations made by the operator before determining the amount of the charge.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what implications the decisions taken at the Edinburgh summit in connection with the principle of subsidiarity have for the arrangements and fees for veterinary inspection of abattoirs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The basic principles and guidelines on subsidiarity which were agreed by the Edinburgh Council will apply to future Community action on the arrangements and fees for veterinary inspection of abattoirs, and in particular to Community discussions on proposals for amending EC directive 85/73 on the harmonisation of inspection costs.

Animal Transportation

Mr. Burden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek a derogation from the single market to permit the maintenance of the existing United Kingdom minimum standards on animal transportation from 1 January 1993.

Mr. Soames: As explained in the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Kempton (Mr. Bowden) on 10 December 1992, the United Kingdom will be maintaining national rules on protection of animals in transport, in the areas where further Community rules remain to be adopted.

Food Prices

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the Government's estimate of the effect upon the food group retail prices index of the recent devaluation of the green pound.

Mr. Gummer: It is estimated that the devaluations of the green pound which took place between mid-September 1992 and 1 January 1993 may increase the food component of the retail prices index by about 2 per cent., once the effects of the increases in CAP support prices have worked through.

Broiler Hens

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what proportion of broiler hens stunned in United Kingdom slaughterhouses have both their carotid arteries severed;

(2) what proportion of broiler hens stunned in United Kingdom slaughterhouses are currently stunned using an average current of at least 150 milliamperes.

Mr. Soames: The information requested is not available.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from hill farming interests following his announcement to cut hill livestock compensatory allowances for sheep on 12 December.

Mr. Curry: A number of representations have been received on this matter from farming interests following my announcement on 10 December of the conditions for the 1993 HLCA scheme. The reductions in HLCAs were taken in the light of increased incomes in the hill sheep sector and will in any case be more than offset by increases in ewe premium payments next April resulting from green pound devaluations and decisions taken at the December Agriculture Council.

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact in the reduction of HLCA payments on sheep farmers in (a) Northumberland and (b) Tynedale; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The conditions of the HLCA scheme are determined on the basis of national statistical data and it is not possible to measure the impact on different localities. I have no reason to believe conditions for sheep farmers in Northumberland and in Tynedale are materially different from those obtaining elsewhere in the less-favoured areas in England. The HLCA reductions were taken in the light of increased incomes in the hill sheep sector and will in any case be more than offset by increases in ewe premium payments next April resulting from green pound devaluations and decisions taken at the December Agriculture Council.

Agricultural Training Board

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the present members of the Agricultural Training Board, their dates of appointment and length of appointment, relevant qualifications, any organisations they represent and the payments they receive from public funds in respect of these duties.

Mr. Curry: The national board of the Agricultural Training Board comprises a chairman, deputy chairman and nine members, one each representing employers and employees, three educational members and four members appointed under the Employment Act 1988. The details are as follows:

Name	Position	Date of appointment	Length of appointment	Qualifications and organisations represented	Payment from public funds
Andrew Stewart	Chairman	1 October 1992	2½ years	Farmer with extensive political and industrial experience.	£7,580/year if works an average of 1 day per week and travel and subsistence allowances.
Michael Curtis	Deputy Chairman	1 April 1992	3 years	Extensive industrial experience.	£6,950/year if works an average of 1 day per week and travel and subsistence allowances.
Rosemary Berry	Employment Act Appointee	1 April 1992	3 years	Practical farming background and Women's Farming Union Member.	Travelling and subsistence
Janet Buchanan-Smith	Employment Act Appointee	1 April 1992	3 years	Practical farming background and familiar with Scottish issues.	Travelling and subsistence
John Harries	Welsh Education Representative	1 April 1992	3 years	Senior Lecturer at Welsh Agricultural College.	Travelling and subsistence
Victor Hughes	Employment Act Appointee	1 April 1992	3 years	Former Principal at the Royal Agricultural College.	Travelling and subsistence.
Tom Jones	Employment Act Appointee	1 April 1992	3 years	Practical hill farming background in Wales.	Travelling and subsistence.

Name	Position	Date of appointment	Length of appointment	Qualifications and organisations represented	Payment from public funds

Michael Pollard	English Education Representative	1 April 1992	3 years	Principal of Askham Bryan College of Agriculture and Horticulture.	Travelling and subsistence.
Philip Thomas	Scottish Education Representative	1 April 1992	3 years	Principal and Chief Executive of the Scottish Agricultural Colleges.	Travelling and subsistence.

Pig Disease Eradication Fund Ltd.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of whether the terms of his recent announcement concerning the use of remaining funds collected by levy by the Pig Disease Eradication Fund Ltd. to compensate producers of pigs slaughtered to eradicate Aujeszky's disease requires amendment to paragraph 2(a) and (b) and paragraph 8 of the agreement between his predecessor and the Pig Disease Eradication Fund Ltd. on 11 March 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The agreement of 11 March 1983 concerns the detailed operation of the financial arrangements for fulfilling the primary purpose of the Pig Industry Levy Act 1983, which was to meet the costs of eradication of Aujeszky's disease. It does not deal with the situation envisaged in subsection 2(b), (3) and (7) of the Act, where sums collected under the levy are surplus to the primary requirements of the scheme.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he expects animal welfare regulations to fall within the scope of the subsidiarity agreement reached at the Edinburgh summit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Thanet, North (Mr. Gale) on 17 December, Official Report, column 353.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he will take to seek advice on the suitability of any transgenic animals produced for commercial keeping and rearing in terms of their health and welfare.

Mr. Soames: The Department is responsible for the health and welfare of all livestock on agricultural land. In our election manifesto we indicated that we would establish an ethical committee to look at the effects of advanced techniques in animal breeding, and we shall make an announcement about this as soon as possible.

Fish Inspectors

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many fish inspectors are employed in the United Kingdom; and what information he has on the numbers employed in Holland, France, Germany and Spain.

Mr. Curry: The current total number of land-based sea fisheries inspectors employed by United Kingdom Agricultural Departments is 159. A further 65 officers carry out fisheries protection duties through aerial and surface surveillance operations.

Comparison with other member states is not straightforward. In some cases responsibility is devolved to regional authorities; in other cases, fisheries inspection duties are carried out by staff with other functions, such as police and customs officers. The following information on numbers of fish inspectors employed in the Netherlands, France, Germany and Spain is contained in a Commission report on monitoring implementation of the common fisheries policy, published in March 1992. The information relates to land-based staff; no figures are available for those carrying out duties at sea.

	Port-based	HQ
United Kingdom	132	27
Netherlands	180	[2]—
France	[2]—	[2]—
Germany	47	[2]—
Spain	[2]—	[1]32

[1]Includes recruitment of 15 inspectors which was taking place at the time the data was collected.

Pesticides

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that imported pesticides are identical in all respects to United Kingdom products that have approval under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986.

Mr. Soames: A consultation paper was issued on 16 November 1992 seeking views on the proposed control arrangements for indentical imports of pesticides. All views received will be considered carefully and an announcement made in due course.

Fishing Communities (Assistance)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the decision reached at the Edinburgh summit on the package of measures to assist fishing communities known as objective 6.

Mr. Curry: The Edinburgh Council decided not to introduce a new objective 6, but agreed that "Appropriate attention should be given to the needs of areas dependent on fishing, within the relevant objectives"—that is, the existing objectives of the European structural funds.

The European Commission's proposals for revised structural funds regulations are expected in the near future and should include proposals to bring the European Council's decision into effect. The regulations are due to enter into force on 1 January 1994.

During negotiation of the regulations, the Government will seek to ensure that proper account can be taken under the objectives of the needs of United Kingdom areas which are dependent on fishing.

British Embassy, Madrid

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many staff of the British embassy in Madrid have been seconded from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Mr. Curry: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food currently has one member of staff on loan to Her Majesty's diplomatic service and based in the British embassy in Madrid.

Spanish Slaughterhouses

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make representations to the European Commission to make supervision of welfare standards in Spanish slaughterhouses more effective.

Mr. Soames: The Commission's attention is drawn to any evidence of contraventions of Community animal welfare legislation in other member states.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to ensure that British live animal exports to Spanish slaughterhouses meet all current standards on transport and slaughter regulations in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: All member states are required to implement directive 91/628/EEC on the protection of animals in transport and directive 74/577/EEC on the humane slaughter of animals. As announced in the reply given to my hon Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) on 16 December, specific safeguards have been agreed with the Spanish authorities for ensuring that animals exported for slaughter in Spain are slaughtered in accordance with Community welfare legislation.

Dietary Supplements Directive

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what implications the agreement at the Edinburgh summit about the dropping by the Commission of proposals for a number of measures have for the proposed directive on dietary supplements; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps he took at the recent Agriculture Council to seek the support of Ministers in other member Governments for his position on the forthcoming European directive on dietary supplements.

Mr. Soames: At the Edinburgh European Council the Commission presented the first fruits of its review of a range of Community legislation. The Commission's list will be subject to further discussion. Dietary supplements were not considered at the December Agriculture Council. Discussion, if and when it takes place, would be, as for other food matters, in the Internal Market Council.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the implications of the preliminary ruling of the European Court given on 28 October, published in the Official Journal on 21 November, on the meaning of medicinal product for the proposed directive on dietary supplements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The Commission has put forward no proposal on dietary supplements. The ruling of the European Court in case C219/91 has the effect of applying the law relating to medicinal products to products which are described as having prophylactic or therapeutic properties, even if they are generally regarded as foodstuffs and have no known effect in the light of the current state of scientific knowledge. The ruling may narrow the scope of a proposal on dietary supplements should the Commission choose to make one.

Agricultural Products

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list exports of (a) grain and (b) all agricultural products from each EC country and the USA for each year since 1973.

Mr. Curry: Comparable statistics on the trade of EC member states and the USA are given in the Food and Agriculture Organisation trade yearbooks, which are available in the House of Commons Library.

Fishing Quotas

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with representatives of the Northern Ireland Fish Producers Organisation and the Anglo North-Irish Fish Producers Association concerning quota allocations and the application of the Hague preference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Although I am aware of their concerns, these organisations have not contacted me directly, but Lord Arran, Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State with responsibility for fisheries in Northern Ireland, has been in close touch with me concerning these matters.

Departmental Property

Mr. Straw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list (a) the total number of residential properties owned by his Department, (b) the number of such properties which are empty and (c), (b) as a percentage of (a).

Mr. Curry: At 1 January 1993 the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food owned 143 houses of which nine, 6 per cent., were vacant.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future of the Forestry Commission.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer of 17 December 1992]: I have been asked to reply.

The Forestry Commission was reorganised in April 1992 with the aim of achieving a clearer distinction between its regulatory and advisory roles as a Government department and the management of its forests. The Government have no plans at present to make any further changes.

EMPLOYMENT

Energy Employment

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information she has on the number of people employed in (a) deep mining and (b) the offshore oil and gas industry in the United Kingdom.

Mr. McLoughlin: The available information is as follows:

Employees in employment: Great Britain October 1992

	Number
Deep coal mines	53,000
Extraction of mineral oil and natural gas	48,000

Unemployment

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will give the number and percentage of those unemployed and the numbers and percentage of those unemployed for 12 months and more in the west midlands and the Walsall travel-to-work area and the corresponding or nearest available information for May 1979.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library. Data relating to the numbers of claimant unemployed by duration, is available from October 1983 and only on a quarterly basis.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment is she will set minimum conditions for the training and enterprise councils in England in relation to representation of manufacturing industry on the boards of the TECs; what proposals she has to encourage competition in the formation of the boards of TECs; what studies she has made of the representation of different sections of business on the boards of all the TECs; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: We expect the private sector directors of training and enterprise council (TEC) boards broadly to reflect the pattern of employment in their area and this includes the manufacturing industry. It is for individual TECs to appoint directors in accordance with the broad criteria which my right hon. Friend has set out in the contract with the TECs. Regional directors cooperate with TECs to ensure that the needs of each local community are adequately represented.

Women's Earnings

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the number of women who have earnings below (a) the tax threshold and (b) the national insurance threshold, broken down into married women, lone parents and single women at the latest date.

Mr. McLoughlin: Broad estimates, based on the new earnings survey and estimates of the number of employees in employment, are as follows: in April 1992 there were 2·75 million women employees earning less than the PAYE threshold; of whom 2·25 million earned less than the national insurance lower earnings limit. Using the results of the family expenditure survey it is estimated that approximately 75 per cent. of each of these categories were married women, 5 per cent. lone parents and 20 per cent. single women.

Social Affairs

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the social affairs achievements of the United Kingdom presidency of the European Community.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The overall theme for the United Kingdom's Presidency in employment and social affairs was "A Community at Work".

Our key Presidency priority was to focus the attention of the Social Affairs Council more on the problem of rising unemployment throughout the European Community. As a result, a formal resolution on employment growth, proposed by the Presidency, was adopted unanimously by Employment Ministers at the Social Affairs Council in December, which is intended to pave the way for future discussions in the Council. The key elements of the resolution were:

- a commitment to economic growth, competitiveness and efficiency;
- a commitment not to impose unnecessary regulation which would hold back the creation and development of jobs;
- Community-wide practical help for unemployed people and the removal of obstacles to labour mobility;
- various ways in which the EC institutions and Member States can identify effective practice in tackling unemployment.

During the Presidency, we were also able to secure final agreement on the Directive on the Protection of Pregnant Workers, which will bring increased benefits to working women throughout the EC.

In addition, the following proposals were agreed or adopted by the Social Affairs Council: a Resolution on the acceptance of Member States' vocational qualifications throughout the Community; two Directives on minimum health and safety requirements in the extractive industries; a proposal for the introduction of a new, improved information system for the Community covering job vacancies, applications for work and living and working conditions in the EC; the introduction of a Community-wide labour force survey; and a Recommendation on promoting employees' financial participation in organisations for which they work.

The Social Affairs Council also agreed conclusions on the proper implementation and enforcement of Community legislation, which was another important theme of the United Kingdom Presidency.

Useful progress was also made on proposals on the free movement of workers, posted workers, the HELIOS II community action programme for people with disabilities, health and safety in work with biological agents, and work on board fishing vessels.

In addition, the United Kingdom Presidency hosted a productive Informal meeting of EC Employment and Social Affairs Ministers in Wales in October, at which employment and unemployment, implementation and enforcement, subsidiarity and the Pregnant Workers Directive were discussed; and also hosted a wide range of successful conferences and special events in many different parts of the United Kingdom, reflecting the United Kingdom's Presidency themes.

Departmental Property

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list (a) the total number of residential properties owned by her Department, (b) the number of such properties which are empty and (c), (b) as a percentage of (a).

Mr. McLoughlin: The Employment Department at present has 21 residential properties. Thirteen of these properties are currently empty, representing 62 per cent. of the total.

Training

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consultations she has had with the chairmen and women of the training and enterprise councils concerning the 16 and 17-year-olds not on training schemes, or in full-time education; what statistics she has in relation to the numbers of such young people; how many were (a) on a waiting list for youth training places, (b) have already started and left a youth training place and (c) other; and what proposals she has to widen the coverage of youth training placement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Departmental officials are carrying out reviews on a weekly basis with TECs which are responsible for the delivery of YT. We receive regular reports on TEC performance in the delivery of the YT guarantee. My right hon. Friend announced the estimated numbers of young people seeking training at national level in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Gedling (Mr. Mitchell) on 1 December 1992, Official Report, columns 127-28. More recent figures will be published when they are available.

Restart

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, for each region and for Great Britain as a whole how many unemployed people have been referred to Restart courses by Employment Service counsellors since January 1991; how many of them were unemployed for over two years; how many attended and completed the course; what were the outcomes of the participants; how many had benefit penalties imposed for not attending or failing to complete their attendance at the Restart course; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin [pursuant to his answer, 29 October 1992, c. 835-36]: The Chief Executive of the Employment Service has written further to the hon. Member.

Letter from M. Fogden to Ms. Clare Short, dated 11 January 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Question to her about Restart Courses. These are matters which fall within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Unfortunately, due to an administrative error, our reply of 29 October did not include the figures about Restart Courses. This reply now contains the tables; please accept my apologies for any inconvenience this has caused.

As you will know from previous correspondence Restart Courses are short courses aimed at helping people who are having the most difficulty returning to work. They are not an alternative to regular job search or other employment or training programmes. Essentially they provide people with the opportunity to explore all the options open to them and give them confidence to take the next step back to work.

Since December 1990 people who have been unemployed for two years or more who at their Restart interview refuse or fail to take up a place on an Employment Department employment or training programme are required to attend a Restart Course.

As your question has raised a number of specific points, I am setting out the information you have asked for in the two tables attached—one deals with all Restart Course attenders, the other just those covered by the requirement to attend. As explained in my previous answer, we collect at a Regional level the number of people who are referred to the course who are also unemployed for years or more. We have however not felt it necessary to keep similar figures for all those referred. The Benefits Agency make the decision on whether an individual's benefit should be reduced for failure to attend or complete the course. Their figures are compiled by their Districts which have different boundaries from those of our Regions. To avoid confusion, I have given the national figure only.

I hope this is helpful.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

All restart course attenders January 1991 to June 1992

DEFENCE

Somalia

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United Kingdom forces personnel are being made available to assist the United States humanitarian intervention in Somalia; and what is the total cost and time scale of the United Kingdom's military contribution.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The British contribution has taken the form of two RAF Hercules transport aircraft, accompanied by about 90 supporting personnel. Our aircraft are based at Mombasa in Kenya, and have been operating with US aircraft since 12 December in transporting humanitarian aid from Kenya to Somalia.

This deployment is based on an initial three-month period. It is too early to provide an accurate estimate as to the total cost of our military contribution.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the extent of United Kingdom armed forces commitment to the United Nations sponsored multinational relief operation in Somalia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom contribution is in the form of two RAF Hercules transport aircraft, accompanied by about 90 supporting RAF personnel.

Our aircraft are based at Mombasa, Kenya and are engaged in the transport of humanitarian aid to affected areas inside Somalia.

Overseas Exercises

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the overseas Army exercises in each of the past three years, and for 1992-93 to date, for which chartered airlift was used, showing the costs, the budget on which they were borne, and the reasons for the use of commercial aircraft.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table. All costs, except for one exercise, were borne in the centrally managed air charter budget. The exception was Exercise Medman, in May 1992, which was funded by the Army. Ordinarily airlift is provided by the RAF air transport force (ATF) although demand does exceed supply. Exercises which do not secure ATF support are, in most cases, not considered sufficiently important to warrant civil airlift.

Note:

A = Far East—out of theatre training
It is less expensive to use local airlines for exercises in the Far East than to position ATF aircraft from the United Kingdom.

B = Operation Granby
The ATF was fully committed throughout the Gulf conflict and the subsequent withdrawal, necessitating use of commercial charter flights to meet exercise commitments.

C = Substitution
An unplanned VIP task for the then Secretary of State for Defence was met by the ATF, and a substitute aircraft was obtained from commercial sources for the exercise.

D = Outsize load
Civil Charter was procured to move an outsize load. The task was beyond the capability of ATF aircraft.

E = Priority of exercise
HQ British Army of the Rhine considered that the priority of the exercise, which had failed to secure ATF airlift, warranted air charter and met the costs from their own resources.

Regimental Bands

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received concerning the future of regimental bands; if he will make it his policy to encourage regiments to retain their regimental bands; and what is his policy on the future of the regimental system for the Army.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have received a small number of representations on the future of regimental bands. Consideration is being given to the future organisation of Army bands, but no decisions have yet been taken. We are fully committed to the preservation of the regimental system, which is so important to the fighting efficiency and morale of the units within it.

Bosnia

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what provision has been made to equip the British forces in Bosnia with clothing and protection to enable them to operate and survive in sub-zero temperatures.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: British forces deployed with the UN in the former Yugoslavia have been provided with clothing and equipment appropriate to the conditions in country. Tented accommodation used on initial deployment is currently being replaced with portacabin-type facilities that can withstand the winter conditions. Action has also been taken to ensure that, if the weather conditions in Yugoslavia become harsher than expected, we can quickly provide troops with additional clothing and equipment.

Army Pensions

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many attributable pensions have been paid to former Army personnel by his Department in each of the last three years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is understood that this question was raised in connection with multiple sclerosis.

The number of soldiers medically discharged due to multiple sclerosis in each of the last three years is:

	Number
1990	4
1991	nil
1992	4

The number of soldiers awarded attributable pensions following medical discharge due to multiple sclerosis in each of the last three years is:

	Number
1990	4
1991	nil
1992	[1]2

[1] Final awards in 2 cases remain under consideration.

Trident Submarines

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will consult the nuclear installations inspectorate before taking a decision on the siting of the facilities for the refitting of Trident submarines.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Consultation with the nuclear installations inspectorate on the reprovision of facilities for refitting nuclear submarines will take place once a decision has been taken on where the facilities should be sited and when a licencing application has been formally submitted.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the proposals from Devonport Management Ltd. for the upgrading of existing facilities at Devonport dockyard for the refitting of Trident submarines have been approved by the nuclear installations inspectorate.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Neither the proposal made by Devonport Management Limited or that by Babcock Thorn Limited for provision of Trident facilities at Devonport or Rosyth have yet been formally submitted for approval by the nuclear installations inspectorate, nor would we expect them to be submitted until such time as a final decision is made on the future venue for refitting of nuclear submarines.

Service Pensions

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what would be the cost to Her Majesty's Government of raising henceforth the service retired pay of those servicemen who retired between 1950 and 1959, inclusive, to the level of the 1960 pension code.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what would be the cost to Her Majesty's Government of raising henceforth the forces family pensions and attributable forces family pensions of widows of servicemen who retired or died between 1950 and 1959, inclusive, to the level of widows of servicemen who retired under the 1960 pension code.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The 1960 pension code is applicable only to officers and their dependants. It is estimated that the cost of increasing the service retired pay of officers would be in the region of £6 million to £7 million per annum and that the cost of increasing the pension payable to widows would be in the region of £2 million to £2·5 million per annum.

Otterburn Camp

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many jobs are directly and indirectly dependent on the Otterburn camp.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Some 143 civilian (including 15 seasonal casual) posts and six military posts are directly dependent on the Otterburn training area. A further eight civilians are employed by contractors, and there are 76 adult civilians on tenanted farms.

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has to upgrade existing roads in the Otterburn camp to cope with increased activity.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: While there are no plans to upgrade roads within Otterburn camp itself my Department is considering a number of options for the roads in the training area as a whole. It is too early to say what our eventual requirements will be, but we will be consulting the Northumberland national park authority on these.

Departmental Property

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the total number of residential properties owned by his Department, (b) the number of such properties which are empty and (c) (b) as a percentage of (a), showing separate figures for service and civilian properties.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 30 September 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, the stock and vacancy position of residential properties in MOD ownership was as follows:

	Stock	Vacancies	Percentage vacant
Service married quarters	72,202	9,167	12·7
Civilian houses	744	154	20·7
Total	72,946	9,321	12·8

Many of these properties were either undergoing or awaiting major maintenance work or modernisation, some were already allocated to Service families who were due to move in shortly and others were being considered for disposal. Of the vacant civilian houses 88 were leased properties at Faslane awaiting return to Dumbarton district council. In addition some 1,800 married quarters and some 780 civilian houses, mostly occupied, were in the process of being sold.

Submarine Notification Scheme

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what discussions his Department has had with fishermen and the coastguard service regarding the extension of the Subfacts notification scheme to all fishing areas; when he expects the extensions to take place; and if he will make a statement;

(2) why the extension of the Subfacts submarine notification scheme to the Minches and Hebrides has been delayed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The notification scheme has been operating successfully in the inner Clyde since December 1990 and has subsequently been extended to cover submarine exercise areas in the outer Clyde and at Rona and Raasay. Following discussions with representatives of the fishing industry in the fishing industry safety group, we are planning a further extension of the scheme to cover other regularly used submarine exercise areas off the west coast of Scotland and in the English channel. We are considering, in consultation with HM Coastguard and others, the detailed operating arrangements for the extended scheme, and will make an announcement as soon as possible.

Defence Research Agency

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the rationalisation of the Defence Research Agency.

Mr. Aitken: [pursuant to his answer, 17 December 1992, c. 361]: As I informed the House on 27 October, Official Report, column 851, the Defence Research Agency has proposed a major rationalisation programme with a view to saving £90 million per annum in its running costs and releasing substantial areas of land for other uses. The DRA's support costs are disproportionately high and must be reduced to preserve the research capabilities we need to support smaller, better equipped armed forces. Following consultations with trade unions, a programme for rationalisation of the DRA's sites and services has been agreed. This includes:

a. Substantial DRA investment at:

- Farnborough
- Pyestock
- Fort Halstead
- Malvern
- Bincleaves
- Chertsey
- Haslar
- Portsdown West
- West Drayton
- Aquila
- Rosyth (South Arm)
- Winfrith

b. DRA withdrawal from:

- Alverstoke
- Bedford Airfield (enclave retained)
- Christchurch (enclave retained)
- Cobham
- Dunfermline (St. Leonards)
- Empress State Building
- Funtingdton (South)
- Holton Heath
- Horsea Island
- Portland (North and Southwell)
- Portsdown (Main)
- Royal Arsenal Woolwich (East and West)
- Slough
- Swynnerton
- Teddington

The planned dates for site closures and DRA withdrawal remain as set out in the DRA consultative document.

The Government are committed to developing the DRA as a centre of scientific excellence offering value for money. Rationalisation will involve a major upheaval but is essential to secure the DRA's future. Implementation of the programme will start immediately.

SCOTLAND

Peebles High School

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what provision has been made for the updating of hutted accommodation at Peebles high school.

Mr. Lang: Decisions on the updating of accommodation at Peebles high school are for Borders regional council as the education authority.

Business Rate

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to implement a Scottish business rate comparable to that of England and Wales.

Mr. Lang: Our policy is to phase in aScottish business rate comparable to that in England and Wales in parallel with the phasing in of the effects of the 1990 revaluation and the national non-domestic rate in England and Wales. This is expected to be completed by 1995 or shortly thereafter. The value of the reduction made in Scottish rate poundages since 1990-91 is equivalent to a reduction of £280 million in this year's rates bill for non-domestic subjects and a further £68 million reduction will be made in 1993-94.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment has been made of the current and future financial implications for Scottish Nuclear Ltd. and for his Department in the future, of the establishment of a temporary store for waste nuclear fuel at Torness power station.

Mr. Stewart: I understand from Scottish Nuclear Ltd. that it expects that establishment of spent fuel storage facilities at Torness and Hunterston power stations would reduce charges to the profit and loss account by around £45 million next year. My right hon. Friend will not take a decision on SNL's proposals until he has considered the reporter's recommendations following the public inquiry now being held. The setting of SNL's external financial limit, which is a charge on the Scottish Office programme, takes account of the company's operating and other costs.

Homelessness

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many homeless households are currently living in temporary accommodation in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The latest complete information on numbers of homeless households living in temporary accommodation in Scotland is published in table 11 of the statistical bulletin HSG/1992/6, "Operation of the Homeless Persons Legislation in Scotland 1980/81 to 1991/92". The bulletin is available in the House Library.

Skye Bridge

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those bodies and individuals who have made representations to him in support of (a) the design of and (b) the high-toll principle on the proposed Skye bridge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: From extensive consultations conducted by means of presentations and public exhibitions attended by environmental bodies, elected bodies and the public there was clear evidence of support for the design of the Skye bridge. Highland regional council, Skye and Lochalsh district council, the Countryside Commission for Scotland and the Association for the Protection of Rural Scotland all favoured the box-girder design, as did the public with a majority of two to one preferring the present design.

Before tendering for a privately funded toll bridge, with the level of tolls set no higher than existing ferry fares for a duration of up to 20 years, support was given by HRC, Skye and Lochalsh district council, Highlands and Islands Enterprise—formerly Highlands and Islands Development Board—and the majority of community councils of Skye and Lochalsh. Before accepting the winning tender in September 1991 the project was again presented to Highland regional council, which voted by a substantial majority to proceed with the toll bridge in preference to continuing with the ferries.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland under what circumstances it will be possible for the concessionaire of the proposed Skye bridge to increase tolls by more than the annual rate of inflation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 December 1992]: The concessionaire cannot increase the tolls above the rate of inflation except in the unlikely event that the average annual revenues, measured over a full three-year period, were to fall below the 1990 level. In such circumstances the concessionaire is permitted to increase the tolls above inflation by the same percentage as the revenue falls below the 1990 figure. Under no circumstances can the tolls be raised above the rate of inflation by more than 30 per cent. If traffic levels then return to 1990 levels or above, the increase over inflation requires to be removed. No increases above inflation can be introduced prior to November 1997. The full details of the arrangement are described in the made toll order for the scheme a copy of which my right hon. Friend has arranged to be placed in the Library.

Toll Bridges

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the current level of tolls in Scotland, on bridges for which he has a responssibility.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The current level of tolls in Scotland, on bridges for which my right hon. Friend has a responsibility is as follows:

Bridges	Tolls
Erskine Bridge[1]	60p
Forth Road Bridge[2]
Cars	40p
Buses	70p
Heavy Vehicles	£1·00
Tay Road Bridge[2]
Cars, light vehicles and scheduled buses	80p
Heavy Vehicles	£2·00

Motor cycles cross all 3 bridges free of toll.

[1] Concessions available for regular users.
[2] One-way toll (southbound)—northbound is free.

The Forth Road Bridge Joint Board and Tay Road Bridge Joint Board have statutory responsibility for their respective bridges. Erskine bridge is the responsibility of the Secretary of State.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the toll levels on bridges in Scotland for which he is responsible at the time of their opening (a) in cash terms and (b) at current value, taking account of inflation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

	(a) Actual toll levels in cash terms on bridge opening	(b) Estimated toll levels at opening at current value (November 1992)
Erskine Bridge—Opened 2 July 1971
Cars, light passengers and goods vehicles	15p	£1·05
Scheduled buses	25p	£1·75
Heavy vehicles	50p	£3·50
Forth Road Bridge—Opened 4 September 1964
All vehicles (flat rate)	2s 6d (12½p)	£1·28
Tay Road Bridge—Opened 18 August 1966
Motor cycles and cars	2s 6d (12½p)	£1·18
Buses and heavy vehicles	10s 0d (50p)	£4·71

Ferry Services

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will define the ownership of, and rights of access to, the ferry terminals at Kyle and Kyleakin.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The roads leading up to, and including, the slipways at Kyle of Lochalsh and Kyleakin are owned by my right hon. Friend and Highland regional council respectively. Traffic management, including the application of restrictions on the use of the slipways, is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend, as trunk roads authority, at Kyle of Lochalsh and of Highland regional council, as local roads authority, at Kyleakin. Additionally, Highland regional council, as harbour authority, may regulate the use of the slipways under the powers of the Highland Regional Council (Harbours) Order Confirmation Act 1991.

Criminal Inquiries

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidelines the Lord Advocate lays down for those conducting criminal inquiries, in substance, on his behalf, on the practice of giving interviews to the press.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The then Lord Advocate issued guidelines to chief constables on dealings with the press in relation to criminal inquiries in July 1983. These guidelines were also issued to procurators fiscal. They are kept under review in the light of changes and developments in the law. They cover what may be said at various stages of inquiries.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action the Lord Advocate intends to take as a result of the premature disclosure of the conclusions of the inquiry conducted by Mr. Nimmo Smith.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The conclusions of Mr. Nimmo Smith and Mr. Friel following their inquiry have not been disclosed. It is intended that their report will be published before the end of January, as my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has already made known.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether it was with the authority of the Lord Advocate that Mr. Nimmo Smith QC gave interviews to journalists about the inquiry that he is currently conducting for the Lord Advocate.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The remit of my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate to Mr. Nimmo Smith and Mr. Friel was that they should exercise the fullest possible independence of judgment in conducting their investigation. Authority to speak to journalists was not therefore sought by them.

Children (Special Needs)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a list setting out the percentage of children recorded as having special needs in primary schools in each local education authority area in 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 30 November 1992]: Information on the percentage of education authority primary school pupils for whom a record of needs is maintained is shown in the table. Information for 1992 is not yet available.

Prison Service

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the total expenditure by the Scottish Office in the training and recruitment of professional staff for the Scottish prison service in each of the past three financial years; what innovations have been implemented in training and recruitment; and if he will make a statement on future plans and expenditure.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 7 December 1992]: Major changes have been made in training policy with substantially increased investment in prison staff training and innovative training programmes. Future expenditure plans for the Scottish prison service will be announced next February in the Scottish Office departmental report. No diminution is planned in the Scottish prison service's investment in training.

Total expenditure on training and recruitment of prison staff in each of the last three financial years:

	1990-91	1991-92	£000 1992-93 (budget
Training costs (trainer staff costs and GAE)	2,747	2,297	3,609
Staff time devoted to training person weeks (approx)	2,750	3,900	[1]4,250
Recruitment (staff and GAE)	451	72	158
(Numbers recruited)	(149)	(374)	2

[1] (estimated)
[2] (projected)

Total prison staff numbers have increased from 3,966 on 1 April 1990 to 4,405 (projected) on 1 April 1993 (excluding HQ staff).

Care and Repair Schemes

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what evaluation has been made by the Scottish Office of care and repair projects in Scotland; and what budget has been allocated by the Scottish Office for the continuation of such projects in the current and next financial year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 December 1992]: I am pleased to say that on 7 December the Scottish Homes board agreed to take over central responsibility for care and repair from 1 April 1993, including the funding of local projects. This transfer was recommended in the consultants' evaluation report on the initiative, published in February 1992, and by the independent National Advisory Committee on Care and Repair. Scottish Homes' allocation for 1993-94 includes an estimated £70,000 for transitional costs relating to care and repair including £10,000 for a good practice guide.

Councillors

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many elected councillors in Scottish local authorities there are at present; and how many he plans there should be after the proposed changes to unitary councils.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 16 December 1992]: There are presently 1,682 councillors in local authorities in Scotland—445 regional councillors, 79 islands councillors and 1,158 district councillors. No decision has been taken on how many councillors will be required following the restructuring of local government. That will depend in part upon the size and number of single-tier authorities which are created. Before he reaches a decision on the appropriate number of councillors for the new structure my right hon. Friend will be considering carefully all the views which are expressed in response to the consultation paper "The Structure of Local Government in Scotland: Shaping the New Councils".

European Council, Edinburgh

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish (a) his estimate of expenditure on security and police expenditure in connection with the European summit to be held in Edinburgh on 10 to 12 December and (b) the eventual total expenditure; if he will reconsider his decision not to provide additional funding for Lothian and Borders police board to cover this additional expenditure; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 December 1992]: Lothian and Borders police estimate that the cost of providing security and policing for the European summit will be £2·5 million. Total expenditure will not be known until around February 1993.

The Government will contribute to the costs of policing the summit through police specific grant. This is the usual arrangement and my right hon. Friend has no plans to review the financing of the policing of such major events. The rate of specific grant is 51 per cent., except in London where it is 52 per cent.

Ex-psychiatric Patients (Offences)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each year since 1980 the number of people charged with criminal offences who were formerly in-patients of psychiatric hospitals.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 17 December 1992]: The information requested is not collected centrally.

EC Acquired Rights Directive

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the EC Acquired Rights directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 December 1992]: I have received a small number of representations on the EC acquired rights directive 77/187 and the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations which implement this directive in the United Kingdom. The directive and regulations can apply to the contracting out of public sector services where it can be shown that there has been a transfer of undertaking. This has to be considered against the facts of each particular case.

SSSIs

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current number of sites of special scientific interest in Scotland; and how many proposed designations for sites of special scientific interest are currently pending.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 11 December 1992]: A total of 1,353 sites of special scientific interest have been notified in Scotland. A further 11 cases are currently proposed for notification.

Betting Offices

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding the evening opening of betting offices in Scotland (a) in general and (b) from Scotland's senior police officers.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 December 1992]: Eight Scottish organisations submitted responses to the Home Office consultation document, "Evening Opening of Licensed Betting Offices", published in October 1991. Three further Scottish organisations made representations via Members of Parliament. The 11 organisations are listed in the table:

The Convention of Scottish Local Authorities
Association of Chief Police Officers (Scotland)
Association of Scottish Police Superintendents
Scottish Police Federation
Scottish SP Bookmakers' Association
Scottish Consumer Council
City of Glasgow Licensing Board

Wishaw Greyhound Stadium
Edgar Ramsay Bookmakers
East of Scotland Bookmakers Association
Shawfield Greyhound Racing and Leisure Company.

Hospital Closures

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list hospitals which have (a) partially and (b) wholly closed, during 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 15 December 1992]: The information requested on hospitals wholly closed is as detailed in the table. During the same period 31 health service buildings were opened at a total capital cost of £178 million. The information requested on partial closures is not available centrally.

Empty Office Buildings

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated number of empty office buildings in (a) Glasgow and (b) Edinburgh on 30 November; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 December]: No record is kept of the number of empty office buildings in city or town centres, but my right hon. Friend is kept abreast of general market trends drawing on sources such as external published research by property agents, developers and others. This indicates that available office floorspace is currently approximately as follows:

Glasgow City Centre—1·2m square feet
Edinburgh City Centre—1·87m square feet

Asbestos

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing (a) asbestos-related deaths and (b) asbestos-related disorders for each regional and island area since 1979.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 15 December 1992]: Since the tabulated information will be lengthy, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Health Service Contracts

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list each contract made with NHS trusts by (a) the Scottish Office and (b) the health boards for the most recent available year.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 15 December 1992]: The contracts made between NHS trusts and the Scottish Office in the financial year 1992-93 are:

Cardiac Surgery
Aberdeen Royal Hospitals Trust

The Reference Laboratory Services
Aberdeen Royal Hospitals Trust

Details of contracts between health boards and NHS trusts are not held centrally.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the contracts awarded by (a) the Argyll and Clyde health board and (b) the Greater Glasgow health board to outside parties in relation to the process of compulsory competitive tendering, in each of the past four yeaers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 15 December 1992]: The contracts awarded were as follows:

Type of contract	Year
	1989		1990		1991		1992
	[1]A	B	A	B	A	B	A	B

Grounds maintenance	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	6
Totals	2	11	—	8	3	2	6	15

[1]A—Argyll and Clyde Health Board.
B—Greater Glasgow Health Board.
[2]Hotel services is used in this contexst to describe a combined contract covering domestic, catering and portering services.

Since the introduction of the competitive tendering initiative in the NHS, Argyll and Clyde health board has awarded 40 contracts of which 11, 28 per cent., have been won by private contracts. Greater Glasgow health board has let 78 contracts of which 39, 50 per cent., were to outside firms. Throughout Scotland 86 out of a total of 351 contracts, 25 per cent., have been awarded privately.

The Government's White Paper "Competing for Quality" (Command Paper 1730), sets out a programme for extending market testing to a wider range of activities. As a result of market testing in the NHS in Scotland, over £90 million has been saved. This money has been retained by health boards for re-investment in patient care.

Ambulance Service

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table of ambulance services' response rates in relation to the patients charter; by what other criteria these services are assessed for effectiveness and efficiency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 15 December 1992]: The Scottish Ambulance Service measures its performance against national targets, often referred to as the ORCON standards. The targets in response to emergency and 999 calls have been set having regard to population density and are as follows:

Population density	50 per cent. of calls responded to within (minutes)	95 per cent. of calls responded to within (minutes)
High	7	14
Medium	8	18
Sparse	8	21

For the period 1 April to 30 September 1992 the Scottish Ambulance Service achieved the following response rates:

	Target	Achievement	Target	Achievement
High population density	50 per cent of calls within 7 minutes	44 per cent.	95 per cent of calls within 14 minutes	87 per cent.
Medium population density	50 per cent. of calls within 8 minutes	53 per cent.	95 per cent. of calls within 18 minutes	94 per cent.
Sparse population density	50 per cent. of calls within 8 minutes	47 per cent.	95 per cent. of calls within 21 minutes	89 per cent.

Response rates are currently the main measure of performance but level and nature of complaints is also an important indicator of the quality of service. The general manager of the Scottish Ambulance Service has been asked to consider devising further performance indicators which will measure effectiveness, efficiency and economy. In addition, the new consultant medical director will be conducting a medical audit of the outcome of pre-hospital care provided by ambulance staff.

During the last year the Scottish Ambulance Service has made significant improvements to the quality and speed of its accident and emergency response by the introduction of paramedic rapid response units mounted in either LandRover Discoverys or on motor cycles. Furthermore, recognising the special problems the service has in responding to calls in Greater Glasgow, the accident and emergency service has recently been enhanced by an additional 14 full-time qualified ambulance personnel.

From 1 April 1993, the service will be improving its overall level and speed of response across Scotland, particularly in rural areas, by introducing the United Kingdom's first integrated air ambulance service, which will employ three air ambulance helicopters and three fixed-wing aircraft.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice his officials give to those ambulance services which are deemed to be inefficient in relation to (a) the patients charter and (b) ORCON in relation to response rates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 15 December 1992]: The general manager of the Scottish Ambulance Service is accountable to the Common Services Agency for the performance of the Scottish Ambulance Service. However, my officials in the Scottish Office Home and Health Department hold regular meetings with senior staff of the Common Services Agency and encourage measures aimed to improve response rates having regard to the resources made available.

Drugs

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sums of money were expended by the Scottish Office in relation to the European Drugs Prevention Week, (a) additional to those in existing annual programmes and (b) in total; and for what specific purposes in each case.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 15 December 1992]: Final payments have not yet been made in respect of some activities, but total Scottish Office expenditure on European Drug Prevention Week is expected to be about £225,000. This includes expenditure on local activities and events organised by health boards and others (£75,000); the production by Strathclyde Education Department of an updated video package for use in Scottish schools entitled "Drugwise Too" (£50,000); television advertising before and during the week (£41,000); the production and provision of publicity and information materials for use during the week (£27,750); three Scottish conferences held during the week (£22,500); and the production and distribution of an information booklet entitled "Drugs —A Guide for Young People in Scotland" (£10,500). The costs were met from provision for publicity about the risks of drug misuse and printing of associated materials; no additional funds were provided.

Local Authority Contracts

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the contracts awarded to outside parties in relation to compulsory competitive tendering by (a) Inverclyde district council and (b) Strathclyde regional council in each of the past four years.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 15 December 1992]: This information is not held centrally.

Hypothermia

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) men and (b) women have died of hypothermia in (i) the parliamentary constituency of Greenock and Port Glasgow, (ii) Strathclyde and (iii) Scotland in each of the last five years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 15 December 1992]: The figure requested are given in the table.

Deaths with any mention of hypothermia on the death certificate 1987-91

Water Authorities

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much grant assistance was given to each water authority in Scotland in each financial year since 1989-90.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 16 December 1992]: Details of grant assistance to water authorities in the period from 1989-90 to 1991-92 under the Rural Water Supply and Sewerage Acts 1944 to 1970 and the Industrial Development Act 1982, and payment to water authorities under the European regional development fund are given in the tables. The table for ERDF includes payments to the Central Scotland Water Development Board.

A96

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will announce the route and commencement date for the Fochabers bypass on the A96.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 16 December 1992]: The Government have a very large rolling programme of improvements on the A96. An important element within this is the construction of major bypasses. Bucksburn is currently under construction and Kintore and Keith have also been announced as planned starts. The Government wish to target the maximum resources possible at construction, so preparation for further bypasses is, and will be, pursued in line with expectations for construction funding. The entry of Fochabers to the trunk road preparation programme will continue to be kept under review.

That said, Grampian regional council is currently undertaking a study to determine traffic management arrangements best suited to minimise delays to through traffic in Fochabers and Mosstodloch and also to consider the complementary need for traffic calming measures to establish an environment which supports pedestrian activity.

Private Finance

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in what areas of his Department's responsibilities he has introduced, or may introduce, private finance; and if he will describe in each case the procedures by which private finance is sought.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 17 December 1992]: The combined use of public and private funds is of long standing in certain areas within my responsibility, for example, some of the functions of Scottish Enterprise and Scottish Homes. My Departments are now considering how, most effectively and most fully, to apply the private finance initiatives to other services on the basis of the guidance which has recently been published by the Treasury.

Care and Repair Schemes

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the total Scottish Office funding allocation to date to care and repair schemes organised by Shelter in Scotland, listed on an annual basis per project.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 9 December 1992]: The Scottish Office pays 100 per cent. of the costs of the national co-ordinating office for the care and repair initiative run by Shelter and 50 per cent. of the administrative costs of the local projects. The figures requested are as follows to the nearest £1,000:

	1987-88 (£)	1988-89 (£)	1989-90 (£)	1990-91[1] (£)	1991-92[1] (£)	Grant allocation for 1992-93[2]

ENVIRONMENT

Water

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the current EC directives relating to water quality and the compliance rates of each member state.

Mr. Maclean: Current EC directives are listed in the Directory of Community Legislation in Force and Other Acts of the Community Institutions, which is available in the Library of the House. This includes those on water quality. Information on member states' progress in transposing environmental (including water quality) directives into national law was published in the Official Journal of the European Communities (No. C 250) on 28 September 1992.

Joint Nature Conservation Committee

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the findings of the recent Treasury review of the Joint Nature Conservation Committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The review of the committee's staff support unit was commissioned by English Nature, the Countryside Council for Wales, and Scottish National Heritage. The report's findings are available to all the staff concerned, but it is an internal management document and the councils have no plans to publish it more widely.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those conservations projects, programmes or contracts which were due to be carried out by the Joint Nature Conservation Committee in 1992-93 or 1993-94 which will no longer be carried out by the committee.

Mr. Maclean: These are matters for the committee and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member in respect of the 1992-93 work programme. The committee will decide its programme for 1993-94 when its budget for that year has been determined.

Homelessness

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to visit the homeless in (a) London and (b) Folkestone during the Christmas period.

Mr. Howard: I have visited and met homeless people in the past, and did so again during the Christmas period. But in general I do not consider it appropriate to publicise such visits.

Both Ministers and officials from this Department make regular visits to projects throughout England which give practical help to homeless people, with financial support from the Government.

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost to local authorities in England and Wales of providing bed-and-breakfast accommodation for those families officially registered as homeless in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Baldry: The final estimate of the net cost to local authorities of providing bed-and-breakfast accommodation to homeless households in England in 1990-91 was £66·6 million. Information for 1991-92 is not yet available.

For information about Wales, I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the total number of homeless households recorded as living in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in each of the following years: 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Baldry: Estimates for calendar years of the average number of households who were being dealt with under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1985 and were temporarily placed in bed-and-breakfast accommodation are as follows:

Average for year ending December	Households in bed and breakfast
1989	11,500
1990	11,810
1991	12,470

For the year ending September 1992 the average number of households in bed and breakfast accommodation had fallen to 11,880.

Local Authority Accommodation

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the average cost to a local authority per household in (a) bed-and-breakfast accommodation, (b) local authority hostels, (c) local authority short-life accommodation and (d) temporary accommodation.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the average cost per unit of accommodation in (a) bed-and-breakfast accommodation, (b) local authority hostels, (c) local authority short-life accommodation and (d) temporary accommodation, to a local authority (i) in the Greater London area and (ii) elsewhere in England.

Mr. Baldry: Annual costs for bed-and-breakfast accommodation used and hostel places provided by local authorities, together with the related numbers of accommodation units, can be derived from the information published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy (CIPFA) in "Homelessness Statistics 1990-91 Actuals", a copy of which is in the Library.

The CIPFA publication contains insufficient information on short-life and other temporary accommodation to derive average costs per household.

Expenditure information on homeless households in other forms of temporary accommodation is not available centrally and my Department has no estimates.

Coal-fired Power Stations

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the tonnage of fly ash emitted daily to the environment from a typical 2000 MW coal-fired power station.

Mr. Maclean: Approximately 23 tonnes.

Council House Sales

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by district authorities the number and value of council house sales in Nottinghamshire in each year since 1983 and for the first two quarters of 1992-93.

Mr. Baldry: Information on sales of council houses reported by local authorities in Nottinghamshire in the period April 1983 to September 1992 is given in the table.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the basis for calculating capital receipts of council house and other asset sales for the next 12 months.

Mr. Baldry: Estimates of local authorities' capital receipts are based on information which authorities themselves supply to my Department. This information is provided in relation to financial years and no estimate has been made of receipts likely to arise over the next 12 months.

Housing

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account is taken in determining the housing investment programme allocation of the west midlands region, of the number of unsatisfactory houses in multiple occupation and unfit owner-occupied properties.

Mr. Baldry: Specified capital grant (SCG) resources for private sector renewal in local authority housing investment programmes (HIPs) are allocated to the west midlands and other regions using a formula based on the numbers of private dwellings classified as unfit or lacking basic amenities. These dwellings include both houses in multiple occupation and owner-occupied properties. Forty per cent. of SCG resources at regional level are then distributed to individual local authorities within the region using the same measures, with the remaining 60 per cent. of resources allocated at Ministers' discretion.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is (a) the number and (b) the proportion of (i) houses in multiple occupation and (ii) single household homes in England lacking adequate fire precautions or means of escape in case of fire.

Mr. Baldry: The information is not available.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total of capital and revenue expenditure by local authorities in England in respect of dealing with unsatisfactory houses in multiple occupation in 1991-92.

Mr. Baldry: In 1991-92 a total of £6·7 million was approved by local housing authorities in England for capital expenditure on mandatory grants for houses in multiple occupation (HMO), and £0·3 million on discretionary HMO grants. Figures for revenue expenditure incurred by local authorities in dealing with HMOs are not available.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what effect the existence of mandatory housing in multiple occupation grants has had on improving conditions within multi-occupied houses and on the activities of local authorities in respect of the implementation of part XI of the Housing Act 1985.

Mr. Baldry: Grants for houses in multiple occupation (HMO) are mandatory where a statutory notice has been served. Since the new grant system was introduced in July 1990, mandatory grants for repairs and improvements to more than 1,750 HMOs at a total cost of £13·6 million have been approved by local authorities.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the number of houses in multiple occupation in the west midland region; and how many of these are below the standards set out in the Department of the Environment circular 12/92;

(2) how many people are currently living in houses in multiple occupation in England;

(3) how many houses in multiple occupation there were in England (a) in 1984-85 and (b) at the last date for which figures are available.

Mr. Baldry: The results of the 1991 Census, which provides information on the total number of Houses in Multiple Occupation (HMOs), are not yet fully available. However, based on the 1981 Census results, the number of HMOs in the West Midlands is estimated at 5,250. This covers the counties of Shropshire, Staffordshire, Warwickshire, Hereford and Worcester and the Birmingham conurbation. Information is not held centrally on the numbers which are below the standards set out in circular 12/92.

There are no reliable figures for the total number of HMOs or for the total number of people living in HMOs. Research carried out for the Department showed that in 1983-84, local authorities in England and Wales estimated that there were approximately 300,000 HMOs. Figures from the 1991 census show that there were 59,000 "shared dwellings" in England and Wales.

As for the number of HMO residents, research carried out for the Department in the mid-1980s produced estimates of between 1·25 and 2·6 million in England and Wales.

More up-to-date figures on the number of HMOs and the number of HMO residents will be available from the 1991 English House Condition Survey, to be published later in 1993. Figures from the 1991 census on the number of HMO residents will be available in due course.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many notices were served by local authorities in England in the 12 months to June 1992 under sections 352, 358 and 372 of the Housing Act 1985; how many directions under section 354 were made in that period; how many of these notices were complied with; in how many cases local authorities carried out work in default of compliance with the notices; and how many prosecutions were taken as the result of failure to comply with notices.

Mr. Baldry: The following figures are taken from the Institution of Environmental Health Officers Annual Report 1990-91 survey of local authorities in England and Wales. 2,309 notices were served under section 352. 719 notices were served under section 372, 403 of which were complied with (including those complied with by means of the local authority carrying out the works). 90 convictions were obtained for failure to comply with section 369, and 12 for failure to comply with a notice requiring works under section 372. Of the directions in force under section 354 at 21 March 1991, 4,202 were complied with and 618 were not complied with. 640 directions were revoked by the local authority or by a county court, and 653 directions were made during the year. No figures are available centrally on the number of notices served under section 358.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the Estate Action, priority estatesproject and housing action trust budgets for each year from 1989 to 1993.

Mr. Baldry: Provision for the estate action and housing action trust programmes for the years in question is as follows:

£ million

	Estate action	HATs
1989-90	190	—
1990-91	190	—
1991-92	268	10·3
1992-93	364	40·1
1993-94	356	86·8

PEP is a company limited by guarantee. The value of work funded by my Department is as follows:

	£ million
1989-90	1·1
1990-91	1·2
1991-92	0·9
1992-93	0·9

Discussions with PEP are currently taking place with regard to applications for grant in 1993-94.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many comments he has received on the draft guidance manual for local authorities on how to develop and manage strategies for dealing with unsatisfactory houses in multiple occupation and when the final version will be published.

Mr. Baldry: The Department has received 48 written responses to the draft Houses in Multiple Occupation (HMO) Management Guide. The guide is currently being revised and the final version will be published as soon as possible.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he is monitoring compliance with the duty under section 605 of the Housing Act 1985, periodic inspection of district by local housing authority, in particular as it applies to part XI of the Act: and whether he proposes to make any directions as to how local authorities should comply with that duty.

Mr. Baldry: Section 605 of the Housing Act 1985, as amended by the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, requires local authorities to consider the housing conditions in their districts at least once a year. It is for each authority to determine how it meets this duty and this is not monitored by the Department. We have no plans to issue directions in relation to the duty.

Radon

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research Her Majesty's Government have carried our or commissioned into the risk of high radon levels in areas of Derbyshire where the geological profile includes carboniferous age shales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Following a survey of Derbyshire commissioned by my Department, the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) has designated parts of Derbyshire as radon-affected areas. The areas most affected are associated with carboniferous limestones. A copy of the relevant NRPB publication, "Documents of the NRPB", vol. 3, No. 4, was placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate, by regional health authority area, the total number of houses which may exceed (a) a radon level of 200 bq/sq m and (b) 20 bq/sq m; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The survey of radon in homes in England does not provide data in the form requested. A summary of the survey results by county, district and postcode sector is given in the NRPB report "Radon in Dwellings in England", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. The NRPB estimates that there are about 100,000 homes in England above 200 bq/sq m and about 5·5 million above the average level of 20 bq/sq m.

Urban Programme

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environnment how many representations he has had concerning his decision to reduce future funding for the urban programme.

Mr. Robin Squire: Up to and including 4 January 1993, my Department received 97 letters about the new arrangements for the urban programme (UP). In 1993-94 there will be a substantial UP amounting to £176 million to enable us to honour existing commitments on approved UP projects and to provide £20 million for the urban partnership fund which will work alongside local authorities' newly released capital receipts to promote urban regeneration.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will update the table published in his answer of 11 February, Official Report, columns 434-35.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 17 December 1992]: The table incorporates the new urban programme plan figures following the autumn statement:

Year	Urban programme provision— outturn £ million	Urban programme as percentage of urban block
1995-96	plan 80	10
1994-95	plan 91	11
1993-94	plan 176	18
1992-93	plan 245	24
1991-92	outturn 237	24

The provision for 1992-93 includes £11 million for the urban crime fund.

My Department's urban group of programmes are continuing to evolve to reflect current priorities.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much funding each urban programme authority received at 1992 prices for each of the last three years; how many projects have been supported; and how many people have been employed by them in jobs and in training schemes.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 17 December 1992]: The funding figures are as follows:

Notes:

1. Up funding figures for 1990-91 and 1991-92 are actuals, adjusted by GDP deflator indices. UP funding figures for 1992-93 are initial allocations, excluding District Health Authority projects.
2. The totals for these years have altered slightly from the figures given in the answer of 30 November 1992, Official Report, column 14, due to a recent revision of the GDP deflator indices.

The total number of projects supported in 1990-91 was 9,855. The local authorities' forecasts for 1991-92 and 1992-93 are 6,911 and 8,782 respectively.

We do not have information on the numbers employed by urban programme authorities themselves on managing the urban programme or running training schemes. A total of 29,660 jobs were created or preserved through the urban programme in 1990-91, and 86,528 training places were supported. Local authorities forecast the following outputs in 1991-92 and 1992-93:

	1991-92	1992-93
Number of jobs created/preserved	34,242	33,973
Number of training places supported	68,551	74,097

Note: Figures for 1990-91 are obtained from UP annual reports from local authorities; those for 1991-92 and 1992-93 are derived from annual UP submissions from local authorities.

Councils (Capital Receipts)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines have been given to local authorities as to how expenditure on capital receipts should be distributed as between debt reduction and housing investment.

Mr. Baldry: Local authorities are normally allowed to spend 25 per cent. of their receipts from council house sales and 50 per cent. of most other receipts, the balance being set aside as provision for credit liabilities, including debt redemption. Under a temporary relaxation in these rules, announced in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's autumn statement, local authorities may spend virtually all of the capital receipts they receive between 13 November 1992 and 31 December 1993. Local authorities are free to spend such receipts on any kind of capital project, or to use them to make provision for credit liabilities.

Sewage (Phosphates)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what quantity of phosphate was recovered annually from United Kingdom sewage, each year since 1982; and what action he will take to encourage the recovery of phosphate from United Kingdom sewage.

Mr. Maclean: Information about the amount of phosphate recovered annually from United Kingdom sewage is not held centrally. Implementation of the recently adopted EC Directive concerning Urban Waste Water Treatment will require, in certain circumstances, the reduction of phosphorus in sewage discharges.

Local Government Pensions

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will delay implementation of the Local Government Superannuation (Membership) Regulations 1992 until the results of the Goode report on pension security are made known.

Mr. Robin Squire: If changes to the local government superannuation scheme are required following the publication of the pension law review committee report, statutory consultations will take place with the interested parties. Meanwhile, necessary amendments to the scheme will proceed.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in deciding when to commence implementation of the Local Government Superannuation (Membership) Regulations 1992, he will assess (a) the time required to set up mirror image funds, (b) the loss of rights experienced by employees resulting from any changeover, (c) the extent to which preserved benefits have been adequately indexed to reflect increases in earnings and (d) the extent to which transfer values represent the total worth of members' investments.

Mr. Robin Squire: These matters, together with the other representations received following the recent statutory consultation exercise, will be given careful consideration before decisions are taken on the final form and content of our amending regulations.

Newland System Homes

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total amount of investment made by each local authority in repairs to Newland system homes since 1979.

Mr. Baldry: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total number of Newland system properties currently owned by local authorities.

Mr. Baldry: From local authority returns it is estimated that as at April 1992 there were 1,200 Newland properties in the ownership of local authorities in England.

Caravan Sites Act

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to introduce legislation to reform the Caravan Sites Act 1968.

Mr. Baldry: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave on 9 December to my hon. Friend the Member for Cirencester and Tewkesbury (Mr. Clifton-Brown), Official Report, column 833.

Poll Tax Registers

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many adults appear on the poll tax register in each of the London boroughs.

Mr. Robin Squire: The latest information available to the Department on the number of adults, including students, shown on community charges registers is given in the table.

London borough	Number of adults subject to a personal community charge on 1 June 1991
Barking and Dagenham	109,220

Planning Inquiries

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the implications for the disclosure of public information at public planning inquiries of section 4(5) of the Environmental Information Regulations 1992.

Mr. Baldry: The procedure rules for planning inquiries are already designed to ensure maximum disclosure of information. The Environmental Information Regulations 1992 do not change these arrangements.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the impact of the operation of the NFFO—non-fossil fuel obligation—on the privatisation of local authority waste disposal functions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Tenders for the provision of privatised waste disposal contracts under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 are a matter for the tenderers and the waste disposal authority concerned. I refer my hon. Friend to the detailed advice given in my Department's circular 8/91 "Competition for Local Authority Waste Disposal Contracts and New Arrangements for Disposal Operations". Renewable energy policy and the future of the non-fossil fuel obligation are matters for my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the occasions on which each urban development corporation in England has used its planning designation powers, giving details of the dates on which such powers were used and the nature of the development to which they were applied in each case.

Mr. Robin Squire: Urban development corporations are each planning authorities and consider all planning applications in their designated areas.

CITES

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of discussions between officials of EC Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species and the Indonesian Government relating to the CITES appendix II ban affecting Indonesia.

Mr. Maclean: The International Union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources (IUCN) is still discussing with the Indonesian authorities the management and sustainable use of the country's wildlife. The European Commission has not yet received sufficient information to enable an assessment to be made of the conservation status of the species covered by the current import ban.

Local Government Commission

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what budget has been allocated to the Local Government Commission; how much has been spent; and how many officers are in post.

Mr. Robin Squire: For 1992-93, some £2·63 million is available for payment of grant-in-aid to the Local Government Commission. Of this amount some £724,600 has been paid to the commission to date. The commission currently has 28 staff in post.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names, remuneration, political affiliation and former or current occupation of each of the members of the Local Government Commission.

Mr. Robin Squire: The names of the members of the Local Government Commission and their annual rates of remuneration are as follows:

Chairman
Sir John Banham	32,240
Members
David Ansbro	4,510
Michael Chisholm	19,550
Ken Ennals CB	19,550
Malcolm Grant	4,510
Howell Harris Hughes	4,510
Brian Hill CBE DL	19,550
Mary Leigh	19,550
Ann Levick	19,550
Robert Scruton	4,510
David Thomas	19,550
Clive Wilkinson	19,550
Lady Wilcox	4,510

Details of the occupational background and political affiliation (where known) of the commission's members are available from my Department's press notice of 3 July 1992, a copy of which I have placed in the Library.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the cost of establishing and running the Local Government Commission to date, the cost of consultations undertaken by the commission, the total budget for the commission in the current year and the expected cost of the commission for the review as a whole.

Mr. Robin Squire: Some £2·63 million is available for payment of grant-in-aid to the commission in 1992-93, of which some £724,600 has been paid to date. We have announced provision of £3·259 million, £3·300 million and £3·439 million for the years 1993-94 to 1995-96. The cost of consultations undertaken by the commission is a matter for the commission itself.

Cooking Facilities

Ms. Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the numbers of units with self-contained cooking facilities in (a) local authority hostels, (b) private sector leasing accommodation, (c) temporary accommodation and (d) local authority short-life housing.

Mr. Baldry: The Department does not collect this information.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate how many units in bed-and-breakfast accommodation used for accommodating homeless families have self-contained cooking facilities.

Mr. Baldry: The information is not held centrally and my Department does not make estimates.

City Challenge

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the ministerial visits made to each city challenge winner.

Mr. Robin Squire: City challenge partnerships receive regular visits from their sponsor Minister—the Minister of State for Inner Cities—and me.

Revenue Support

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 15 December, Official Report, column 99, what assessment he has made of the revenue forgone by each local authority as a result of council tax exemption for student-only dwellings; how the revenue support grant system provides specific compensation for revenue forgone by local authorities as a result of student-only dwellings from the council tax; and what amounts have been provided from the revenue support grant for 1993-94 in this respect for each county, district and metropolitan borough council.

Mr. Robin Squire: The revenue foregone by each local authority as a result of council tax exemption for student-only dwellings cannot be calculated until authorities have set their council taxes.

The revenue support grant system does not provide specific compensation for loss of revenue resulting from the exemption of student-only dwellings. The calculation of revenue support grant for individual authorities involves an assessment of the amount that each authority can raise through council taxes, based upon its local taxbase. The taxbase, and the local government finance settlement generally, takes into account, among other things, exemptions of student-only dwellings. There is no merit in speculating about the amounts of revenue support grant that would have been provided if a different system, without exemption of student-only dwellings, had applied.

Local Government Review

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out his estimates of costs or savings arising from the present review of local government in England; and how far these savings differ from estimates previously made by his Department.

Mr. Robin Squire: It will be for the Local Government Commission to assess area by area the costs and benefits of possible changes to the structure of local government in England. It is not possible at this stage to give precise estimates, but the Government's guidance to the commission makes it clear that any changes to the structure of local government should be worthwhile and cost-effective over time.

Rate Relief

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total rateable value of non-domestic properties given rate relief for unoccupation in each year for which figures are available.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is not available.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total current Curie content of long-lived radioactive waste stored in high-activity storage tanks at Sellafield; and what notification of the status of the radioactive waste storage facilities Her Majesty's Government are required to give Euratom on a routine basis.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

The long-lived radioactive waste stored in high activity storage tanks at Sellafield contains 920 million Curies of radioactivity. Highly active waste contains small quantities of uranium and plutonium. In line with the requirements of the Euratom safeguards authorities, such arisings from reprocessing are reported by British Nuclear Fuels plc in its inventory change reports to Euratom which are made via my Department's safeguards office.

Private Finance

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in what areas of his Department's responsibilities he has introduced, or may introduce, private finance; and if he will describe in each case the procedures by which private finance is sought.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 17 December 1992]: I welcome any suggestions for private finance that the private sector puts forward, provided they are consistent with the Treasury guidance published on 9 December.

Much inner cities spending is targeted on levering in private finance through grant applications and competition between developers. The Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities expects to issue shortly a list of further opportunities. The Rural Development Commission and other countryside bodies draw in private finance in their areas through both loan and grant applications. All these applications both have to meet testing criteria, and to compete for limited available public funds. In Property Holdings civil estate business, private finance is used through property leasing. In social housing, the housing association movement uses leading city firms to draw in loan finance from financial institutions.

Birds

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many bird species currently subject to United Kingdom conservation licensing controls under the Endangered Species (Import and Export) Act 1976 will not be subject to import licensing under current European Community/Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species regulations after 1 January 1993; if he will list them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 17 December 1992]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn) on 1 December 1992, Official Report, cols 153-54. About 8,000 species of bird will no longer be subject to import licensing after 1 January 1993. A list of these could only be produced at disproportionate cost. To ensure their continued protection, 83 of these species will be made subject to sales licensing. Only a minority of the remaining species are traded, and licensing of imports of them has been primarily for monitoring. We are pressing for more extensive monitoring to be introduced throughout the European Community in future.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the cash and real terms increases for total standard spending in England in 1993-94, after adjusting for changes in local authority functions, compared with (a) total standard spending for 1992-93 and (b) local authorities' budgets for 1992-93.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 27 November 1992]: I wrote to the hon. Member on 22 December 1992.

Further Education

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the representations he has received from local education authorities about the amount of finance allocated and methodology used to calculate each authority's national spending on further education and sixth form colleges for 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: Up to 8 January, my right hon. and learned Friend had received 40 written representations from local education authorities on the finance allocated to further education and the methodology employed in his provisional calculations. The issue has also been raised by a further four authorities in meetings with Ministers in this Department. Many such representations have been on the calculation of relevant notional amounts reflecting that from 1993-94 local education authorities have no responsibility for sixth form colleges and their responsibility for post-16 education is limited to schools with sixth form intakes and to some adult education. My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to announce to this House his decisions on the revenue support grant settlement in the light of consultation before the end of the month.

Council Tax

Mr. Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to set a target time in which valuation tribunals will complete a council tax appeal.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 16 December 1992]: I have been asked to reply.

Council tax appeals in Scotland will be heard by valuation appeal committees. How many appeals will arise is obviously unknown at this stage. It would not be practicable at present to set a time within which committees will aim to complete their consideration of such appeals. The Government will, however, keep under review the progress of committees in disposing of appeals.

WALES

Heritage Coastline

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which areas in Wales have been designated heritage coasts; how many kilometres have been so designated; and what proportion this represents of the total Welsh coastline.

Mr. David Hunt: The areas listed have been defined as heritage coasts in Wales.

	kilometres
North Anglesey	28·66
Holyhead Mountain	12·88
Aberffraw Bay	7·73
Great Orme	7·08
Lleyn	88·39
Ceredigion	33·80
St. Dogmaels and Moylegrove	22·54
Dinas Head	17·71
St. David's Peninsula	82·11
St. Brides Bay	8·05
Marloes and Dale	43·47
South Pembrokeshire	66·01
Gower	55·06
Glamorgan	21·74
	495·23

495·23 kilometres represents 42 per cent. of Welsh coastline.

Ysgol Gyfun Cwm Rhymni

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the closure of the Ysgol Gyfun Cwm Rhymni lower school.

Mr. David Hunt: This is a matter for Mid Glamorgan county council.

Parent-Governor Meetings

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many schools in Wales hold annual parent-governor meetings which are attended by fewer than 10 per cent. of the parents entitled to attend.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not available centrally.

Urban Programme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will show expenditure on the urban programme since 1988-89 in the valleys programme area as (a) budgeted and (b) actual outturn expressed in (i) cash terms for 1988-89 and (ii) cash terms for 1993-94.

Mr. David Hunt: Urban programme expenditure in the valleys programme area since 1988-89 in cash terms is:

£ million

	Allocation[1] excluding national garden festival	Allocation/ expenditure national garden festival	Actual outturn
1988-89	14·442	0·458	11·9
1989-90	15·200	2·600	16·0
1990-91	15·657	5·043	19·4
1991-92	15·985	9·915	23·6
1992-93	19·646	1·354	—

[1] Includes supplementary allocations approved during the year.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will show expenditure on the urban programme since 1985 to 1989 in Wales as (a) budgeted and (b) actual outturn, expressed in (i) cash terms for 1988-89 and (ii) cash terms for 1993-94.

Mr. David Hunt: Expenditure on urban programme between 1985-86 and 1989-90 in cash terms is:

£ million

	Allocation	Actual outturn
1985-86	19·2	18·0
1986-87	23·7	21·6
1987-88	23·1	20·4
1988-89	24·6	20·5
1989-90	27·6	25·0

Smokers

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the total number of habitual smokers in Wales by health authority area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest information on the percentage of the population in Wales in the age group 18 to 65 who reported that they smoked to any extent is given in the following table:

	Percentage of Population who were smokers
Clwyd	33·8
East Dyfed	28·8
Pembrokeshire	29·1
Gwent	31·3
Gwynedd	32·8
Mid Glamorgan	35·4
Powys	27·4
South Glamorgan	30·2
West Glamorgan	29·2

Special Needs Housing

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the implications of the Tai Cymru's consultation paper for special needs housing in Wales; how he intends to respond to the needs of women and children escaping domestic violence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The board of housing for Wales are giving careful consideration to all the responses received following the issue of its consultation paper entitled "Improving the Effectiveness of Housing Association Development and Management". Decisions will be made known shortly.

TECs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to review the (a) membership and (b) membership qualifications of the boards of Welsh training and enterprise councils; if he will set minimum criteria for the representation of manufacturing industry on each of these TECs; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The appointment of directors to training and enterprise council boards is a matter for individual TECs in accordance with the broad criteria set out in the TEC operating agreement. We expect the private sector directors of individual TEC boards to reflect broadly the pattern of employment in their area. We have no plans to alter this arrangement.

The manufacturing sector is represented on all TEC boards in Wales; five of the seven Welsh chairmen of TEC boards are from manufacturing industry.

Right-to-buy Schemes

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Tai Cymru concerning the issuing of new right-to-buy guidelines for the tenants of housing association schemes.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

Radon

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate how many houses in each Welsh health authority area exceed (a) the radon action level of 200 Bq/m^3 and (b) 20 Bq/m^3; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is not possible to provide the estimates requested until the full results of the National Radiological Protection Board survey in Wales are known.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will be publishing the Welsh local government financial statistics for 1993-94.

Mr. David Hunt: It is anticipated that the next edition of Welsh local government financial statistics, which will include details of 1993-94 budgets, will be published in December 1993.

Trawsfynydd Power Station

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what monitoring he undertakes of the surrounding area of Trawsfynydd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The food science division and the fisheries radiological inspectorate of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food undertake monitoring in the Trawsfynydd area on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. The FSD monitoring covers food and agricultural products whilst that undertaken by FRI involves aquatic environmental monitoring of Lake Trawsfynydd. The results are regularly published in the terrestrial radioactivity monitoring programme and aquatic environment monitoring reports, copies of which are held in the Library of the House. In addition, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has a programme of environmental monitoring linked to its regulatory responsibility for the nuclear power station.

This monitoring shows that levels of radioactivity found in the environment as a result of discharges from the Trawsfynydd nuclear power station are within international and national guidelines.

Part of the area near Trawsfynydd falls within the designated area which is subject to controls on the movement and slaughter of sheep following the Chernobyl nuclear accident in 1986. The Welsh Office monitors radioactivity levels in sheep from the area as part of those controls.

Agricultural Training Board

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the future funding and structure of the Agricultural Training Board for Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: My ministerial colleagues and I are considering the funding and structure of the Agricultural Training Board in the light of the responses to our consultation paper.

Departmental Property

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the total number of residential properties owned by his Department, (b) the number of such properties which are empty, and (c), (b) as a percentage of (a).

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

	Number
(a) Properties/units[1] owned by the Welsh Office	4,904
(b) Number of properties/units vacant	389
	per cent.
(c) (b) as a percentage of (a)	7·93

[1] The figures included for the national health service are based on units and a property may contain more than one unit.

Health Service

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the methods his Department used to allocate places to district health authorities at the treatment centres in the financial year 1991-92.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In 1991-92 the Department allocated an initial tranche of places to the district health authorities in which the treatment centres are located. The other authorities negotiated their places direct with the centres which agreed the final allocations with the Department.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what correspondence he has had with the World Health Organisation in relation to (a) NHS Wales's relative position in the European health care systems management efficiency league table and (b) the relative international position of Wales in 1980 and 1990 in respect of infant mortality rate, incidence of heart disease and cancer; if he will place a copy of such correspondence in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I am not aware of a European league table of the efficiency of health care management.

Correspondence with the regional office of the World Health Organisation on Wales' relative position in terms of key health status indicators, for inclusion in "Caring for the Future", was limited to short technical exchanges between statistical advisers.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will fund the treatment centres in Wales on the same basis in 1993-94 as in the current financial year.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Health authorities will be notified of the funding arrangements for 1993-94 in due course.

Butte Mining

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his Department's actions in respect of investigations into share dealings in Butte Mining.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department is not involved in any such investigations.

Development Boards

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to debar members of the board of the Welsh Development Agency from sitting on the Welsh Industrial Development Advisory Board.

Mr. David Hunt: No.

Water Fluoridation

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will delete the section on Page iv of the Oral Health Protocol issued in November 1992 referring to co-ordinated action by family health service authorities and district health authorities in Wales to encourage fluoridation of water sources covering 60 per cent. of the Welsh population by 1997.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No.

Baby Milk

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to change the guidelines on the distribution of welfare food baby milk; what consultations he has had with the chairmen and women of the family health service authorities and health authorities in Wales in relation to such guidelines, present and proposed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Government are currently looking at methods of welfare food distribution to identify scope for improvement in service and value for money. We will consult relevant authorities and agencies before any changes are made to present arrangements.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps were taken to inform all recipients of mobility allowance under the age of 66 years of the new disability living allowance; and what instructions he has issued to adjudication officers in respect of late claims.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 16 November 1992, Official Report, c. 77]: I regret that some of the information given was incorrect.

Since January 1992, tailored letters have been issued to some 1·5 million beneficiaries of attendance allowance and mobility allowance, giving advice about disability living allowance. These letters were in a series of 16, eight of which were designed for mobility allowance recipients and people who had been refused mobility allowance. The letters enclosed an explanatory leaflet which set out how the changes would affect individuals and, where appropriate, recipients were invited to claim extra benefit available through disability living allowance. Regulations allow awards of this extra benefit to be backdated to 6 April, if the person was entitled to attendance allowance or mobility allowance at that date.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration he has given to making mobility living allowance available to children under five years of age.

Mr. Scott: We have considered this issue carefully. We have no plans to change the age limit for the mobility component of disability living allowance which is set at age five. The care component is, where appropriate, payable to under five-year-olds.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement indicating what advance notification was given to Mrs. S. Guest of 4 Clay road, Bury St. Edmunds of (a) when her son's attendance allowance had to be reviewed and (b) when it was to cease; and what advice she was given about how to reclaim the allowance.

Mr. Scott: The administration of Attendance Allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Richard Spring, dated 17 December 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what advance notification was given to Mrs. S. Guest of 4 Clay Road, Bury St. Edmunds of (a) when her son's Attendance Allowance (AA) had to be reviewed, (b) when it was to cease; and what advice she was given about how to reclaim the allowance.

I should explain that, from 6 April 1992, Disability Living Allowance replaced and extended both Mobility Allowance and AA. Mrs. Guest claimed AA on behalf of her son and was notified of the duration of each award when the decision was made. About five months before the expiry of the last award Mrs. Guest was invited to make a renewal claim. This invitation included a set of notes explaining why the claim pack had been sent and how to complete the forms.

Normally, Mrs. Guest would have been notified in writing of the outcome of the renewal claim before the expiry of the existing award. I regret, in this instance, Mrs. Guest was not notified until after the award expired. The notification letter advised Mrs. Guest she had the right to apply for a review of the decision if she was dissatisfied and how to exercise that right.

Clearly, in view of the late notification of the outcome of the renewal claim, Mrs. Guest has not received the standard of service which she has every right to expect from the Agency and I offer my sincere apologies to her for the inconvenience this must have caused. You will be aware from my letter of 19 October to all MPs of the problems we have encountered since the successful launch of the new benefit and the positive steps taken to improve the situation.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report. A copy is also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what criteria are used in the selection of doctors chosen to assess claimants of attendance allowance; what specific training they receive; and what remuneration they receive.

Mr. Scott: The selection, training and payment of doctors who assess claimants of attendance allowance are matters for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. David Blunkett, dated 17 December 1992:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking what criteria are used in the selection of doctors chosen to assess claimants of Attendance Allowance; what specific training they receive; and what remuneration they receive.

Examining Medical Practitioners (EMPs) chosen to assess people claiming Attendance Allowance or Disability Living Allowance are selected by the Senior Medical Officer of the Disability Benefits Centre which processes the claims. Applicants for this work are normally doctors in active clinical practice or recently retired. They are chosen on the basis of a letter of application from the doctor and a subsequent interview with the Senior Medical Officer. Due regard is also given to the need for the services of an EMP in the doctors particular area.

Applicants are trained in the basic principles of the allowances and in the completion of EMP report forms by one of our Medical Officers. This training is usually carried out on a one to one basis. The standard of their reports is monitored by the medical staff, who arrange further training if necessary.

Remuneration is based on a national scale agreed between the Treasury and the British Medical Association, and depends on the time required to complete the report as shown overleaf:

Up to and including 1·5 hours	37·90
More than 1·5 but less than 2 hours	56·90
More than 2·5 hours	88·40

Since all these examinations are carried out at the home of the customers the doctors are also paid a mileage allowance to cover their travelling expenses.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy is also being placed in the Library.

Boarder Premium

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a breakdown of the estimate of the cost of a boarder premium of £10 for each member of a homeless family living in temporary accommodation without the use of self-contained cooking facilities.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not available. There is no accepted definition of "self-contained cooking facilities" and no valid estimate of the total number of families in temporary accommodation that would allow the analysis sought. The published estimate was for £10 extra per week for each boarder claim unit. The cost of that is currently estimated to be around £45 million per annum; the cost of a £10 premium to each member of a boarder family would be considerably higher.

Furnishings (Fire Safety)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer 6 November, Official Report, column 459, if he will publish the guidance issued to social fund officers in respect of the broad range of prices that would be considered reasonable for essential items of furniture compliant with foam furniture regulations.

Mr. Scott: The Secretary of State's directions, and his guidance to social fund officers are published in the Social Fund Guide, a copy of which is available in the Library. This guidance encourages social fund officers to look at a broad range of prices offered by various suppliers, when considering the amount of an award.

There is no guidance to social fund officers, either in the guide or elsewhere, which suggests specific amounts for items of furniture.

Child Support

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will seek to amend the Child Support Act 1991 to make provision for single caring parents who do not wish to disclose the name of their child; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The Child Support Act already contains safeguards to ensure that if there would be a risk of harm or undue distress to the parent with care of any child living with her, she will not have to seek maintenance from the absent parent.

The Government believe it right that a parent who has no such good grounds should be expected to co-operate so that the absent parent can be approached about meeting his responsibility to support his child. It is a widely accepted principle that parents should support their children when they can afford to do so, rather than transfer that responsibility to other taxpayers who may have families of their own to support.

We have no plans to change our policy on this matter.

Benefit Statistics

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households are currently in receipt of (a) the disabled, (b) the child, (c) the carer's and (d) the enhanced pensioner premium.

Mr. Scott: Information as to the numbers of recipients of the disability, disabled child, carer and enhanced pensioner premiums is shown in the table below. The disabled child and carer premiums can be awarded in addition to other premiums. There is some overlap between housing benefit and community charge benefit recipients.

Premium	Recipients (thousands)
	Income Support[1]	Housing Benefit[2]	Community Charge Benefit[2]
Disability Premium	375	163	217
Disabled Child Premium	22	2	4
Carer Premium	28	6	10
Enhanced Pensioner Premium	243	226	402

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the total number of people claiming and dependent on income-related benefits in 1979 and 1991, broken down into the relevant benefits.

Miss Widdecombe: The available information is in the tables. The figures cannot be added together as a claimant could be receiving more than one benefit. Comparisons between 1979 and 1991 are difficult; the basis of assessment changed substantially during the period.

(a) Number of claimants, partners and dependents receiving income-related benefits

Thousands

	1979	1991
Income support	[1]4,371	7,747
Family credit	[2]301	1,267

(b) Housing benefit/Community charge benefit (1991-92 only)

Benefit	Average number of cases[3]
Housing benefit	4,120
Community charge benefit	6,340

[1] Supplementary benefit.
[2] Family income supplement.
[3] 1991-92 only.

Notes:
1. All figures in thousands, rounded to the nearest thousand.
2. Figures quoted in table (b) (Housing benefit and Community charge benefit) are for recipients only, information is not available for totals dependent on these benefits.
3. No information is available for Housing benefit/Community charge benefit in 1979 as the current Housing benefit scheme did not commence until 1988 and Community charge benefit was not introduced until 1990 (1989 in Scotland).

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the proportion of people claiming and dependent on supplementary benefit or income support in 1979 and 1991 in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Burt: The available information is in the table. Comparison between income support and supplementary benefit are difficult since the conditions of entitlement and the basis of the assessments.

	(A) Percentage of population in Scotland receiving supplementary benefit/income support	(B) Percentage of population in Great Britain receiving supplementary benefit/income support
1979	8·67	7·99
1991	15·78	13·82

Notes:
1. Source: Supplementary Benefit/Income Support Statistics Annual Enquiries 1979 and 1991; Office of Population Censuses and Surveys 1979 and 1991.
2. The figures in column (b) of the table relate to Great Britain, not the United Kingdom. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland is responsible for statistics relating to the province.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the numbers and proportion of children in families on supplementary benefit in 1979 and income support in 1991 broken down into England, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is in the table:

	Country	Number of Children	Proportion of Population (per cent.)
1979	England	757	6·62
(Supplementary Benefit)	Scotland	109	8·09
	Wales	57	8·21
1991	England	1,998	19·42
(Income Support)	Scotland	239	21·97
	Wales	131	20·89

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the numbers of claimants on (a) income support and (b) housing benefit as a proportion of the population in each local authority in England, Wales and Scotland.

Mr. Burt [holding answer 11 December 1992]: Income support information is not available in the form requested. The available information relating to housing benefit is in the tables:

Homelessness

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will ensure that housing benefits and income support is available to homeless people using half-way houses.

Miss Widdecombe: Homeless people are entitled to income support, and to housing benefit when they find accommodation and incur a liability to pay rent. Housing benefit is also available on the same basis to people who secure temporary or permanent housing.

Eating Out Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of re-introducing the eating out allowance, at the level payable in 1989, for the financial year 1993-94.

Miss Widdecombe: It is not possible to produce a reliable estimate from the data available.

War Pension Scheme

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations his Department has received about the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State's announcement of 12 November about the introduction of a threshold for noise-induced hearing impairment into the war pension scheme; what replies have been sent; what action is being taken; what consultation there was prior to the press announcement with the Royal British Legion and other ex-service organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Consultation over the package of proposals, involving a threshold for noise induced hearing loss and an increase in war disablement pensions, commenced after the announcement of 12 November 1992. Since then, several letters have been received from representatives of the ex-service organisations. Full and careful account has been taken of the comments made in those letters, and of the comments made on 3 December during discussions of the proposals at the meeting of the Central Advisory Committee on War Pensions. As announced in my reply of 17 December 1992, Official Report, column 369-70, after full consideration, we have concluded that they are in the best interests of war pensioners and are proceeding with them. My noble Friend Lord Henley has written to members of the central advisory committee and others representing the interests of war pensioners, advising them of our decision.

Compensation Payments

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much compensation has been paid to social security claimants in the current year for late payment of benefit, for benefit interruptions, or in ex-gratia payments.

Mr. Burt: During the six-month period ending 30 September 1992, a total of £1,499,236 was disbursed as ex-gratia payments, of which £1,113,367 represented compensation payments. The records kept do not distinguish between payments made for delay in payment of benefit and payments made for interruption of benefit.

Pensioners

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of pensioners had an income of less than £5,000 a year, at the latest available date.

Miss Widdecombe: It is estimated[1] that 61 per cent. of single pensioners[2] had an income of less than £5,000 per year in 1988 (the latest available date).

[1] Family Expenditure Survey 1988.

[2] Based on pensioner units—i.e., single people over state pension age and couples where the husband is aged 65 or over, regardless of whether they are drawing state pension.

Income Statistics

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the numbers and proportion of people who fell below 50 per cent. of average income before and after housing costs in (a) Scotland, (b) England, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland in 1979 and in 1988-89.

Mr. Burt: Reliable information in the form requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Information for the United Kingdom as a whole is available in Households Below Average Income: a Statistical Analysis 1979-1988-89 (HMSO 1992), a copy of which is in the Library.

Share Fishermen

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will allow share fishermen to sign on for unemployment benefit by postal slips; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Postal signing is offered to all claimants who would find it difficult to attend their local benefit office regularly.

The Employment Service, which administers the scheme on behalf of the Secretary of State for Social Security, has issued guidelines to local offices describing the circumstances in which this facility should be offered. People who live more than six miles from their local benefit office, people with disabilities who would suffer hardship through regular attendance, and people who live in areas where local transport is inadequate, can all be excused from regular attendance. We have no plans to offer postal signing to any specific occupational group.

Carers

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he proposes to review the present qualifying roles for the carer premium.

Mr. Burt: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will extend payment of invalid care allowance for a period beyond the time that a person's caring responsibilities come to an end.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many carers he expects to benefit from changes to invalid care allowance and carer premium from next April; and at what cost.

Mr. Scott: All carers currently in receipt of invalid care allowance and the carer premium will benefit from the uprating of benefits which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 12 November 1992.

We expect a further 3,000 carers to benefit from the increase in the invalid care allowance earnings limit at a cost of £3 million.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current annual cost of benefits for carers.

Mr. Scott: We estimate that the cost of invalid care allowance for the year 1992-93 will be £301 million. Separate figures are not held on the cost of the carer premium.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will extend eligibility for invalid care allowance to carers providing care and support for someone in receipt of the lower care component of disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so.

The purpose of invalid care allowance is to provide a measure of financial assistance to those who forego the opportunity of full-time work to provide regular and substantial care to a severely disabled person. It is doubtful whether a person receiving the lower rate care component of disability living allowance would require such substantial care.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for increasing the level of take-up of the carer premium on means tested benefits.

Mr. Burt: The carer premium is already well-publicised in a number of ways and we continually monitor the provision of information about benefits. Information about the whole range of premiums is given in a number of leaflets about income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit. In addition specific information about the carer premium is contained in leaflet FB31 (Caring for someone?), which has been well received by carers and their organisations, in the ICA claim pack and award notices and in the income support claim pack.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has further to improve financial support for carers.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend, the Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones) on 12 November 1992 at columns 906-24 and, in particular cols 910-11.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to increase the basic rate of invalid care allowance.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones) on 12 November 1992 at columns 906-24. Apart from this, we have no plans to do so.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress has been made in implementing the specific improvements in financial support for carers proposed by the fifth report from the House of Commons Social Services Committee of 1989-90, "Community Care: Carers" (HC 410).

Miss Widdecombe: The Government's reply to the report was contained in "The Government's Plans for the Future of Community Care" (Cm 1343) a copy of which is in the Library.

Income Support

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what account he takes of fluctuations in interest rates paid to savers on the notional income received by income support claimants with savings.

Mr. Burt: Treatment of notional income support claimants is designed to give most help to people with the least savings. The formula is not linked to, nor is it meant to imply, any particular rate of return which would be secured from investment.

Consequently, while the formula is kept under review, it would not be appropriate to amend it to reflect directly fluctuations in interest rates paid to savers.

Correspondence

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he replied to a letter from the European Commissioner responsible for Social Affairs and Employment in connection with the United Kingdom's obligations under European Council directive (EEC) 80/987; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The United Kingdom Government responded on 11 September 1992 to a letter from the Director General of the European Commission's Directorate-General for Employment, Industrial Relations and Social Affairs about European Council Directive 80/987. We believe the Government have done all that is required to comply with this directive.

Departmental Property

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list (a) the total number of residential properties owned by his Department, (b) the number of such properties which are empty, and (c), (b) as a percentage of (a).

Miss Widdecombe: There are 18 properties on the Department's estate which could be described as residential properties. Three of these properties are empty: 16·7 per cent. of the total.

Pension Funds

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will amend company pension fund law so as to oblige companies suspending employer contributions to suspend employee contributions for a parallel period;

(2) if he will make it an offence under company pension fund law to suspend company employer contributions without full consultations with all employees;

(3) what proposals he has to amend company pension fund law to assist the transfer of small company pension funds, in the event of receivership, to larger ongoing pension funds;

(4) if he will make it a criminal offence under company pension fund law to deduct employee pension contributions and fail to transfer them into the pension fund;

(5) what proposals he has for changes in company pension fund law to protect the pension rights of employees, where their contributions were deducted from wages, but not transferred with the pension fund in the event of receivership; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security announced on 8 June 1992 that a pension law review committee was being set up to carry out a wide ranging review of the framework of law and regulation within which occupational pension schemes operate. Questions relating to securing pension rights are fundamental to that review, and we have no proposals for amendments to legislation that might preempt the committee's report. Protections exist in employment protection legislation for unpaid contributions to occupational pension schemes, up to certain limits, where the employer is insolvent.

Arachnoiditis

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to which benefits sufferers of arachnoiditis may be entitled; and what steps are being taken to publicise such eligibility.

Mr. Scott: A wide range of benefits is available to sick and disabled people, including sufferers of arachnoiditis, provided they meet the conditions of entitlement. Information about eligibility to benefits is made widely available by the Benefits Agency in a variety of forms including leaflets and various confidential free telephone advice lines.

National Welsh Bus Company

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set up an inquiry into the administration of the company pension fund of the National Welsh Bus Company.

Miss Widdecombe: An independent trustee has been appointed to the National Welsh Omnibus scheme, as required by the Social Security Act 1990, and is taking the steps necessary to safeguard the pension position of members.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Expenditure

Mr. Straw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many member countries of (a) the EC, (b) G7 and (c) the OECD include expenditure incurred by sub-national units of government, local authorities, states, departments, länder, municipalities, and so on, and financed by local taxation in the expenditure to be controlled by central Government in their public expenditure planning processes; and if he will make a statement on the inclusion of United Kingdom local authority self-financed expenditure in the new control total.

Mr. Portillo: As explained in annex C to chapter 2 of the "Autumn Statement"—paragraph 2C.9—local authority self-financed expenditure—LASFE—is included in the new control total because it is a significant component of general Government expenditure, is not primarily cyclical and cannot sensibly be allowed to vary without any requirements for offsetting adjustments. Although LASFE is not directly under central government control, the Government influence and restrain local authority expenditure, and hence LASFE, through grant, capping and capital receipts rules.

Information on which OECD countries include expenditure incurred by sub-national units of government and financed by local taxation in their public expenditure planning processes is not readily available. It can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Revenue Losses

Mr. Stern: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his most recent estimate of annual revenue losses arising from legal imports of (a) cigarettes, (b) other tobacco products, (c) wines and spirits, (d) beer and (e) other excisable goods, following the completion of the single market in January.

Sir John Cope: The "Financial Statement and Budget Report" published in March 1992 made provision for a full-year loss of £250 million from increased cross-border shopping. We anticipate that most of the loss will be due to cigarettes, but the estimate is difficult and subdivisions between categories of alcoholic drinks and tobacco products would not be meaningful.

VAT

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring forward proposals to collect value added tax from businesses at the current rate only on the turnover above the registration threshold; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: Value added tax is a transaction-based tax; it is collected by registered businesses from their customers and remitted to Customs. Unlike direct taxes, it is not a tax on the business. The relief suggested is, therefore, not appropriate.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the terms of reference of the planned review of the exemption from value added tax of educational materials; and when he expects the review to be completed.

Sir John Cope: Customs and Excise are undertaking an internal review of the VAT exemptions available for educational services provided by fee paying schools, universities and other businesses to see whether, consistent with EC legislation, there is scope for simplification and rationalisation. It is too early yet to say how soon the review will be completed. There is no general exemption for the supply of educational materials and this is not part of the review.

Food Prices

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will prepare a table showing for each year since 1 January 1973 (a) the average price of a standard loaf of bread, (b) the average price of a pint of milk, (c) the average price of a standard tin of baked beans, (d) the percentage increase in the price of each item, (e) the retail price index and (f) the United Kingdom net contribution to the EC budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The available information is given in the following table. Average price data for baked beans are not available.

	Average January price (pence)		Percentage price change (per cent.) over previous 12 months

[4]Indices have been converted to a January 1974—100 base from the official January 1987 = 100 base for ease of comparison.

Family Expenditure

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the average spent each week by a family of two adults and two school age children on (a) food, (b) clothing, (c) entertainment, (d) housing and (e) taxes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The estimates are shown in the table. They are based on spending in 1991.

Average weekly expenditure

Description	£ per week
Food	68·86
Clothing	24·83
Entertainment	41·42
Housing	64·34
Income tax and National Insurance employees contribution	107·88

Domestic Energy Supplies

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to levy (a) value added tax or (b) any other additional taxation on domestic energy supplies.

Sir John Cope: My right hon. Friend will, as usual, set out his taxation proposals in the Budget. As is normal at this time of year, I cannot comment further at this time on any such proposals.

TRANSPORT

Lorry Trailers (Rail Transport)

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the upgrading of the existing British Rail network necessary in order to accommodate unaccompanied lorry trailers.

Mr. Roger Freeman: Discussions are to be held between BR, independent transport consultants and the Health and Safety Executive on the scope for accommodating piggyback freight on some of BR's existing lines. They will be considering the engineering, cost and safety implications of using redesigned wagons and enhancing height clearances on some lines.

WALES

Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been paid in each of the last five years to landowners in Wales in respect of compensation under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981; and how much was paid during the same period in respect of land purchase.

Mr. David Hunt: Prior to 1 April 1991, payments under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 for management agreements and land purchase were made by the Nature Conservancy Council for Great Britain as a whole, and were recorded centrally. Therefore figures for payments made in Wales prior to 1 April 1991 are not readily available and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

In 1991-92 payments made to landowners by the Countryside Council for Wales in respect of management agreements under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 amounted to £1·055 million. This amount included payments to encourage positive conservation measures as well as payments in respect of compensation, which are not recorded separately.

For 1991-92, £0·631 million was paid by the Countryside Council for Wales for the purchase of land in national nature reserves. In addition, the Countryside Council for Wales gave grants totalling £0·399 million towards the purchase of land by other organisations for nature and landscape conservation.

Urban Programme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement indicating the criteria used in assessing (a) projects benefiting all of the county and (b) projects benefiting all of the borough/district as used in his Department's press release of 14 December concerning the urban programme in mid Glamorgan.

Mr. David Hunt: The press release included a map showing the location of the projects to be grant aided. Projects that were shown as benefiting the whole county or the whole borough or district were identified on the basis of the information supplied by the local authorities concerned in their grant applications.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the sites of special scientific interest damaged by acid rain in the latest year for which figures are available and give the hectarage of each site of special scientific interest affected.

Mr. David Hunt: A study published in October 1992 identified 42 sites of special scientific interest in Wales as having freshwater habitats affected by acid deposition, out of a current total of 848 SSSIs. These sites are listed in the tables. The area given is that of the whole SSSI and not the area damaged. The study sampled freshwaters and did not assess damage to the land area of sites. The Countryside Council for Wales is currently seeking to establish how far land habitats are being damaged by acid rain. Present research has indicated that some parts of south Wales may also be affected by acid rain although this was not considered likely at the time of the original study.

Welsh SSSI surveyed and within which freshwaters were considered to have been affected by acidification.

Medical Research

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Medical Research Council in relation to the closure in 1995 of the epidemiology unit at Llandough hospital; what provision he will arrange in relation to the Caerphilly study into factors affecting heart disease incidence; what other proposals for medical research in Wales he has exchanged with the research council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones [holding answer 11 January 1993]: Officials were involved in the review of the Medical Research Council-funded epidemiology unit and keep in close touch with the MRC as a matter of course. Senior officials, including the chief medical officer, met the Secretary of the Medical Research Council in Cardiff on 12 November 1992 to discuss the closure of the unit, and the future Medical Research Council developments in Wales. I am pleased to say that the Medical Research Council has endorsed the recommendation of its systems board that the Caerphilly study should continue to be supported through to the completion of phase IV, which will require work beyond the closure date of the unit.

I consider a sound research base very important and I am keen to see Medical Research Council investment in Wales maintained. Thus, I am encouraged to note that the Medical Research Council is discussing with researchers in Wales a number of possible projects under the clinical research initiative.

Learning Difficulties

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to publish a revised learning difficulties strategy for Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones [holding answer 11 January 1993]: The revised document will be published in time to relaunch the strategy from 1 April 1993.

EC Doctors and Dentists

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will encourage district health authorities to embark on recruitment drives in Europe to attract doctors and dentists to work in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones [holding answer 11 January 1993]: All health authorities in Wales are currently able to recruit doctors and dentists from Europe. All, with the exception of Powys health authority, have already recruited from Europe.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Postponed Cases

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, if he will give the numbers of cases postponed in (a) magistrates courts and (b) stipendiary magistrates' courts in each county, indicating (i) the percentage involved at each court, (ii) the reasons for each postponement and (iii) the cost of each postponement in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is not available centrally in the form requested.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Service Agency

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria were used in the selection of the new chief executive of the Prison Service Agency; what steps were taken to ensure a fair and open competition; if the selected candidate was the first recommendation of the selection panel; and what is to be the salary of the appointee.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 21 December, Mr. Derek Lewis was appointed chief executive and director general of the new Prison Service Agency in an open competition conducted under the aegis of the Civil Service Commissioners. The Recruitment and Assessment Services issued a public advertisement and Saxton Bamfylde International plc conducted an executive search. The advertisement stated that the successful candidate would need to have experience, most probably at chief executive level, of leading a substantial organisation in the public or private sector; a track record of successful management of large-scale change, delivering improved quality and efficiency; and first-class communication skills and good judgment appropriate to the leadership of a highly complex and sensitive public service. In accordance with the normal practice the recommendations of the selection panel are confidential. Mr. Lewis's salary is £125,000 a year and he is eligible for a performance bonus of up to 35 per cent. of basic salary, assessed by the Department on the basis of measures of performance.

Racial Incidents

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been for incitement to racial hatred each year since 1965 under section 5a of the Public Order Act 1936 and subsequently sections 17 to 23 of the Public Order Act 1986; and how many of these prosecutions have been successful.

Mr. Jack: Information for 1979 to 1991, which is provisional, is given in the table. Data for 1965 to 1978 are not available.

Number of prosecutions at magistrates' courts and convictions at all courts under Section 5A of the Public Order Act 1936 and Sections 17 to 23 of the Public Order Act 1986[1], 1979 to 1991

Child Sex Abuse

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many offenders have been charged with more than one incidence of child sex abuse;

(2) how many incidents there have been of persons being treated for child sex abuse who have been charged with offences of a similar nature (a) during the course of their treatment and (b) within two years after their treatment finishing;

(3) how many persons were convicted in each of the last five years for offences of sexual abuse against children; and how many such persons have been convicted in each of the last 10 years in the Coventry and Warwickshire area.

Mr. Jack: Information is not collected centrally on the number of offenders who have been charged with more than one incident of child sex abuse. Nor are records kept centrally of the number of persons being treated for child sex abuse who have been charged with similar offences.

Information on the number of persons convicted of child sex crimes in England and Wales and the Coventry and Warwickshire areas is given in the tables. It is only possible from the information held centrally to identify sex offenders where the victim is known to be aged under 16 years.

Linen Washing

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he will take to ensure that prisons conform to guidelines issued in circular DHSS HC (87); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Circular instructions 9/1992 replaces, so far as practice in the prison service is concerned, DHSS circular HC (87) on the washing of foul and infected linen. Annex 3 of the circular instruction includes detailed guidance on the treatment of foul and infected linen and the wearing of protective clothing, which all prisons are expected to follow so as to ensure that such items are hygienically washed to the standards recommended in the DHSS circular.

EDUCATION

Adult Education

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many enrolments there were for courses of adult education provided by the Inner London education authority at the time of its abolition; and what are the current corresponding figures for its successor authorities.

Mr. Boswell: In November 1989, there were some 222,000 enrolments of students aged 19 and over on courses in adult institutions and further education colleges maintained by the Inner London education authority. In November 1991, the corresponding figure for institutions maintained by the inner London boroughs or funded through the London residuary body is provisionally estimated as 202,000.

PRIME MINISTER

Prince and Princess of Wales

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister how many times he met the Prince and Princess of Wales to discuss their separation before his announcement on 9 December 1992.

The Prime Minister: I meet both the prince and princess periodically to discuss a range of issues.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 12 January.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 12 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 5 June 1992, Official Report, column 655, when the further report from the National Radiological Protection Board on mortality and cancer evidence relating to nuclear test veterans will be published; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to the hon. Member for Paisley, South (Mr. McMaster) on 24 November at column 577.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Homelessness

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on the number of homeless persons presently seeking dwellings who are (a) Roman Catholics, (b) Protestants and (c) others in each district of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Mr. Atkins: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I am advised by its chief executive that the information requested is not readily available. However an indication of the total number of homeless persons seeking Housing Executive accommodation is given by the numbers of applicants in the A1 group—emergency housing category—of the executive's waiting list. The number in the A1 group in each executive district as at 30 November 1992 was as follows:

HEALTH

Diethylstilbestrol

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies she has undertaken into the long-term carcinogenic and other side-effects on children born to mothers given DES as a treatment for high blood-pressure during pregnancy in the period 1941 to 1960; if she will assist the formation of DES self-help groups; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: International studies have suggested that Diethylstilbestrol is potentially carcinogenic to daughters of women prescribed the drug and can have potential non carcinogenic side effects on offspring of both sexes.

The Department has supported a study among EC member states aimed at providing information to the public and medical profession. This was undertaken by "DES Action the Netherlands" on behalf of the European Commission. We have no current plans to assist in the formation of DES self-help groups, but it is open to voluntary bodies to seek financial support under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968.

DES was not widely prescribed in this country and the estimated number of women who might develop cancer as a consequence is very small.

The prospect for the early detection of breast and cervical cancer in this country has been greatly enhanced by the introduction of the NHS breast and cervical screening programmes. Additionally, anyone who develops symptoms which worry them should immediately contact their doctor.

Any new information relating to side effects from DES will be monitored in the usual way when it becomes available to the Committee on Safety of Medicines.

NHS Property

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is Her Majesty's Government's practice in respect of use of the proceeds from disposal of national health service land or other property which was in origin substantially funded by charitable donations.

Mr. Sackville: All proceeds from the sale of national health service land and property are retained by the NHS for reinvestment in the NHS.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will outline her decision on the level of prescription charges to be applied from 1 April.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Morley and Leeds, South (Mr. Gunnell) on Tuesday 8 December 1992 at column 633.

Maternity Services

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the report of the departmental study team set up to consider good practice in commissioning and providing maternity services in units led by midwives and/or general practitioners; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I am pleased to announce that the study team's report, entitled "A study of midwife-and GP-led maternity units" has been published today. Copies have been placed in the Library and distributed throughout the national health service in England.

The report sets out principles of good practice in purchasing and the effective use of resources, the roles of clinicians, safety and location of units and quality of service. Although it was based on visits to maternity units led by midwives or general practitioners, many of the principles are relevant to maternity services more generally.

Drug Costs

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list, for each of the last 10 years, the average proportion of the increase in national health service spending attributable to manufacturers' price increases, for each of the 10 groups of prescription medicines and drugs covered by the proposed extension to the limited list.

Dr. Mawhinney: Available data do not permit the effect of manufacturers' pricing increases to be identified separately from other factors affecting the total cost of national health service prescriptions.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Accommodation (Loans)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many loans were given from the social fund in each of the last three years to young people under the age of 21 years living in the Greater London area to help pay a deposit to secure accommodation.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 11 January 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about loans from the Social Fund to help pay a deposit to secure accommodation.

Payments for deposits to secure accommodation are excluded from the Social Fund by the Secretary of State's Direction. However, loans for the payment of rent in advance are available from the Social Fund to assist people moving into accommodation. In the financial year 1990-91, 1,822 such awards were made in the Greater London area totalling £363,366. In 1991-92, 1,854 awards were made to the value of £365,752. The corresponding figures for 1989-90 are not held but you may wish to note that 12,833 awards totalling £1·8 million were made nationally during this year. No information is available as to the age of the applicants to whom awards were made.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy is also being placed in the Library.

Resettlement Units

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the current timetable for the transfer of each of the Department of Social Security resettlement units to independent landlords;

(2) what are the plans for units that are specifically excluded from the transfer programme for resettlement units;

(3) what arrangements have been made by the DSS resettlemenmt unit to guarantee that there will be continued revenue funding for each transferred resettlement unit and any associated replacement provision;

(4) what provision is being made for appropriate replacement accommodation and permanent move-on accommodation for single homeless people currently resident in DSS resettlement units.

Miss Widdecombe: The management of the Resettlement Agency is a matter for Mr Tony Ward, the chief executive. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Tony Ward to Mr. John Battle, dated 12 January 1993:

I am writing in response to the four questions that you have recently asked about the business of the Resettlement Agency of which I am the Chief Executive.

Your first question asked, "What is the current timetable for the transfers of each of the Department of Social Security Resettlement Units to independent landlords?"

Our first exercise to dispose of the resettlement units at Camden in London, and Newbury in Berkshire should be completed by 31 March 1993. At that time this Agency will cease to have any operational responsibility for the units and they will be disposed of to two separate voluntary organisations. We have not yet decided the exact timescales for the nine remaining units which will be subject to similar processes. However, provisional planning is that at least four will be disposed of by the end of March 1994, and at least a further four by the end of March 1995.

Your second question asked, "What are the plans for units that are specifically excluded from the transfer programme for resettlement units?"

Only two of our resettlement units fall into this category, namely Bishopbriggs in Scotland and Leeds. Bishopbriggs is certain to be replaced by other hostel provision. We are, as yet, undecided about the prospects for our unit at Leeds. We are currently considering ways in which the unit could be modernised, but if this is not a practical option then the unit would be replaced by other facilities.

Your third question asked about the guarantees, "that there will be continued revenue for each transferred resettlement unit and any associated replacement provision?"

The current intention is that revenue funding will continue for those organisations which the Agency currently funds, and in the future might fund. However, funding is subject to monitoring arrangements which aim to ensure that the care standards are adequate, that the conditions of grant award are within the legislation, and that the facilities are managed in a way which provides value for money. Providing these conditions are met and subject to overall Government policy, I expect funding to continue.

Your fourth question asked, "What provision is being made for appropriate replacement accommodation and permanent move-on accommodation for single homeless people currently resident in DSS Resettlement Units?" (RUs).

Only two RUs are currently in the process of being replaced. These are the 80 bed unit at Southampton and the 64 bed unit at Stormy Down in South Wales.

At Southampton, by 1 April 1993 the replacement provision will consist of 136 beds at various locations in the region. In South Wales the replacement provision will consist of 65 beds, and an additional 14 beds where we provide financial support.

As I have indicated earlier, the remaining units will mainly be handed over to other organisations and the residents will not be adversely affected by this process.

If you require any further information or advice on my answers to your questions please let me know.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when Elizabeth Pinnock of 45 South Furzeham road, Brixham (NI number YM 87 30 82 A) will learn the result of her appeal against the decision to refuse her disability living allowance; and whether any of her doctors, consultants, osteopaths and chiropracters were consulted before this decision was made.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Anthony Steen, dated 11 January 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions raised about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Mrs. Elizabeth Pinnock's appeal against the decision to refuse her Disability Living Allowance (DLA), and whether any of her doctors, consultants, osteopaths and chiropractors were consulted before this decision was made.

Mrs. Pinnock appealed against a decision to refuse her claim for Mobility Allowance (MobA) on 6 November 1991 and was notified of the outcome of the appeal on 13 December 1992. I am pleased to tell you that the review decision on her DLA claim has also now been notified to Mrs. Pinnock.

As you may be aware, adjudication officers (AOs) are independent of the Benefits Agency in their decision-making and are free to seek such medical advice as they deem necessary to make a decision. General Practitioners, consultants, chiropractors and osteopaths are all among the sources available to AOs before decisions are made. A medical report was obtained from Mrs. Pinnock's GP in pursuit of her appeal.

I am very sorry for the delay in dealing with this case and for any difficulties Mrs. Pinnock has experienced. I wrote to you in greater detail about this on 6 January 1993.

I hope that you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy is also being placed in the Library.

Benefits, Wakefield

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the refusal rate for (a) community care grants and (b) social fund loans at the Wakefield Benefits Agency office in the 1991-92 financial year and from April 1992 to the current date.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefit Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 11 January 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about refusal rates for grants and loans at the Wakefield Benefits Agency Office.

Details of refusal rates for each Benefit Agency District, for the 1991-92 financial year, are in the Library. The number of applications received and refused by each District for the period 1 April 1992 to 30 September 1992 is also in the Library. The refusal rate in Wakefield District for loans and grants for the months of October and November 1992 (the latest data available) is 34·5 per cent. and 78·6 per cent. respectively. I should emphasise that the vast majority of community care grant refusals are because the application fails to meet the basic criteria.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy is also being placed in the Library.

Benefit Take-up

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the take-up figures for the post-1988 reforms income-related benefits will become available.

Mr. Lilley: Estimates of take-up for the post-1988 income-related benefits have been published today. Copies of the report, which relates to 1989 for income support and housing benefit and 1988-89 and 1991 for family credit, have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Child Support Agency

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance she proposes to issue to Child Support Agency staff on the subject of the requirement on mothers to co-operate; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security has today issued guidelines for Child Support Agency staff which describe how he wishes section 6 of the Child Support Act 1991, which deals with applications by those receiving certain benefits and includes a requirement to co-operate in some circumstances, to be applied. Copies of the guidelines have been placed in the Library.

A new system of child maintenance is being introduced on 5 April, which takes the responsibility for determining maintenance away from the courts and puts it in the hands of a new Government body, the Child Support Agency. Both parents have a responsibility for the financial support of their children.

After 5 April, lone mothers who get income support, family credit or disability working allowance will be asked to give the name and other details of their child's father so that the Child Support Agency can arrange for him to pay maintenance for his child. The vast majority of lone mothers claiming income support already provide details of absent fathers although they are not yet required to do so by law. Some mothers, however, decide not to give details of the child's father. These mothers will be asked to supply information after 5 April, unless they or any children living with them would be at risk of harm or undue distress if they did so. Many mothers who receive child maintenance find that it gives them greater flexibility and more choice over the way they organise their lives, particularly as they continue to get maintenance if they go to work, and research shows that many mothers would welcome a return to work. Nevertheless, the Government recognise that in some cases a mother will have genuine fear that disclosing the name of the father to the Child Support Agency will result in a risk of harm or undue distress to her or her children. Mothers will be told, in these circumstances, that the Child Support Agency will act as a buffer between the parents so that, if they do not wish to do so, they will not have to see the child's father, and he will not be told where the mother and her children live. However, if the mother continues to believe, in spite of this, that there is a likelihood that there is a risk to her or the children, then the guidelines will be applied.

The guidelines are not exhaustive and do not provide a definitive list of circumstances which would constitute good cause for not providing information about the absent parent. Rather, they provide guidance which staff will use to help make a decision. Each case will be considered on its merits. Child support staff will be very carefully trained, in a programme devised with the help of Relate, to enable them to deal with their clients sensitively. In general, the mother will have the right to be believed unless what she says is inherently contradictory or implausible. The guidelines also explain the rights of appeal to an independent tribunal.

The same rules for child maintenance will apply in cases where the parent with care of the child is the father, and it is the mother who will be contacted to pay maintenance. In one in 10 cases, the parent with care is the father.

In addition to placing the guidelines in the Library, further copies will be available from the Department.

I understand that the Department of Health and Social Services will shortly be issuing similar guidelines for the Northern Ireland Child Support Agency.

DEFENCE

Royal Navy Ships

11. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has further to reduce the number of Royal Navy ships; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Our plans to move to a smaller and better equipped Navy remain as set out in "Britain's Defence for the 90s". We will move to these force levels while introducing newer and more capable vessels.

Armed Forces Pay

16. Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the effect the armed forces pay increase announced in the autumn statement will have on morale.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government's policy on pay restraint applies across the public sector without exception. Service personnel recognise that they must play their part, along with other public sector workers, in keeping public expenditure under control and contributing to economic recovery.

Peacekeeping (Europe)

17. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the effect of the projected deployment of infantry in peacekeeping roles in Europe on the availability of forces for other purposes.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am satisfied that the restructuring of the Army currently under way will deliver a balanced force that is well matched to our needs and at a level which is adequate to meet the tasks we ask it to undertake.

Industry (Communications)

18. Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to improve his Department's communications with industry.

Mr. Rifkind: We seek continually to develop and improve communication between the Department and industry. Most recently, we have informed the Defence Trade Associations that, from this year, we shall be publishing annually a list of our approved equipment programmes, as an aid to industry in their forward planning.

Oil Pipelines

19. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to increase the revenue of his Department by allowing the private sector to use the oil pipelines under his control.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Spare capacity on the MoD pipeline system has, for a number of years, been let to the private sector and revenues appropriated in aid. The situation is continuously monitored by our managing agents, the Oil and Pipelines Agency, to ensure maximum returns commensurate with strategic requirements.

Bosnia

20. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role of British forces in Bosnia.

24. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the latest situation in Bosnia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer my right hon. and learned Friend gave my hon. Friend the Member for Vale of Glamorgan (Mr. Sweeney) earlier today.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the number and deployment of United Kingdom troops in Bosnia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are currently some 2,500 British troops deployed to Bosnia Herzegovina as part of the United Nations protection force.

Trident

21. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the life of the Trident submarine programme.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Trident force is planned to enter service progressively from the mid-1990s and will provide the United Kingdom's strategic nuclear deterrent capability until well into the next century.

Defence Spending (Scotland)

22. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends to visit Scotland to look at the implications there of reductions in defence spending.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend frequently visits Scotland and gives regular consideration to the effects of reductions in the defence programme there, as he does for all parts of the United Kingdom.

Scottish Regiments and Battalions

23. Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on the review of Scottish regiments and battalions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. and learned Friend gave the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond) earlier today.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

25. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with regard to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We take appropriate opportunities to discuss issues related to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty with those countries already party to the treaty, and to urge the few remaining countries who have not acceded to do so.

Defence Contracts

26. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the nationality of all the companies given contracts for small arms and bullets in the last three years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In addition to companies based in the United Kingdom, companies from the following countries have been awarded contracts for small arms and bullets in the last three years:

Austria
Belgium
France
Germany
Norway
Portugal
Sweden
Switzerland
United States of America

27. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the proportion of British defence contracts placed with British companies.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In order to achieve the best value for money, wherever possible, we place contracts by means of open competition. British companies have proved highly competitive to the extent that, over the past five years, we estimate that 91 per cent. of defence equipment expenditure was spent with United Kingdom firms.

28. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for improving the living quarters for armed forces in Cyprus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Two hundred new houses are currently under construction throughout the sovereign base areas. These will replace 35-year-old prefabricated married quarters. It is planned to start construction of a further 96 married quarters in the eastern sovereign base areas in 1993. Two old barrack blocks in the eastern sovereign base area are scheduled for demolition and replacement by modern style single living accommodation for 150; construction is planned to start in 1993. In addition, the Defence Land Agent is steadily improving the stock as better properties become available.

Warship Orders

29. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement about future plans for ordering warships and auxiliary vessels.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Further orders for warships and auxiliary vessels are planned including type 23 frigates, a replacement for the type 42 destroyers, mine countermeasures vessels and new amphibious ships. Further orders for support ships are also planned.

Departmental Property

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the properties within the responsibility of his Department which are currently empty in the London borough of Greenwich.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 30 September 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 118 vacant service married quarters in the London borough of Greenwich out of a stock of 646. The majority of these are reserved for families returning from overseas within the next two months while others are undergoing or awaiting major maintenance work or modernisation.

In addition, 39 married quarters were in the process of being sold, 30 of these to a housing association at a discount in return for nomination rights for personnel who will be leaving the services over the next few years.

ENVIRONMENT

House Renovation Grants

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for changes to the house renovation grant system; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: As I explained to my hon. Friend the Member for Langbaurgh (Mr. Bates) in my reply of 11 January, during recent months it has become clear that the present renovation grant system is placing increasing financial pressure on a growing number of local authorities, mainly because of the demands of mandatory grants. I have concluded that there is a need to take a further thorough look at the operation of the system, in particular to examine whether it offers the best structure for investing the resources that are likely to be available in future years. Accordingly, my Department will shortly be issuing a consultation paper setting out possible options for change. I shall want to consider very carefully the views expressed by local authorities and others in response to this document.

On 17 December 1992, I announced the resources which we are making available in 1993-94 to support the local authorities expenditure on renovation grants, on other aspects of private housing renewal and on dealing with defective housing. I am pleased to say that, taken together with authorities increased spending power receipts next year, these provide for higher total expenditure than in the current financial year.

On 22 December my officials wrote to the local authority associations consulting them on the amendment regulations to give effect to the changes to the renovation grant system that I announced on 16 July 1992, Official Report, column 1047. These changes will be implemented from 1 April this year. Among other things, these involve adjustments to the means test which will enable more help to be given to low income applicants, a limit of £50,000 on mandatory renovation grants and revised cost limits for minor works assistance and group repair schemes.

These changes are being made without prejudice to further revision of the system, possibly including adjustments to the means test to target resources even more tightly on the poorest households, that I may decide to make for 1994-95 onwards as a result of the review.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Research and Technology

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to terminate the application of attribution in relation to projects in research and development in the United Kingdom which have been granted EC funding.

Mr. Leigh: The DTI does not normally provide top-up funding to those organisations who have secured European Community R and D funding. EC R and D grants have already been set at a level which takes into account the need for the research projects to be completed successfully. I have no plans to change this policy.

The key need in research and development funding is to continue to avoid duplication, by ensuring that Community programmes complement, and are complemented by, our domestic programmes.

Toy Imports

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total value of toys imported into the United Kingdom from China in each of the last five years.

Mr. Needham: Figures prior to 1988 are not available on a comparable basis due to the revision of the standard international trade classification. The available information is given in the table.

United Kingdom imports of toys[1] from China

Kazakhstan

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what plans he has to negotiate a trade agreement between the United Kingdom and Kazakhstan;

(2) what plans he has to meet trade delegations from Kazakhstan;

(3) what plans he has to increase the amount of trade between the United Kingdom and Kazakhstan.

Mr. Needham: Trade between the United Kingdom and Kazakhstan comes within Community competence and, under the United Kingdom presidency of the EC, my Department has played a leading role in securing agreement on a mandate for partnership and co-operation agreements with the republics of the former Soviet Union. Negotiations with Kazakhstan on such an agreement are expected to begin early this year. On a bilateral basis negotiations are now beginning between the United Kingdom and Kazakh authorities on an investment promotion and protection agreement—IPPA.

No officially sponsored trade delegations are expected in the near future but as recently as last November my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade met Vice-President Asanbaev during his visit to London.

My Department intends to build on this visit and on that made by President Nazarbaev in November 1991. The section of the Department that dealt with the former Soviet Union has now been split up and enlarged to provide a separate section on Transcaucasia and central Asia, including Kazakhstan. This new section already provides British companies with information about economic conditions and specific business opportunities and supports them in the market, in which it works closely with the British embassy recently opened in Alma Ata.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Stern: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what discussions his Department has had with the European Commission about lifting the 1998 time limit for the non-fossil fuel obligation—NFFO—as it relates to renewable energy sources;

(2) what representations he has received regarding the impact of planning delays on the viability of waste-to-energy schemes included under the 1991 NFFO renewable order.

(3) how many waste-to-energy schemes are included under the 1991 NFFO renewables order; and how many such schemes have (a) received planning consent, (b) failed to receive planning consent and (c) not applied for planning consent.

(4) what role renewable energy schemes, including waste-to-energy, have in achieving Government targets for reducing greenhouse gas emissions.

Mr. Eggar: The Government believe that renewable sources of energy can make an important contribution to limiting greenhouse gas emissions. We are currently working towards a figure of 1,000MW of new renewable energy generating capacity in 2000. The Renewable Energy Advisory Group has recommended that the Government should underwrite a floor level of 1,500MW of new renewables in the United Kingdom by the year 2000. This recommendation is under consideration. The Government are considering targets for the specific use of waste to generate energy against the background of the Government target of recycling 50 per cent. of recyclable household waste by the year 2000.

There are 42 waste to energy schemes including landfill gas, in the 1991 NFFO renewables order. Planning consents for such schemes are a matter for the generators who put them forward.

Representations about the effect of planning delays on waste to energy schemes have been received from Cory Environmental and from the hon. Gentleman. I am unable to comment on Cory's application for consent for a waste to energy station at Belvedere as I am acting in a quasi-judicial capacity.

Discussions are in progress with the European Commission on the question of support of renewables beyond 1998.

European Space Agency

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the British companies carrying out work in connection with the European Space Agency in order of the value of the contract concerned.

Mr. Leigh: On the basis of the most recent information available, the total value of contracts awarded by the European Space Agency—ESA—to United Kingdom companies in the three years between 1989 and 1991 amounted to the equivalent of 323,194,715 ecu—European currency units. More than 100 United Kingdom companies received contracts from ESA in this period and the following table lists those who were awarded contracts with a total value of more than 850,000 ecu.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on United Kingdom participation in the European Space Agency.

Mr. Leigh: The United Kingdom will continue to participate in the European Space Agency on the present basis. Our most recent initiative within the agency's activities, which I announced on 26 November, 1992, Official Report, columns 818-19, has been to take a major share in a new earth observation programme, Envisat-1, approved by European Space Agency Ministers at their meeting in Granada on 9 and 10 November, 1992.

BAe Space Division

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the effects for the United Kingdom technology base of the Matra/Marconi takeover of the BAe space division.

Mr. Leigh: British Aerospace has discontinued discussions with potential purchasers or partners for its space systems business since it has not been possible to conclude a satisfactory agreement. In the light of that outcome, the British Aerospace board has decided to retain its space systems interests as a wholly owned subsidiary of British Aerospace plc.

Civil Servants

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list each civil servant in his Department with an outstanding consent to become a non-executive director of a private company; if he will give the date his consent was given, the time period, and the companies concerned; and what policy considerations underlie his decisions on giving or withholding consent.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My Department arranges non-executive directorships to companies as part of a programme to develop the knowledge and skills of its senior staff and improve understanding between DTI and business. In selecting candidates for specific opportunities account is taken of potential conflicts of interest. The time periods of directorships are flexible and not normally determined when appointments are made. The table lists the DTI civil servants currently holding non-executive directorships under this programme, with details of the dates they started them and the companies concerned.

Bureaucracy

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made in removing excessive bureaucracy in Government dealings with businesses, organisations and individuals; and what further steps he proposes to take.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Since the general election, a wide range of deregulatory measures has been taken across Whitehall to reduce administrative and regulatory burdens on business. There has also been action to improve the application of regulation by local authorities and the quality of assessments of the potential costs of compliance which are taken into account in deciding whether and how to regulate. Currently, all Government Departments are examining the body of regulation for which they are responsible, whether this originates at the EC or national level or is applied by local authorities. The work is being driven forward by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade who has appointed my noble Friend Lord Sainsbury to assist him and to help strengthen the business contribution to the deregulation initiative. The aim is to identify further scope for reducing the burden on business significantly through simplification and abolition of regulatory requirements and administrative procedures. Taking into account the concerns and views of businesspeople affected by such regulations, each department is drawing up a plan of action for 1993 and beyond. These plans and progress under the initiative generally will be discussed at a forthcoming seminar to be chaired by the Prime Minister. In addition, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade will shortly announce the terms of reference of a scrutiny into the formulation of EC law and its implementation and enforcement in the United Kingdom.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the cost to businesses of implementing (a) EC directives and (b) Government legislation in each year since 1987-88; and what steps he is taking to reduce such costs.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Overall estimates of compliance costs have not been made. Compliance costs of individual measures are made but it is not possible sensibly to aggregate these estimates. A scrutiny will begin shortly into the formulation, implementation and enforcement of EC directives in the United Kingdom with a view to minimising the burden on businesses. All Departments are examining existing legislation with a view to reducing the burdens on businesses through simplification and repeal. In addition, revised guidance has been issued to officials on compliance cost assessments and copies are available in the Library of the House.

Cuba

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what restrictions there are on trade with Cuba (a) generally and (b) in respect of medical supplies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 17 December 1992]: Cuba is on the UK list of destinations for which export licence applications are subject to special licensing procedures. Apart from imports of bananas which are subject to "dollar quota" licensing, there are no UK restrictions on imports from Cuba which are not applied more generally against imports from all sources.

GATT

Mr. Burden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with participants in the Uruguay round of the GATT concerning the proposed creation of a multilateral trade organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 11 January 1993]: The establishment of a multilateral trade organisation was proposed in the draft final act of the GATT Uruguay round, which was tabled in December 1991 by the GATT director general, Mr. Dunkel. It has been the subject of a great deal of discussion between participants in the Uruguay round, including the European Commission who negotiate on behalf of the European Community; the position taken by the Commission has been prepared in discussion with the member states. The MTO was intended to serve as a means of implementing the results of the round and of strengthening the international trading system; it would not in itself alter the rights and obligations under the various Uruguay round agreements. Recently, the United States Government have indicated that they have problems with the constitution of the MTO as proposed, which will require further discussion.

Terrorist Activities

Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what plans he has to accept Government responsibility for compensation for terrorist activities on the British mainland on the basis of the rules in force in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will meet the Association of British Insurers to discuss the implications of the withdrawal of insurance cover for terrorist attacks on premises in Great Britain.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 11 January 1993]: The President of the Board of Trade made an announcement on 21 December that the Government have decided in principle to act as reinsurer of last resort for terrorist attacks against mainland GB non-domestic property and related risks from January 1993. This has enabled insurance companies to continue to offer insurance cover for terrorist attacks, with insurers being able to buy the necessary cover as a separately rated risk. As an insurance solution to the problem has been provided in agreement with the Association of British Insurers, the question of Government compensation does not arise.

Transgenic Animals

Mr. Morley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to ensure that transgenic animals that cannot be kept without adverse effects on their health and welfare will be excluded from patentability under the proposed EC directive on the legal protection of biotechnical inventions.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 11 January 1993]: The European Commission is expected to revise the draft directive in response to a recent opinion from the European Parliament and I will consider any provisions relating to animal health and welfare which may be proposed. However, patent law is not an appropriate means for controlling activities undertaken in the field of biotechnology. Legislation exists covering the welfare of animals and it is reasonable that inventions which respect that legislation should have the benefit of patent protection.

Foreign Investment

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what future plans his Department has to promote the north-east abroad to foreign investors; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what role his Department plays abroad to make the north-east an attractive proposition for investment by foreign businesses.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 11 January 1993]: The Department of Trade and Industry through its Invest in Britain Bureau—IBB—promotes all United Kingdom regions to potential overseas inward investors. Overseas, this national promotional activity is carried out at IBB's direction by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The IBB directly funds the overseas inward investment activities of the English regional development organisations, who each have responsibility for promoting their own particular region. In the north-east this is the Northern Development Company. The NDC has offices in 10 countries, solely to promote the north to potential investors. In addition, the DTI's English unit manages offices in Taiwan and Korea which promote all the English regions to potential investors. These arrangements work well and have attracted many inward investors to the north-east.

North-East Aid

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all the regional aid measures initiated by his Department to aid the north-east; what is the level of (a) Government and (b) private investment in each case; and what is the number of jobs created and safeguarded through each scheme.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 11 January 1993]: Since April 1984, two regional aid schemes run by my Department assisted private investment and were linked to employment. The schemes were regional selective assistance and the revised regional development grants scheme.

Regional selective assistance is available to firms in the assisted areas for investment projects which either create or safeguard employment. Since April 1984 to end December 1992 my Department offered £289 million which was accepted by firms in the north-east in support of projects estimated at £2,865 million. Up to the end December 1992, grant totalling £181 million had been paid in respect of those projects which had created 31,232 jobs and safeguarded a further 8,473.

Under the revised regional development grants scheme which was introduced in development ares in November 1984 and was closed to new applications in March 1988, no grant was paid to undertakings employing more than 200 people unless their projects created employment. To be eligible for grant, projects had to be approved. The amount of capital expenditure that was approved for grant in the north-east was £1,843 million. Since the inception of the scheme up to the end December 1992 grants totalling £193 million had been paid to companies in the north-east and during that time 51,909 jobs had been created.

My Department also provides assistance under the regional enterprise grants scheme aimed at assisting small enterprises with, inter alia, investment projects. Projects supported by this scheme have created employment in the north-east; however, as grant is not directly linked to job creation, employment data are not collected.

Departmental Property

Mr. Straw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list (a) the total number of residential properties owned by his Department, (b) the number of such properties which are empty, and (c), (b) as a percentage of (a).

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 11 January 1993]: My Department has no residential properties.

Companies House

Mr. Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many companies in each of the past five years failed to meet their legal obligations to supply returns to Companies House timeously; and how many of these cases were referred to debt collectors in order to extract penalties;

(2) what process of competitive tendering was engaged in before the Lewis Group was appointed as debt collectors to Companies House; and to what extent payments by Companies House to the Lewis Group are on a commission basis.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 11 January 1993]: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the chief executive of Companies House executive agency for which my Department is responsible. I have therefore asked Mr. David Durham to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from David Durham to Mr. Brian Wilson, dated 6 January 1993:

You recently tabled two Parliamentary Questions to the President of the Board of Trade, asking him: (1) how many companies in each of the past five years failed to meet their legal obligations to supply returns to Companies House timeously; and how many of these cases were referred to debt collectors in order to extract penalties: (2) what process of competitive tendering was engaged before the Lewis Group were appointed as debt collectors to Companies House; and to what extent payments by Companies House to the Lewis Group are on a commission basis. Following the answer given by Mr. Hamilton, I am replying as Chief Executive of Companies House.

Companies House is responsible for ensuring that both annual returns and annual accounts are filed within the time limits set out in the Companies Act. Because companies are continually filing throughout the year it is not possible to give figures on how many companies filed late during any particular year. It is possible to give the number of companies who have not filed either their annual returns or annual accounts, or both, on 30 June for the last five years. It is on this date that Companies House' performance against the compliance target set by Ministers is measured.

	Both	Annual Returns	Annual Accounts
30 June 1992	146,000	101,000	80,000
30 June 1991	214,000	138,000	134,000
30 June 1990	187,000	100,000	142,000
30 June 1989	211,000	126,000	154,000
30 June 1988	183,000	103,000	134,000

These companies were not referred to debt collectors as no penalties were charged prior to July 1992.

Penalties for the late filing of accounts were introduced on 2 July 1992 and since that date 51,736 penalties have been levied of which 12,023 have been referred to the Lewis Group as official recovery agents for Companies House.

A number of firms were invited to tender for assisting Companies House in the collection of late filing penalties revenue. DTI standard procedures were followed in the competitive tendering process and the Lewis Group were finally selected on the basis that having met all the criteria laid down they also offered the best value for money.

As you are probably aware it is not customary to reveal payments to individual contractors following a competitive tender procedure on grounds of commercial confidentiality, however, Lewis Group are paid entirely on a commission basis.

SCOTLAND

Food and Drink

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, how he intends to take forward the initiative announced at the 1992 Royal Highland Show to establish a forum for the industry and public agencies to discuss the generic promotion of Scottish food and drink.

Sir Hector Monro: Scottish Office officials have consulted representatives of food and drink producers and there has been a widespread welcome for this initiative. I have therefore decided to create a Scottish Food Strategy Group, with the following general terms of reference:

"To advise on opportunities for enhancing the performance of the Scottish food and drink industry, particularly in overseas markets, and with regard to the resources available to the public agencies."

As one of its early tasks, I am asking the group to consider the detailed case for developing a single Scottish quality mark for food and drink and to report to me with its recommendations.

I am glad that Mr. James Millar, Chairman of William Low plc, has agreed to chair the group. Other members, who between them share extensive knowledge and experience on the range of issues relevant to the group's work, are:

Mr. Stanley Bernard, Managing Director, Sco-Fro Ltd.

Miss Ann Foster, Director, Scottish Consumer Council.

Mr. David Hall, Managing Director, Halls of Broxburn.

Mr. Adam McCartney, Managing Director, Scottish Pride Quality Dairy Foods.

Mr. Maitland Mackie, Vice-President, National Farmers' Union of Scotland, and Managing Director, Mackie's Quality Farm Foods.

Mr. Donald Morrison, soft fruit farmer, Forfar.

Mr. Brian Simpson, Chief Executive, Scotch Quality Beef and Lamb Association.

Mr. James N. Walker, Director, Walkers Shortbread Ltd.

Mr. John Whitehead, Managing Director, Top Hat Holdings Ltd.

Highlands and Islands Enterprise, Scottish Enterprise and Food From Britain will provide assessors to the group and the secretariat will be provided by the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department.

Economy

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the growth in GNP for the Scottish economy for 1992-93, 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 December 1992]: The Government do not publish forecasts of GNP growth in any of the countries or regions of the United Kingdom, including Scotland.

For reference, the Chancellor's autumn statement included a forecast growth of 1 per cent. in United Kingdom GDP in 1993. I am confident that Scotland will share in this economic upturn.

Detailed projections of the Scottish economy are, of course, made by a number of independent economic consultants.

Drugs

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total general practitioner drug budget for each year since 1989-90 and projected for 1992-93; and what proportion of the budget was spent on each standard age group of patients.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 15 December 1992]: The following are the costs of drugs dispensed each year since 1989-90 and projected for 1992-93. These figures include all presciptions dispensed by community pharmaceutical services: over 99 per cent. of the costs relates to prescribing by general practitioners. It is not possible to identify the proportion of the budget spent on each standard age group of patients.

	£ million
1989-90	233·4
1990-91	257·1
1991-92	288·9
[1]1992-93	323·5

[1] Projected.

European Regional Development Fund

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much of the receipts from the European Community's regional development fund have been awarded to (a) infrastructure projects undertaken by regional and island councils, (b) infrastructure projects carried out by the state, (c) industrial concerns and (d) other programmes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 16 December 1992]: Since 1975 Scotland has obtained assistance from the European regional development fund under a variety of measures and programmes. Not all the records are held centrally, most are in manual form, and none is categorised in the manner set out in the hon. Gentleman's question. Accordingly, the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Hospitals, Angus

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects Tayside health board to announce its plans for the future of (a) Stracathro hospital, (b) Arbroath infirmary and (c) other hospital services in Angus.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 December 1992]: Tayside health board is currently in the process of reviewing its acute services. Options will be considered by the health board in February 1993 and there will then be a period of public consultation. No decisions will be taken about the future of Stracathro hospital, Arbroath infirmary or any other hospital service in Angus, until public consultation is complete.

Skye Bridge

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest estimate of the cost to public funds of the proposed Skye bridge and its approaches.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 January 1993]: The estimate of the cost to public funds of the Skye bridge and its approaches up to the end of 1995 is £7·75 million at June 1988 prices, the price base on which tenders were received. The estimate includes the costs of the approach roads, incorporating changes as a result of the public local inquiry held in January and February last year, and consultants' fees.

Ferry Services

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with local authorities in the east of Scotland on the provision of a roll-on-roll-off ferry service between Scotland and mainland Europe.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 11 January 1993]: None.

Structural Fund

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken within the Council of Ministers to secure a change in the criteria for allocation of structural funds under objective 1 to ensure that the highlands and islands of Scotland are eligible for assistance.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 17 December 1992]: The Edinburgh European Council decided that there should be no change in the criteria for establishing objective 1 areas and agreed that special cases would also be considered where areas did not meet the strict gross domestic product test. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has made clear that the Government will be arguing for the inclusion of the highlands and islands in the list of objective 1 areas.

Scottish Enterprise

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to implement review procedures within Scottish Enterprise to ensure that board members who also lead consultancy firms are not favoured in the awarding of consultancy contracts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 December 1992]: There are already in place within Scottish Enterprise procedures for ensuring that board members do not become involved in the consideration of matters in which they have a financial or commercial interest. These procedures, the rigorous operation of which is supported by the board, apply to the award of consultancy and similar contracts as well as to other business.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the producers' and dairy trades' respective proportionate shares of final retail values, milk prices, for each milk marketing board and their trade counterparts throughout the United Kingdom for each year since 1974.

Mr. Gummer: It is not possible to provide a full reply in the form requested. The Government ceased setting maximum retail prices for milk in 1981 and 1984 for Scotland and the rest of the United Kingdom respectively. Since then, retail pricing has been a matter for dairy companies and retailers.

The average net prices paid to producers by each milk marketing board, each board's average net return for milk sold by it for human liquid consumption and the maximum retail prices for the relevant years are as follows:

Hill Farmers

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish in full the autumn review of hill farming in less-favoured areas.

Mr. Curry: I have placed in the Library copies of the tables dealing with indices of hill farm income, market prices, hill livestock compensatory allowance expenditure and animal numbers which were discussed with the farming unions in the context of the autumn review, along with supplementary tables containing additional background information. Definition of the terms relating to income used in these tables are contained in appendix 3 to "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom", 1992 edition, a copy of which is also in the Library of the House.

Potatoes

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he is taking to ensure that potato growers and consumers in the United Kingdom will be assured of a continuing sufficient supply of British potatoes in the event of abolition of the Potato Marketing Board.

Mr. Curry: The Government are consulting widely on the recently published proposals for an EC potato regime which as drafted do not make provision for the area—quota—controls and support-buying arrangements of our potato marketing scheme. We have long made it clear that our objectives in the light of any proposals for an EC regime in potatoes would be a level playing field of potato production throughout Europe; that the United Kingdom industry can meet all the needs of the market; that the United Kingdom industry can contribute to the export drive; that decisions are based clearly on the best scientific and technical knowledge available. It is also important that we create a climate favourable to investment in the United Kingdom by food processing and manufacturing companies.

Nitrates

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest assessment of the effect of overuse of agricultural nitrates; and what resources his Ministry is putting into research on lower nitrate use.

Mr. Soames: The Ministry operates various programmes to encourage sensible use of nitrogen fertilisers and to monitor the effects of such fertilisers on the environment. Our current assessment is set out at length in the booklet "Solving the Nitrate Problem" which is available in the Library of the House. The findings in the booklet are based in part on the R and D programme instituted by the Ministry to identify ways of reducing nitrate leaching from agriculture. In 1992-93 we are spending £6·9 million on this programme.

Overgrazing

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his assessment of the damage done to upland landscapes and wildlife caused by overgrazing; and if he will reconsider switching payment of grants to farmers to the area of land farmed rather than the number of sheep.

Mr. Curry: Conservation of the traditional upland environment is dependent upon the continuation of extensive livestock farming. Overgrazing of certain types of land can however result in localised environmental damage. The Government have announced a series of targeted measures to deal with this. A switch to paying hill livestock subsidies on an area basis would be hugely disruptive with an uncertain impact on the environment. It would also be contrary to European Community law.

Aflatoxins

Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to introduce controls of aflatoxins in certain products.

Mr. Soames: Regulations introducing limits on nuts, dried figs and their products were laid before Parliament on 18 December 1992 and came into effect on 31 December 1992. The regulations, which are based on advice from the Food Advisory Committee, replace the general controls operated under the Food Safety Act. The main provisions of the regulations are: a statutory limit of 4μg/kg total aflatoxins in supplies for sale for human consumption; a statutory limit of 10μg/kg total aflatoxins in produce imported from third countries for further processing before human consumption.

EMPLOYMENT

Offshore Installations (Standby Vessels)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she is satisfied that all the standby vessels supporting oil and gas installations fully comply with the code in the assessment of the suitability of standby vessels attending offshore installations; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The joint Health and Safety Executive and Department of Transport code on the assessment of the suitability of standby vessels attending offshore installations came fully into effect on 1 January 1993. At that date, all standby vessels attending offshore installations had been certificated as complying with the code, full compliance will be expected before any certificate is issued in the future.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Yugoslavia

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had held with UN representatives with regard to the increase of British troops currently committed in Yugoslavia, or with regard to extending the area of operations for such British troops.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No decision has been taken on the reinforcement of the British forces in former Yugoslavia, but the UN has been made aware that it is under consideration. We have no plans at this time to extend the area of operations of the British forces in former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Duncan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what efforts were made by Her Majesty's Government to promote balanced media reporting during the recent elections in Yugoslavia, and to monitor the way in which they were run.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Westminster Foundation for Democracy, with our encouragement, provided £35,000 as half the cost of independent satellite broadcasts during the run-up and immediate aftermath of the elections, as well as a contribution to the costs of a monitoring team.

EC Presidency

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the total cost to United Kingdom funds of the United Kingdom Presidency of the EC.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The main costs of the United Kingdom presidency were borne by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office vote. Including the Birmingham and Edinburgh European Councils and the London conference on Yugoslavia, they are expected to total around £15.8 million.

Other Government Departments and public sector bodies such as the police have also incurred expenditure on the presidency. Precise figures on their costs are not available.

Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom presidency.

Mr. Hurd: Yes. I have placed in the Library a pamphlet produced by the Foreign and Commonwealth office which gives details of the main items of business covered during the United Kingdom presidency of the Community, from July to December 1992. A copy has been sent to each Member of Parliament.

Treaty on European Union

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which areas of action or competence of the proposed European union incorporated in the draft treaty or treaties tabled by the Dutch presidency and discussed by the Council of Ministers on 30 September 1991 were not included in the treaty on European union signed at Maastricht in December 1991.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The draft treaty tabled by the Dutch presidency in September 1991 differed from that signed at Maastricht essentially in including all areas of co-operation within amendments to the treaty of Rome and thus within Community competence. For example, the Dutch draft made immigration and foreign and security policies matters within Community competence rather than intergovernmental as under the Maastricht treaty.

Croatia

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs by what means and at which date and location the Council of Ministers of the European Community determined policy in respect of the recognition of Croatia; and when and by what means such recognition was signified by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Council of Ministers of the European Community, meeting in Brussels on 15 January 1992, decided that Croatia should be recognised. The Prime Minister wrote to President Tudjman later that day recording the British Government's recognition of Croatia.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Trend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 21 December 1992.

Mr. Hurd: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and I represented the United Kingdom at the Foreign Affairs Council on 21 December. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry was present for the discussion of trade issues.

The Council discussed follow-up to the Edinburgh European Council. On high definition television—HDTV—Ministers held a short discussion on a Commission proposal for a five-year action plan to support the development of HDTV. No decisions were taken and the subject was remitted for further work under the Danish presidency. On enlargement of the Community, Ministers noted that negotiations with Austria, Sweden and Finland would open formally on 1 February.

The Council expressed the Community's willingness to enter into negotiations with EFTA member states on the changes necessary to the European economic area agreement after the negative vote in the Swiss referendum. The Council invited the Commission to submit as soon as possible a recommendation for the opening of these negotiations.

The Council continued discussion of a Commission proposal to change the decision-making procedures for Community anti-dumping and other commercial defence measures, and to establish common rules for imports of goods from third countries. The Council also discussed the export regimes for goods which have both civil and military uses. Pending agreement on the draft regulation on export controls on these dual-use goods and technologies, member states agreed the nature of interim controls which would apply to intra-Community trade in such goods from 1 January.

When the Council discussed the court of first instance, one member state maintained its reserve on the proposed transfer of dumping and subsidy cases from the European Court of Justice to the court of first instance. The Council therefore decided to send the issue back to the Committee of Permanent Representatives for early discussion under the Danish presidency.

Recent developments in the Yugoslav crisis were discussed, including the enforcement of the no-fly zone over Bosnia, Kosovo, implementation of the United Nations and EC sanctions regimes and EDC economic assistance to the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

The Commission presented a draft negotiating mandate for a new partnership agreement with Morocco. Detailed discussion will now take place under the Danish presidency.

In the margins of the Foreign Affairs Council there was a conference of representatives of member states to agree the nomination of new Commissioners.

An EC/Cyprus Association Council also took place in the margins of the Council.

Visa Applications

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration has been given to setting up an office in Ljubljana, Slovenia, to deal with settlement and visa applications.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have no plans at the moment to set up a visa section at the embassy in Ljubljana, but we are keeping the possibility under review. Nationals of Slovenia travelling on national passports do not require visas for the United Kingdom.

Western European Union

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British women employed by the Western European Union hold senior positions within that organisation; and if he will list those positions.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Three British women hold senior positions within the Western European Union. One is head of the private office of the president of the Western European Union Parliamentary Assembly; one is a linguist in the office of the clerk of the Assembly; and one is a linguist in the Western European Union secretariat.

India

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has (a) received and (b) made concerning the religious troubles in India.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have received a number of representations about events in India following the destruction of the Babri mosque on 6 December. We have condemned those responsible for provoking the violence and supported the Indian Government's appeal for calm. We also support the principle of protecting religious minorities and have urged Hindu and Muslim communities everywhere to show restraint and to avoid further provocations or reprisals.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs from which overseas British posts former Yugoslavia nationals are able to apply for visas to visit the United Kingdom; what is the average delay at each post in interviewing those applying for visas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Former Yugoslavia nationals can apply at any British visa-issuing post overseas. Straightforward visitor visa applications are processed within 24 hours of receipt. The method of recording statistics at posts worldwide does not allow us to establish the average waiting time at posts for applicants from the former Yugoslavia who are required to attend for interview.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Cultural Property

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he proposes to sign the 1970 UNESCO convention on the means of prohibiting and preventing the illicit import, export and transfer of ownership of cultural property; how many countries have signed the aforementioned convention; and if he will list them.

Mr. Key: I have been asked to reply.

Her Majesty's Government have no plans to ratify the 1970 UNESCO convention on the means of prohibiting and preventing the illicit import, export and transfer of ownership of cultural property. The 76 contracting states are:

[5] This State lodged a notification of succession on 8 November 1992, by which it stated that it was bound by the Convention that the USSR ratified on 28 April 1988.

Note: The German Democratic Republic accepted the Convention on 16 January 1974. However, on the occasion of the unification of the two German States, it was agreed upon that the united Germany would determine its position with regard to the international treaties adopted by the German Democratic Republic. Germany has not made its position known concerning this Convention.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

New Parliamentary Building

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the modified plans and designs of the phase 2 new parliamentary building to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held from Monday 18 January to Friday 22 January.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Somalia

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what steps he is taking to ensure that British aid to Somalia is reaching the people for whom it is intended.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In order to help ensure that British humanitarian assistance to Somalia reaches those in need, it is channelled through United Nations agencies, British and international non-governmental organisations. Its delivery has been severely constrained by lack of security. We have strongly supported United Nations efforts to improve the security situation through the deployment of United Nations arrmed guards. We also try to ensure that practical arrangements made for delivery of aid to Somalia take full account of local security situations.

We shall take full advantage of any new security arrangements agreed by the United Nations to help the delivery of humanitarian aid.

Written Answers to Questions

HOME DEPARTMENT

Probation Service

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure that the probation service can respond to the employment needs of offenders under its supervision.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 11 January, at column 600.

Immigration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research he has conducted into the economic benefits to the United Kingdom of the arrival of the migrant communities in the last 20 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Home Department has not undertaken any research on this subject.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to commission research into the economic effects of the migrant communities on the United Kingdom economy.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have no proposals to commission research on this subject.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when instructions were sent to the post in Islamabad to issue entry clearance to Mr. Jahir Mahmood—Ref. TH/41452/91—to join his wife in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 17 December 1992]: Following the immigration appeal tribunal's refusal on 24 November 1992 of an application for leave to appeal against the adjudicator's decision to allow Mr. Mahmood's appeal, instructions to issue an entry clearance were sent on 10 December 1992 to the entry clearance officer in Islamabad. These instructions were repeated on 7 January 1993 when it was discovered that the earlier papers had not then reached the entry clearance officer.

Passport Control

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about preliminary passport checks conducted on the tarmac as passengers step off the plane at Heathrow airport; (a) how long this system has been in operation and (b) how extensive it is; and to what extent he proposes to institute the scheme at other airports.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Heathrow and Gatwick airport immigration officers attend some arriving aircraft to check for any passengers who may seek entry without proper documents. This is to ensure that the flight on which such a passenger arrives is identified and that any charge which may arise under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987 is correctly attributed. Such checks are conducted only infrequently at other airports. They have been conducted for this purpose since 1987, although it has long been the practice for immigration officers to observe the arrival of selected flights.

Mental Illness

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had with the Royal College of Psychiatrists about new legal provisions for mentally ill people in the community; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to seek to amend the Mental Health Act 1983; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Royal College of Psychiatrists has recommended that the Mental Health Act 1983 should be amended to incorporate a community supervision order. The college proposes that this should apply to a small group of patients who are repeatedly admitted to hospital under sections 3 or 37 of the Mental Health Act 1983 and who require long-term support and supervision in the community, but are known to have a history of failing to cooperate with treatment.

I welcome the college's proposals as a constructive contribution to the debate about how mentally ill people can most effectively be helped and looked after in the community. Services for the mentally ill in the community have expanded rapidly in recent years and they represent an increasing proportion of the £2 billion budget annually spent on the mentally ill by health and social services departments. But we do need to address, as a priority, whether we are doing enough to ensure that these vulnerable people keep in contact with the services available.

I have recently had discussions on this subject with the college and with a number of other professional and voluntary organisations. I have asked my officials to consider urgently, in the light of the college's proposals, whether new legal powers are needed to ensure that mentally ill people in the community get the care they need, whether the present legal powers in the 1983 Mental Health Act are being used as effectively as they can be, and what action could be taken in advance of any new legislation to ensure that they are.

This work will be taken forward urgently by a small departmental team. It will take full account of the views which outside interests have expressed to me. They and others concerned with services for mentally ill people will be consulted about the work as it develops. My officials will be keeping in close touch with the other Departments concerned including those in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. The team will be reporting regularly to Ministers and I am asking them to complete their work within six months.

British Medical Association

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations she has had with, and what representations from, the British Medical Association concerning hospital bed closures and cancelling operating sessions; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Department holds regular meetings with professional representative bodies, including the British Medical Association and the royal colleges. The problems being experienced by a minority of hospitals in scheduling their contracted work evenly over the financial year have been raised recently. Where such problems are occurring they are being resolved by local managers with help, where necessary, from their regional health authority.

Computer Games

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will institute a research programme into photosensitive epilepsy in children and the effects of computer games as trigger mechanisms.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have no plans for a research programme into photosensitive epilepsy in children. There is a well-established association between certain types of flashing light and epileptic seizures in children known to have photosensitive epilepsy or potential sufferers who for a variety of reasons have not yet been identified. The need for specific action in relation to the information and advice available to users of computer games is a matter for my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

ENVIRONMENT

Tree Preservation Orders

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for making tree preservation orders more effective; and what consultations he has had to consider tougher penalties for those who flout tree preservation orders.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 11 January 1993]: The system of tree preservation legislation has proved its value over the years. However, we are reviewing its general effectiveness and last year introduced substantially increased penalties for contravention of tree preservation orders. On summary conviction, the maximum fine for felling, uprooting or destroying a protected tree is now £20,000, and in determining the fine to be imposed magistrates are required to have regard to the financial benefits which may accrue to the offender in consequence of the offence.

Acid Rain

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the sites of special scientific interest damaged by acid rain in the latest year for which figures are available and give the hectarage of each site of special scientific interest affected.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 12 January 1993]: The information is not available in the form requested. However, a recent study identified 46 sites of special scientific interest in England as being affected to some degree by acid rain. Details of freshwaters affected by acid rain are set out in the report Rimes C. (1992), "Freshwater acidification on SSSIs in Great Britain. I Overview and II England"—English nature science volumes 1 and 2. A copy of this report has been placed in the Library of the House.

Heritage Coasts

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many kilometres of coast in England have been designated as heritage coasts; and what proportion this is of the total coastline.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 11 January 1993]: Since 1973, some 1,450 km of the English and Welsh coastline has been defined as heritage coast. This is approximately one third of the coastline of England and Wales.

TRANSPORT

Speed Limits

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has completed his review of the criteria for setting speed limits; and when he expects to publish his policy document on speed.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We have today published a new circular—roads 1/93—on the criteria for setting speed limits, which offers greater flexibility in setting speed limits, and a policy document "Killing Speed and Saving Lives". Both these documents make a significant contribution to the process of reducing actual speeds and casualties. Copies of both have been placed in the Library of the House.

Public Transport (Capital Works)

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what allocations will be made from his Department in 1993-94 to allow local authorities to undertake public transport capital works.

Mr. Freeman: In addition to the allocations for measures to promote bus use announced on 15 December, Official Report columns 134-35, we shall be making available £119·7 million for local authority public transport capital works in 1993-94.

The allocations are as follows.

Baggage Reconciliation

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy over implementation of the 1993 EC baggage reconciliation directives.

Mr. Steven Norris [holding answer 11 January 1993]: Council regulation (EEC) No. 3925/91 and Commission regulation (EEC) No. 1823/92 concern the elimination of Customs controls and formalities applicable to the cabin and hold baggage of persons taking an intra-Community flight or making an intra-Community sea crossing. One of the detailed rules laid down in the Commission regulation was that hold baggage registered in a Community airport was to be identified by means of a green edged tag with specified technical characteristics. The Commission regulation also required each member state to provide the Commission with a list of airports approved for air traffic with third countries—"international community airports". The regulations are binding in their entirety and are directly applicable in all member states. They applied from 1 January 1993.

The Commission discussed its detailed proposals about baggage tags with the International Air Transport Association and other organisations, and Customs and Excise and my Department discussed the implementation of the rule with United Kingdom airlines and airports. Customs and Excise have notified the Commission of 34 international Community airports in the United Kingdom and have subsequently added Ronaldsway, Isle of Man, to the list. My Department has recently written to all airlines operating in the United Kingdom to remind them of the baggage tagging requirement.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Scottish Arts Council

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the budget of the Scottish Arts Council in 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Brooke: The Scottish Arts Council's grants from the Arts Council of Great Britain were £19,693,000 and £22,691,000 in 1991-92 and 1992-93 respectively. In addition to these grants, the Scottish Arts Council received further income, from various sources, of £183,000 in 1991-92 and £149,000 in 1992-93.

Radio Authority Licences

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many licences the Radio Authority has issued since they were established; and how far the undertakings invested in them have been complied with.

Mr. Brooke: By 11 January 1993, the Radio Authority had awarded two licences for national services, 25 local licences, 419 restricted service licences, eight licences for licensable sound programme services and 11 satellite licences. The authority also licensed 126 local radio services which had earlier operated under contract to the Independent Broadcasting Authority.

The authority considers all written complaints about programming, advertising and transmission aspects of independent radio services and publishes a quarterly complaints bulletin.

Royal Scottish Academy

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what lessons from the Windsor castle fire he has transmitted to the authorities of the Royal Scottish Academy.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 11 January 1993]: None, so far. As I told the House on 7 December, Official Report, column 579, in the light of the fire at Windsor castle I am setting up an inquiry to assess the adequacy of fire protection measures for the royal palaces for which my Department has a financial responsibility. The report of the inquiry will be published and I shall ensure that it is made widely available.

Departmental Property

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list (a) the total number of residential properties owned by his Department, (b) the number of such properties which are empty and (c), (b) as a percentage of (a).

Mr. Key [holding answer 11 January 1993]: (a) My Department manages 156 residential properties of which 12 are owned. (b) Eight of the owned properties are empty while awaiting remodelling and renovation works. (c) 66 per cent. of the owned properties are unoccupied.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Kasakhstan

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the value of trade between the United Kingdom and Kasakhstan; and what is his estimate of the value of trade between each EC member state and Kasakhstan.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

EC trade with Kasakhstan January to June 1992

	Exports £000s	Imports £000s
Belgium/Luxembourg	1,461	710
Denmark	625	6
France	n.a.	n.a.

Source: Eurostat: External Trade and Balance of Payments.
Note: Imports on a CIF basis, Exports FOB.
Totals may not equal sum of components due to rounding.

Only a limited number of countries report separately trade with the former Soviet republics. Prior to January 1992, trade with Kasakhstan was reported as trade with the former Soviet Union as a whole.

The United Kingdom will be collecting data on trade with Kasakhstan from January 1993.

Data are supplied on an ecu basis and have been converted into pounds sterling.

Phosphate

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what importation of phosphate was undertaken by the United Kingdom annually for each year since 1982.

Mr. Needham: Comprehensive statistics on the imports of phosphates are not available. Imports of phosphate are recorded under a large number of categories according to the type of phosphate and its function. The table gives the total figures for the imports of the three largest groups of phosphates: superphosphates, diammonium phosphate and monoammonium phosphate, for each year since 1982.

Imports of phosphates into the United Kingdom

Year	Metric tonnes	£'000s
1982	182,496	21,596
1983	260,878	30,135
1984	282,746	38,386

New Business Development

Mr. Elletson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment his Department has made of the relative potential for new business development by British firms in each of the countries of the former Soviet Union and eastern Europe; and what comparisons he has made with similar assessments of other regions of the world.

Mr. Needham: Within the whole area to which my hon. Friend refers we take the view that the best prospects for British exporters in most sectors other than oil and gas are to be found in Poland, Hungary and the Czech lands, although worthwhile opportunities are also being found in most of the other markets. In oil and gas we see the best prospects in Kasakhstan, Azerbaijan and the Russian Federation. Within the world as a whole we see the best all-round prospects in western Europe, north America and Asian parts of the Pacific rim.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures his Department is taking to encourage British firms to take the opportunities for new business developments in the former Soviet Union and eastern Europe.

Mr. Needham: My Department provides a comprehensive range of services to assist United Kingdom exporters and investors who are interested in the region, including support for outward missions—sometimes led ministerially—and participation in overseas trade fairs as well as the provision of general and specific information about the markets and opportunities. Information about export and consultancy projects under bilateral, EC and multilateral funded assistance programmes is also available and my Department encourages United Kingdom companies to exploit such opportunities.

These services are available from the former Soviet Union, central and east Europe branch of my Department whose resources have been increased in response to the growing interest in these markets. Similarly, the British Overseas Trade Board's area advisory group, the East European Trade Council, has also had its resources augmented.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what importance his Department attaches to the further development of commercial and economic relations with the countries of the Pacific rim; and what measures his Department is taking to encourage British firms to develop new business there.

Mr. Needham: The Asia Pacific rim, like Europe and north America, is a top priority for my Department's trade promotion and market opening work. The region offers the best prospects worldwide for rapid, large-scale and sustained growth of imports and investment. United Kingdom business has a strong position in parts of the region but needs to do much more particularly in such large, growth markets as Japan, China, Korea, Taiwan, Indonesia and Thailand. The region accounts for 8 per cent. of our exports and 6·5 per cent. of our overseas investment. It is the Department's objective to raise this substantially. To that end, 18 per cent. of our overseas trade staff are allocated to work on the region, as well as a substantial proportion of our promotional budget. I have visited the region three times in the past nine months. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, the chairman of the British Overseas Trade Board and I plan more visits to the region this year, mainly with groups of business men. We continue to make a special drive on the Japanese market, through the Priority Japan campaign. We have just held the largest-ever United Kingdom trade promotion in China, involving over 90 business men, and are following it up vigorously. We are also running intensive trade promotion campaigns to pursue opportunities in the other promising markets of the region.

This promotional work is led by business men active in these markets who give their time voluntarily. To focus their contributions more effectively the BOTB has set up a new promotional body covering most of the region's markets, the Asia Pacific Advisory Group, and the equivalent bodies for Japan and China have reorganised. Details of their work are published in the annual forward plan of the BOTB.

In summary, in the financial year 1993-94 we are planning some 68 outward and inward VIP visits, 50 promotional events in the United Kingdom, 217 DTI-supported missions, exhibitions, technical seminars and store promotions in the region and expect to deal with about 23,000 inquiries from British business. In the next few months we will be intensifying this drive through the full-time secondment of experienced business men to the Department as export promoters. We are also working vigorously through multilateral and bilateral channels to improve business conditions in the region, particularly by working for the successful completion of the GATT Uruguay round.

I should be glad to consider additional proposals for intensifying our efforts in these markets, within the resources available to my Department.

Public Houses

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many breweries have complied with the Supply of Beer (Tied Estates) Order 1989—SI 1989 No. 2390; what information his Department holds on the purchasers of public houses under the order; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I understand from the Director General of Fair Trading that all the national brewers have complied with the Supply of Beer (Tied Estate) Order 1989, on the basis of information they have supplied to him. The statutory undertakings given by these brewers to provide the Director General with information to enable him to monitor compliance with the order do not require them to provide details of the purchasers of public houses that are sold. His office does, nevertheless, hold a significant amount of information provided voluntarily by the brewers and compiled from reports that have appeared in the trade press.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what investigations his Department undertakes into the ownership of companies purchasing public houses from breweries en bloc; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Director General of Fair Trading is under a statutory duty to investigate sales of packages of public houses when these qualify as merger situations under the Fair Trading Act 1973. He has also made it clear that he will look very closely at all transactions involving supply agreements. Public houses owned by companies in which a national brewer has a shareholding of 15 per cent. or more, which are tied to that brewer's beer, would count towards its tied pub limit under the Supply of Beer (Tied Estate) Order 1989.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total number of tonnes of coal used to produce electricity in 1991; what tonnage was imported; and what tonnage was British.

Mr. Eggar: The total amount of coal used to produce electricity in 1991 by the major generators was 82 million tonnes of which 7·3 million tonnes was imported. Other smaller, industrial generators used 2 million tonnes of coal to produce electricity in the same period, but data are not available to show how much of this was imported.

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the coal equivalent tonnage of natural gas used in 1991 to produce electricity.

Mr. Eggar: The amount of natural gas used by all generating companies in 1991 to produce electricity was 1·9 million tonnes of coal equivalent.

National Welsh Omnibus Services Ltd.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has received the report of receivers KPMG Peat Marwick into the insolvency of the National Welsh bus company.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Secretary of State received reports on 8 January 1993 from the administrative receivers of National Welsh Omnibus Services Ltd., in respect of the conduct of the directors of that company, pursuant to section 7(3) of the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will institute an inquiry into the financial propriety of the directors of National Welsh bus company in the period leading up to the company's receivership at the end of 1991.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: It is not my Department's policy to comment on the affairs of individual companies. If the hon. Member has information to suggest that an inquiry would be appropriate, my officials will be pleased to consider any information forwarded in the usual manner.

Warren Spring Laboratory

Mr. Hague: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what performance targets he has set for 1992-93 for the Warren Spring Laboratory executive agency.

Mr. Leigh: Warren Spring Laboratory operates in a competitive market. Its primary performance target for 1992-93 continues to be the recovery of full economic cost through the charges it makes to customers. In addition, new secondary performance measures have been developed to supersede those agreed when the agency was originally established in 1989. For 1992-93 these are:

- to recover full economic costs through charges made to customers;
- to achieve the net contribution to the Department set out in Supply Estimates of £362,000;
- to win and complete business to the value of £13·6 million;
- to gain National Measurement Accreditation Service —NAMAS—accreditation for trace inorganic analytical chemistry services and the air quality calibration laboratory.

These targets will in future be reviewed annually as part of the corporate planning process.

Coal Review

Mr. Hague: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many pieces of evidence have been submitted to his Department's coal review; and what plans he has to make the evidence public.

Mr. Eggar: Evidence submitted by 327 individuals and organisations had been received by the coal review team by noon on Friday 8 January. Evidence has been copied to the Trade and Industry Select Committee as we have received it and copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. In cases where those submitting evidence have provided it in confidence, we have sought their permission to pass it to the Select Committee, and where such permission has been given, have done so on a protected basis.

We have also now made the evidence, other than commercially confidential material, more widely available by placing copies in the following libraries where members of the public may call, by appointment, to read it: DTI library and information centre, Ashdown house, 123 Victoria street, London SW1E 6RB, telephone 071 215 4245/4250; DTI energy library and information centre, 1 Palace street, London SW1E 5HE, telephone 071 238 3042; Office of Electricity Regulation library, Hagley house, Hagley road, Birmingham B16 8QG, telephone 021 456 6378.

In addition, copies of individual pieces of evidence, other than confidential evidence, may be ordered from the library at 1 Palace street. A charge will be made to cover the cost of this service.

The full list of those submitting evidence is as follows, with an asterisk indicating those who have asked that their evidence be treated as confidential.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he proposes to set up a national authority to oversee the United Kingdom compliance with the chemical weapons convention; if he will ensure it is fully independent of the Department of Trade and Industry and if it will include experts from outside Government; what parliamentary involvement he proposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 11 January 1993]: The national authority will deal largely with requirements falling on United Kingdom industry, such as provision of information. My Department will therefore be responsible for setting up the national authority. Its structure and organisation will be the subject of consultation with interested bodies in due course.

Board of Trade

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give the date for the next meeting of the Board of Trade; what will be the agenda; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: I have no present plans for a further meeting of the Board of Trade.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Cabinet Papers

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what communications he has had recently from the Institute of Contemporary History in regard to the release of Cabinet and departmental papers from the Public Record Office.

Mr. Waldegrave: Under cover of a letter dated 21 December 1992, Dr. Brian Brivati of the Institute of Contemporary British History, sent me the final report of a conference held on 25 November 1992 at which my invitation to historians to suggest blocks of records for release was considered. I replied to Dr. Brivati on 12 January 1993. I have placed a copy of my letter in the Libraries of the House.

PRIME MINISTER

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister what changes there have been since 27 October 1987 in the guidelines for exports of nuclear materials, equipment and technology by the United Kingdom set out in the statement by the then Foreign Secretary on 31 March 1976.

The Prime Minister: An expansion to the guidelines set out on 31 March 1976 was announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in a statement issued on 24 September 1991 when he introduced the policy of fullscope safeguards as a condition of supply. This means that we do not allow the export of any significant new nuclear supplies or materials to any country, other than the nuclear weapon states, where there are any unsafeguarded nuclear installations.

Edinburgh Summit

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment was made by the European Council at Edinburgh of the net effect of its conclusions on the contributions and receipts of each member state; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The European Council did not explicitly consider the effect of its conclusions on future financing on the contributions and receipts of each member state.

Macedonia

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a copy of the report of the presidency's special representative on the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia to the EC summit at Edinburgh on 12 December.

The Prime Minister: I hope that we can place a copy of this report in the Library soon. But discussion of Macedonian accession to the United Nations is now at a delicate stage in New York. It would not be helpful to this process to make the report public at this time.

Lockerbie Air Crash

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what response he has given to the petition presented to him on the fourth anniversary of the destruction of Pan Am 103 over Lockerbie.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 11 January 1993]: I have received a letter signed by some of the relatives of those who died, and have replied. I sympathise with their loss. I do not believe that there is a good case for an independent public inquiry into the disaster. There has already been a fatal accident inquiry and the criminal investigation is continuing.

The Government continue to put pressure on the Libyans to comply with the United Nations resolutions and to surrender the two suspects for trial in Scotland or the United States.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the yield of restricting (a) the personal tax allowance, (b) the married couple's allowance and (c) the age allowances and the major tax reliefs to (i) the basic rate of tax and (ii) the lower tax rate of 20 per cent. in 1993-94.

Mr. Dorrell: The latest estimates of the direct revenue yields in a full year at 1993-94 levels of income and using the autumn statement assumption of a 3·25 per cent. increase in 1992-93 levels of allowances and thresholds are as follows:

	Restriction to 25 per cent. £ million	Restriction to 20 per cent. £ million
Personal allowance (excluding age related addition)	1,100	5,200
Married couple's allowance	320	1,100
Age allowances[1]	0	100
Pension contribution reliefs[2]	480	1,150

[1] The higher levels of the age-related personal and married couple's allowance given to those aged 65 and over subject to the income limit.
[2] Employees' contributions to occupational pension schemes and contributions to personal pensions including retirement annuity premia and free standing additional voluntary contributions.

Mortgage interest relief is currently restricted to the basic rate of tax. Restricting it to 20 per cent. would yield £1,000 million in 1992-93 assuming interest rates remain at current levels for the rest of the year. The yield for 1993-94 has not been shown since it would depend on the pattern of borrowing, the eligibility of borrowers for mortgage interest tax relief, tax rates and interest rates in that year.

No account has been taken of possible behavioural change resulting from such restrictions, and the figures shown represent the yield from restricting each allowance separately. If two or more allowances were restricted, the total yield would be greater than the sum of the figures for individual allowances.

Cigarette Tax

Mr. Stern: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the amount of tax paid on a pack of the most popular price category cigarettes in each EC member state and the average price of a pack of 20 cigarettes in each country; and what the figures were in 1990.

Sir John Cope: We do not have information on the average price of a pack of cigarettes in other member states. The tables show the price of the most popular price category—MPPC.

(a) Tax and price on the MPPC in November 1992, based on exchange rates as on 1 October 1992.

	Total tax (pence)	Most popular price (pence)
Belgium	142	185
Denmark	246	288
France	111	148
Germany	139	192
Greece	38	63
Ireland	184	245
Italy	81	113
Luxembourg	103	140
Netherlands	102	147
Portugal	88	112
Spain	25	40
United Kingdom	170	227

(b) Tax and price on the MPPC in 1990, based on exchange rates as on 20 December 1990.

	Total tax (pence)	Most popular price (pence)
Belgium	79	110
Denmark	197	229
France	70	104
Germany	103	141
Greece	32	45
Ireland	131	179
Italy	62	86
Luxembourg	56	78
Netherlands	72	102
Portugal	42	57

United Kingdom	131	180

European Monetary Union

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with the German Government on the mechanisms for moving to stage three of economic and monetary union, following the steps taken towards ratification of the treaty on European union by Germany on 2 December.

Mr. Nelson: None.

Insider Dealing

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many cases of insider dealing were reported to the authorities in each year since 1987.

Mr. Nelson: Alleged cases of insider dealing are generally detected by the stock exchange through its monitoring of share dealing. Following a preliminary investigation, the stock exchange informs the Department of Trade and Industry when it believes that there is a prima facie case. That Department has powers to investigate and to bring prosecutions where appropriate. The cases referred to the DTI in this way since 1987-88 are set out in the table.

Alleged cases of insider dealing reported to the DTI by the stock exchange between 1987-88 and 1992-93[1]

Year	Cases reported
1987-88	29
1988-89	33
1989-90	21
1990-91	8
1991-92	11
Total	104

[1] A case may have led to more than one person being prosecuted. The information for 1992-93 relates to cases which were reported to the DTI between April and the end of December 1992.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many cases of insider dealing have been prosecuted in each year from 1987 to date; and how many of these prosecutions resulted in (a) conviction and (b) acquittal.

Mr. Nelson: The information is given in the table.

Insider dealing prosecutions between 1987-88 and 1992-93[1]

Year	Cases	Prosecutions	Convictions	Acquittals
1987-88	3	3	3	0
1988-89	1	1	0	1
1989-90	10	14	4	9
1990-91	1	2	2	0
1991-92	5	8	3	5
1992-93	1	5	4	1
Total	21	33	16	16

[1] The figures in the final three columns reflect the number of individual defendants who were prosecuted, and the verdict reached, in the 21 insider dealing cases which have been concluded since April 1987.

The figures for 1989-90 include one prosecution which was subsequently withdrawn.

Car Leasing

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place a copy of the guidance produced by the Treasury's central unit on purchasing on car contract hire or lease schemes for public bodies in the Library.

Mr. Portillo: A copy of the guidance will be placed in the Library today.

Management Buy-outs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidelines he has set for the funding of merchant banking consultancy advice in relation to proposed management buy-outs of the whole or part of the operations of non-departmental public bodies, (a) pursuant to statutory approval, (b) without statutory but with ministerial approval and (c) without either statutory or ministerial approval; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Treasury has issued written guidance to Departments on aspects of trade sales, including the funding of management buy-outs—MBOs. It also advises Departments on the funding of MBOs on a case-by-case basis.

Investment Business

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the licences granted by his Department to firms or sole traders to conduct investment business under the provisions of the Prevention of Fraud (Investments) Act 1958, since 27 February 1988, with the date in each case; and what was the reason for granting each licence.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 11 January 1993]: Principals' licences were issued to the following on the date shown:

Licensed dealer	Date
Spencer Thornton Investment Management Services	7 March 1988
York Australia (UK) Ltd.	7 March 1988
Oxford Seedcorn Co. Ltd.	7 March 1988
Securities and Commodities Investments plc	21 March 1988
London and Bishopsgate International Investment Management plc	25 April 1988

Under the Prevention of Fraud (Investments) Act 1958 persons wishing to carry on the business of dealing in securities required a licence from the Secretary of State unless they were exempted dealers or members of a recognised stock exchange or recognised association of dealers in securities. The Secretary of State was obliged to issue a licence unless, on the basis of the criteria specified in the Act, they appeared not fit and proper.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many applications were made to his Department in each six-month period since 27 August 1987 to obtain a licence for conducting investment business under the provisions of the Prevention of Fraud (Investments) Act 1958; and how many of these applications were granted.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 11 January 1993]: Twenty-one applications for principals' licences under the Act were received between 27 August 1987 and 27 February 1988. One application was received between 27 February 1988 and 29 April 1988 when the Act was repealed. All of these applications were granted.

Post Office Savings

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the increase or decrease in turnover in sub-post office business following the latest increase in the minimum amounts for deposits into the national savings investment account and the ordinary account, and for the purchase of premium bonds by parents and other for children aged under 16.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 11 January 1993]: The work carried out by Post Office Counters Ltd.—(POCL)—in respect of all national savings products represents less than 5 per cent. of POCL's total business. The Department for National Savings expects to save about £4 million in agency charges in a full year from the planned changes. This represents less than 0·5 per cent. of total POCL turnover of £1 billion.

WALES

Labour Statistics

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 24 November 1992, Official Report, columns 628-30, if he will give the total percentage of economically inactive males aged 16 to 64 years in the valleys programme districts.

Mr. David Hunt: The latest available figures for the percentage of economically inactive males in the valleys programme districts are for 1991 and are given in the table.

Percentage of economically inactive population in 1991 (males aged 16 to 64)

District[1]	1981[2]	1991[3]
Dinefwr	14·2	21·7
Llanelli	12·9	22·6

Port Talbot	14·2	24·7
Swansea	12·8	20·7

Source: Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

[1]District figures include areas outside the Valleys Programme boundary.

[2]1981 data are extracted from the 1981 Census.

[3]1991 data are extracted from the Census County Monitor series CEN 91 CM.

The 1981 census recorded all students as economically inactive whereas the 1991 census distinguished between those economically active and inactive.

In answering this question, it has become apparent that the estimate of the economically active percentage of the adult male population in Brecknock in 1981 given in my answer on 24 November 1992, at column 629, should have been 87·5 and not 87·3.

Orimulsion

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile), of 26 October 1992, Official Report, column 473, what further consultations he has had with Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution regarding National Power's application to burn orimulsion at Pembroke power station; and when he expects to receive Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution report.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution announced on 22 December 1992 that National Power had written to the inspectorate seeking to withdraw for now its proposals for the use of orimulsion at Pembroke power station.

Health Service, South Glamorgan

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has had from the British Medical Association central consultants and specialists committee concerning cancelled operating sessions and bed and ward sessions in South Glamorgan.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Angola

13. Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the latest situation in respect of international efforts to establish peace in Angola.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The international community continues actively to support the efforts of the United Nations to secure full implementation of the Bicesse peace agreements in Angola. We fully endorse the recent call by the president of the Security Council for an end to fighting and a dialogue between both sides.

Yugoslavia

14. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the conflict in the former republic of Yugoslavia; if he will bring pressure to bear on the republic of Serbia to prevent further escalation of conflict; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has received many representations on this subject. The Edinburgh European Council declared that the Serbian nation faced a clear choice: if there were a radical change of policy it would be gradually readmitted into the international community. But if the Belgrade regime continued its present policies, existing sanctions would be tightened and extended to isolate Serbia totally.

United States of America

15. Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's relationship with the United States of America.

Mr. Hurd: The United Kingdom's relations with the United States are in excellent shape and we expect them to remain so.

29. Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what importance he attaches to the relationship between the United Kingdom and the United States of America.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Britain and the United States have a close bilateral relationship to which both Governments attach high value.

31. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to meet President-elect Clinton to discuss the relationship between the United Kingdom and the United States of America.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister looks forward to meeting the President-elect and the Secretary of State designate at the earliest opportunity.

Indonesia

16. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom relations with Indonesia.

Mr. Goodlad: The United Kingdom maintains friendly and constructive relations with Indonesia. I visited Indonesia last October and my hon. Friend the Minister of Trade was there a few days ago.

European Political Co-operation

17. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent common policy initiatives have been taken by EC Foreign Ministers under the European political co-operation procedure.

Mr. Garel-Jones: During the United Kingdom Presidency of the European Community we initiated and co-ordinated EC action in many areas of foreign policy. These included attempts to find a peaceful solution to the conflict in the former Yugoslavia, encouragement of a constitutional settlement in South Africa, efforts to provide effective aid to Somalia and support for the coalition force implementing United Nations Security Council resolution 794, participation in the middle east peace process and playing a leading role in CSCE discussions. The United Kingdom Presidency also saw the development of EC co-operation and political dialogue with many countries and regional groups, including the United States of America, Japan and central European countries. The EC has also played an active role during the United Kingdom Presidency in the human rights field.

Japan

18. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom relations with Japan.

35. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on recent developments in the United Kingdom's relations with Japan.

37. Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom relations with Japan.

Mr. Goodlad: Relations between the United Kingdom and Japan are excellent. They are marked by regular contacts between British and Japanese Ministers and senior officials. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister had a constructive and friendly meeting with Prime Minister Miyazawa in July. Since the mid-1980s our trading relationship has greatly improved, with a considerable increase in British exports to Japan over that period. There is a longstanding and continuing welcome for Japanese investment in the United Kingdom. We aim to broaden and improve the relationship yet further.

Bosnia

19. Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on safe havens for refugees in Bosnia; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration his Department has given to the establishment of safe havens for non-combatants in Bosnia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations protection force, which includes British troops, is helping the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to deliver humanitarian relief to refugees and others trapped by the conflict in Bosnia. We believe that their activities are creating de facto relief areas which are a more effective and viable way of providing protection and relief than specifically demarcated militarily protected safe havens.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment has been made of the number of aircraft flights that have transported (a) Serbian, (b) Croatian, and (c) Muslim forces in Bosnia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The United Nations Secretary-General has issued regular reports to the Security Council giving details of violations of the no-fly zone established by resolutions 781 of 9 October and 786 of 11 November. It is clear from these that, to varying degrees, all parties in Bosnia-Herzegovina have conducted flights outside the terms permitted in the resolutions. We have no firm evidence that any of these flights were carrying troops.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment has been made of the number of aircraft flights that have been used by (a) Serbian, (b) Croatian, and (c) Muslim forces in Bosnia for the purposes of military reconnaissance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The United Nations Secretary General has issued regular reports to the Security Council giving details of violations of the no-fly zone established by resolutions 781 of 9 October and 786 of 11 November. It is clear from these that, to varying degrees, all parties in Bosnia-Herzegovina have conducted flights outside the terms permitted in the resolutions. It is likely that some of these flights will have been used to carry out visual reconnaissance.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information has been provided by his Department's personnel to the United Nations about human rights violations in Bosnia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The preliminary report of the investigative mission on the treatment of Muslim women in former Yugoslavia, led by Dame Anne Warburton, has been submitted to the United Nations Secretary-General. Its full report will be drawn up after the second phase of the mission. This will be submitted to the United Nations commission of experts.

EC Decision-making

20. Mr. Hoon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will next be meeting the President of the European Commission to discuss the reform of the European Community's decision-making process.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans to discuss further reforms of the Community's decision-making process with the president of the Commission in the immediate future. The Maastricht treaty, when it enters into force, will involve some changes. Before that, following agreement at Edinburgh a number of changes designed to ensure subsidiarity is respected will be given effect immediately.

Somalia

21. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met his counterparts representing the member states of the Security Council of the United Nations to discuss the peacekeeping activities of the United Nations in Somalia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Foreign Ministers of the member states of the Security Council have not met to discuss Somalia. Our ambassador to the United Nations joined in the discussion which led to Security Council resolution 794 and keeps in close contact with the Secretary General and other Security Council members.

Pakistan

22. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet the Foreign Minister of Pakistan to discuss the state of democracy there; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans at present to meet Mr. Kanju or any other member of the Pakistan Government.

Russia

23. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations between the United Kingdom and Russia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Relations are excellent. President Yeltsin paid a highly successful official visit to Britain in November during which the first general treaty on British-Russian bilateral relations since 1766 was signed. Our two countries are working together on an unprecedented range of subjects, including key international problems.

Maastricht Treaty

24. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next proposes to discuss ratification and implementation of the Maastricht treaty with other EC Foreign Ministers.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Maastricht treaty will enter into force on the first day of the month after the last member state has ratified. Denmark and the United Kingdom have still to ratify the treaty. Foreign Ministers regularly review the state of the ratification process, with a view to implementation. We will continue to do so.

33. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his European counterparts about the expected date for ratification of the Maastricht treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Maastricht treaty will enter into force on the first day of the month after the last member state has ratified. Ten member states have completed the parliamentary ratification process; three of these still have to complete formal ratification. Denmark needs to hold a further referendum. In the United Kingdom ratification follows passage of the necessary legislation through Parliament.

Hong Kong

25. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the safeguards in place to protect British-owned assets and investments in the Crown colony of Hong Kong, on the return of the colony to the People's Republic of China in 1997; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The laws of Hong Kong will safeguard all foreign-owned assets and investments after 1997, as they do now. This will include British-owned assets and investments. The Sino-British joint declaration of 1984 provides for the continuation of the legal and financial systems which are the foundation of Hong Kong's status as an international centre of finance.

Commonwealth of Independent States

26. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement regarding Britain's relations with the independent states within the CIS.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have diplomatic relations with the 10 CIS countries, as well as Georgia and Azerbaijan and the three baltic states. We have resident diplomatic missions in six of these states. Our bilateral relations are developing briskly. President Yeltsin paid an official visit in November, and the first United Kingdom-Russia treaty since 1766 was signed. President Kravchuk will visit next month.

European Community (Enlargement)

27. Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what timetable is proposed for enlargement of the European Community.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Edinburgh European Council agreed to launch accession negotiations with Austria, Finland and Sweden. They will open in early February. Negotiations with Norway are likely to begin not long afterwards. The Government will be working for an early and successful conclusion to the negotiations which would permit accession around 1995. Work is now under way to prepare the Visegrad countries of eastern Europe for eventual Community membership—an objective endorsed for the first time by last month's European Council.

28. Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment has been made of the advantages accruing to the north-east of England resulting from enlargement of the EC to include Norway and Sweden.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs expects the enlargement of the EC to benefit all regions of Britain. The extension of the single market will provide more opportunities for British business men and greater choice for the British consumer. It should boost economic growth and create jobs.

United Nations

30. Dr. Liam Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the role the United Nations plays in the peaceful settlement of conflicts.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations has a key role to play in promoting the peaceful settlement of disputes, as is reflected in "Agenda for Peace". The United Kingdom has called for greater resort to preventive diplomacy, including fact-finding missions and the use of the Secretary-General's good offices. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs said in his speech to the general assembly on 22 September,

"preventive diplomacy is quicker, more helpful to peoples about to be embroiled in conflict than the most successful peace-keeping or peace-making operation which follows the outbreak of violence. It is also less costly, in terms of lives and cash".

EFTA

32. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met his Swiss counterpart to discuss matters relating to EFTA.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs last met Foreign Minister Felber on 15 December in Stockholm. They discussed the future of the European economic area agreement and Switzerland's application to join the EC, in the light of the recent negative vote in the Swiss EEA referendum.

Single European Market

34. Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress on the single European market following the Edinburgh summit.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Edinburgh European Council declared the single market complete in all essential respects. The United Kingdom will now lay emphasis upon ensuring that the single market works in practice and on completing work in areas such as intellectual property, transport, and energy and telecommunications liberalisation.

EC-ASEAN Relations

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress there has been in the development of relations between the European Community and the ASEAN countries.

Mr. Goodlad: Considerable progress has been made in strengthening relations during the United Kingdom presidency. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has personally attended two ministerial meetings with ASEAN in Manila. The outcome of the EC-ASEAN ministerial meeting in October will boost co-operation in a range of fields, including trade, environmental protection, technical co-operation and human rights.

Burma

38. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to seek a meeting with Aung San Suu Kyi to discuss human rights in Burma; and what recent representations he has made to the Burmese Government about her detention.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no current plans to visit Burma. He has raised Aung San Suu Kyi's detention with the Burmese ambassador on 14 September 1992. We continue to be concerned at the lack of progress towards her release and about human rights generally in Burma.

Together with our EC partners, we co-sponsored the resolution adopted at the United Nations General Assembly last month which condemned Burma's human rights performance and specifically called for Aung San Suu Kyi's unconditional release.

Edinburgh Summit

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government intend to register with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, pursuant to article 102 of the United Nations charter, the decision of the Head of State and Government meeting within the European Council held at Edinburgh on 12 December 1992 concerning certain problems raised by Denmark.

Mr. Garel-Jones: This matter is under consideration. I will arrange for the right hon. Member to receive a written reply.

Poland

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom commitment to Polish membership of the EC.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The United Kingdom has long supported EC membership for Poland and other central European countries as soon as they are ready. The objective of their accession was endorsed for the first time by the European Council at Edinburgh, which identified the EC association agreements as the means to prepare them for this. The United Kingdom, which was the first EC member state to ratify these agreements, is now working to ensure that they are implemented in full and developed.

SCOTLAND

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will introduce a leakage prevention programme for all refrigeration and air conditioning equipment owned and operated by his Department; if he will publish targets for reductions in leakages; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will implement a refrigerant recycling and reclaim policy covering all departmental equipment currently using chlorofluorocarbons and hydrochlorofluorocarbons; if he will publish targets for departmental reuse and recycling; if he will implement an equipment conversion and replacement programme for all departmental uses of CFCs and HCFCs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 December 1992]: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as the necessary information has been collated.

EMPLOYMENT

National Training Task Force

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many members of (a) the Training and Enterprise Council committee and (b) the Employer Investment committee, advising the national training task force are (a) women, (b) from an ethnic minority and (c) people with disabilities, in numbers and as a percentage of the group.

Mr. McLoughlin: There is one (14·25 per cent.) woman member and one (14·25 per cent.) member from an ethnic minority group on the TEC Committee and one (6·6 per cent.) woman and one (6·6 per cent.) member from an ethnic minority group on the Employer Investment Committee which advises the NTTF. There are no members who have registered or non-registered disabilities.

Youth Unemployment

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people aged 16 and 17 years in Birmingham are not in employment, not on a youth training scheme and not in full-time education.

Mr. McLoughlin: In October 1992 there were 213 unemployed claimants aged 16 and 17 years in the local authority district of Birmingham.

Changes to the benefit regulations in September 1988 coincided with the extension of a guaranteed YTS (now YT) place to all those aged under 18 not in full time education or employment, which meant that those who declined an offer of a YTS place were no longer entitled to benefit. However, there are still a small number of under 18-year-olds entitled to benefit due to special circumstances, such as severe hardship or by virtue of their being orphans.

Complementary Medicine

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what EC directives apply to the education and training of complementary medicine practitioners.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are two directives concerned with the recognition of education and training. The First Diploma Directive, 89/48/EEC, was implemented in the United Kingdom in April 1991 and covers degree level qualifications. The Second Diploma Directive, 92/51/EEC, is due to be implemented in June 1994 and will cover those qualifications awarded on completion of higher education courses of up to three years duration and equivalents including national and Scottish vocational qualifications. Both directives are concerned with regulated occupations.

The Osteopaths Bill is having its second reading this month and it is possible that osteopaths may subsequently fall within the coverage of the First Diploma Directive.

The extent to which other fields of complementary medicine are covered by the Second Diploma Directive will emerge as the implementation proceeds towards June 1994.

DEFENCE

Explosive Ordnance Disposal

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the future of 33 Regiment explosive ordnance disposal.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: 33 Engineer Regiment (EOD) is currently located in a number of sites within Chatham garrison. It is proposed, subject to consultation with the trades unions, that the regiment should relocate to Carver barracks, Wimbish. This move would allow it to be concentrated in one site, thus reducing overheads, and would ensure the future of Carver barracks, which is to be vacated by the 16th/5th the Queen's Royal Lancers on their amalgamation with 17/21 Lancers, currently based at Tidworth. It is too early to say what would be the implications for civilian staff at Chatham but it is hoped that they may be employed by other units within the garrison.

Army Personnel Centre

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 10 June 1992, Official Report, column 176, if he is now in a position to make a statement about his plans for an integrated army personnel centre outside London.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: On 10 June 1992, at column 176 I announced the start of a stuty into the efficiency and cost effectiveness of forming an integrated Army personnel centre outside London.

The study team concluded its work by recommending the formation of an Army personnel centre by 1995 in existing commercial office buildings in Glasgow. The Army personnel centre would encompass the staffs of the Adjutant General and the Military Secretary, including the manning and record offices, regimental pay offices and army pay office (officers' accounts). The existing offices at Chester, Exeter, Leicester, York and Ashton-under-Lyne, and the relevant MOD offices in London and Stanmore would close during 1995-96. Exceptionally, all staff, including those serving in non-mobile grades, would be offered the opportunity to move at public expense. Very substantial efficiency savings, including a reduction of 38 per cent. in overall numbers, would result.

I propose to accept this recommendation subject to further consideration of the final location of a very small number of staff whose work requires them to be in the south of England. I am today starting a 30-day consultation period with all concerned, including the trade unions.

I have today placed a copy of the consultative document in the Library of the House.

Bosnia

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British service personnel currently deployed in Bosnia are trained in forward air control techniques; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: For the type of forces deployed in Bosnia-Herzegovina it is usual, and is the case, to have one forward air control-trained officer as part of the headquarters.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to the provision of additional artillery equipment to British forces in Bosnia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The size and equipment requirements of the battalion group deployed to Bosnia is kept under review to ensure that the force is able to carry out its task of escorting humanitarian aid convoys.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the communications equipment currently being used by British forces in Bosnia is capable of being used for forward air control; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The battalion group has been issued with communications equipment from the normal range of equipment issued to army units. These equipments have the ability to communicate with aircraft where this is necessary.

Mozambique

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what consideration has been given to the deployment of British forces to Mozambique; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consideration has been given to deploying troops currently stationed in Zimbabwe to assist United Nations operations in Mozambique; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We do not anticipate deploying British forces as part of the United Nations force in Mozambique—ONUMOZ—nor do we anticipate deploying British troops stationed in Zimbabwe to assist United Nations operations in Mozambique. At the United Nations request, however, a British officer has been temporarily seconded to ONUMOZ from the United Nations force on the Iraq/Kuwait border—UNIKOM. We believe that we are best placed to contribute towards a more comprehensive peace settlement through our offer to help train a new unified Mozambican army.

Iraq

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what factors he takes into account when assessing the effectiveness of enforcing the no-fly zone in southern Iraq.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The no-fly zone in southern Iraq was established with the aim of monitoring Iraqi military activity and deterring repression of the civilian population, in support of UNSCR 688. We believe that the no-fly zone is making an important contribution to securing the safety of the civilian population in southern Iraq, although the zone alone cannot solve the problem.

UN Operations

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration the "Options for Change" programme gave to the requirements for the involvement of British forces in UN operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government's plans for force restructuring recognised that new peacetime commitments, including United Nations operations, could arise in the changed strategic setting. These plans place increased emphasis on the flexibility and mobility required of forces undertaking such operations, as does NATO's new strategic concept.

20. Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 15 December, Official Report, columns 131-32, from which (a) employment, (b) environmental and (c) health and safety legislation his Ministry is exempt from.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence is part of the Crown. It is a well established rule that the Crown is not bound by a statute unless this is specifically stated, or it is clear that the Crown is to be bound by implication. To list all legislation affecting employment, environment and health and safety matters which does not apply to the Crown would therefore involve disproportionate effort and cost.

As set out in the citizens charter, it is now Government policy to take legislative opportunities to apply such regulatory standards to the Crown. Even in circumstances where the Crown is not bound by legislation it is Government policy that it should comply as though requirements apply to it, wherever this is appropriate and practicable.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 14 January 1993

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Matrix Churchill

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General what consideration is being given to bringing charges of perjury against civil servants who gave evidence in the Matrix Churchill case.

The Attorney-General: As a result of the submission to the Crown prosecution service by Her Majesty's Commissioners of Customs and Excise, of papers touching upon evidence given at the trial of three employees of Matrix Churchill, a police investigation is currently being carried out. Any decision as to the prosecution of an individual or individuals, arising out of evidence given at that trial, will be made by the Director of Public Prosecutions at the conclusion of the police investigation, and after she has had the opportunity of studying the findings of that investigation.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Structure Plans

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received over the need for agreed local structure plans to be amended, and future structure plans to be drafted, so as to allow for the effects of the recession in the south of England on the likely growth of the working population there; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: None, but I would expect such representations to be made to county councils. There is a statutory requirement for them to prepare structure plans that take account of economic and social considerations, and to keep all matters under review that may be expected to affect the development of their areas or the planning of development there.

Derelict Land Grant, Walsall

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much derelict land grant expenditure there has been in the Metropolitan borough of Walsall council district in each year since 1984.

Mr. Baldry: Derelict land grant expenditure in the metropolitan borough of Walsall council district since 1984 is as follows:

	Expenditure (£)
1984-85	1,416,000
1985-86	1,339,000
1986-87	3,026,566
1987-88	3,117,492
1988-89	3,474,318
1989-90	3,778,999
1990-91	3,738,123
1991-92	4,222,623
[1]1992-93	3,838,000
Total	27,951,121

[1]Forecast.

A further £22,655 derelict land grant has been paid towards reclamation schemes carried out by non-local authority applicants in the metropolitan borough of Walsall council district.

Housing, Walsall

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new homes will be provided by Walsall metropolitan borough authority in 1993-94; what is the total provision from central funds which will be received by the authority in support of capital expenditure on housing; and what capital expenditure he expects the authority to incur next year.

Mr. Baldry: The level of local authority housing capital expenditure in Walsall in 1993-94 is a matter for the borough council to decide in the light of the available resources. The authority's proposed programme for housing capital expenditure in 1993-94, included in their housing investment programme—HIP—submission, indicates no expenditure on new housebuilding by the council. Walsall's HIP allocation for 1993-94 is £10,474,000.

Urban Programme

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the amounts spent by (a) local authorities and (b) other organisations preparing bids for urban programme funding for 1993-94.

Mr. Robin Squire: It is not our practice to make such estimates. The work will have informed authorities' consideration of what projects to put forward for support from the urban partnership fund; and what to support from their own usable capital receipts.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of all letters and other material sent out by his Department during 1992 dealing with bids for urban programme funding for 1993-94.

Mr. Robin Squire: No. This material could be assembled only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will break down the extra spending power that he forecasts the urban programme authorities will have as a result of the relaxation of the rules governing the use of capital receipts, by authority;

(2) if he will make a statement on how he calculated the figure of £500 million as the extra amount that the urban programme authorities would raise as a result of the relaxation of the rules regarding capital receipts.

Mr. Robin Squire: We estimate that authorities will have £1·75 billion of extra usable capital receipts as a result of the relaxation in receipts rules based on authorities forecasts of their receipts in 1992-93. Historically, the urban authorities have had about 30 per cent. of the national total of usable receipts. If this proportion applied to the extra usable receipts, it would provide the urban authorities with about £0·5 billion of extra usable receipts. We have not made any estimates of these receipts at the level of individual local authorities. Local authorities have provided their own forecasts of the receipts they expect to receive during 1992-93 and this information is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total amount of private sector funding given to schemes supported by the urban programme in the current and last three years.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is available for three years only, as follows:

Private sector funding of urban programme projects

Year	£ million
1990-91	35·4
1991-92	22·2
1992-93	42·4

Source: Local authority annual urban programme submissions.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total number of jobs that have been created and preserved by the urban programme since its inception,

Mr. Robin Squire: The urban programme has created and preserved 230,990 jobs between 1985-86, the first year for which information is available, and 1991-92.

Source: Local authority annual reports and annual urban programme submissions.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received (a) in favour of an (b) against his decision not to consider bids for urban programme funding for 1993-94.

Mr. Robin Squire: My Department will be supporting in 1993-94 substantial urban programme—UP—commitments amounting to £156 million and considering bids for support for new projects from the £20 million uncommitted UP resources which form the urban partnership fund.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much of the urban programme funding planned for 1992-93 related to on-going commitments; and how much was to be made available for new bids.

Mr. Robin Squire: We expect around two-thirds of the urban programme resources allocated to local authorities in any year to relate to continuing commitments, with the balance for new projects.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of state for the Environment how many schemes supported by the urban programme he has visited.

Mr. Robin Squire: Department of the Environment Ministers visit the urban priority authorities on a regular basis and have been pleased to see a wide range of schemes supported by the urban programme.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state the planned urban block expenditure for 1992-93, 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96 by his Department, together with the figures in real terms, allowing for projected inflation, and the percentage increase/decrease each year.

Mr. Robin Squire: The planned urban block expenditure figures for 1992-93, 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96 are shown in the table; these incorporate the autumn statement changes, including the increase of over £90 million in the resources planned for 1993-94.

The planned expenditure figures, converted into real terms using latest GDP deflator figures, are in the table, along with the percentage year on year increase/decrease:

£ million

	[1]1992-93	1993-94	1994-95	1995-96
Urban Block planned expenditure	1,017	955	820	806
Planned expenditure expressed in real term figures	1,017	929	773	739
Percentage increase/decrease	—	−8·6	−16·7	−4·4

[1]Provision based on winter supplementary estimates.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total EC funding received by schemes supported by the urban programme in the current and last three years.

Mr. Robin Squire: European Community funding of local authorities' urban programme schemes is as follows:

Year	£ million (rounded)
1990-91	9
1991-92	26
[1]1992-93	11

Source: UP claim forms from local authorities.
Note: Figures for 1989-90 are not available.
[1]To date.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) jobs, (b) training places and (c) schemes are currently supported by the urban programme in each of the urban programme authorities; and what was the allocation for 1992-93 for each of the authorities.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply to his question on Wednesday 13 January, Official Report, column 656. It is not our policy to publish output data for each individual authority under the urban programme.

Merseyside Fire and Civil Defence Authority

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what his response has been to the representations made by the Merseyside fire and civil defence authority for a review of its standard spending assessment for 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: I met a delegation from the Merseyside fire and civil defence authority on 12 January to hear their representations on our proposals for the 1993-94 revenue support grant settlement. We shall carefully consider their representations before taking decisions on the settlement.

Housing Refurbishment, Liverpool

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what his response has been to the letter sent to him on 17 December 1992 by Liverpool city council in respect of additional funds to provide for the refurbishment of houses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. and learned Friend has asked his officials at the Merseyside task force to reply direct.

EC Environment Inspectorate

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions have taken place about the establishment of an EC environment inspectorate within the European Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 11 January 1993]: All member states attended a meeting of national experts chaired by the Commission in March 1992 to discuss issues relating to the enforcement of EC environmental legislation, including the establishment of a network of enforcement agencies and the possible creation of an audit-type inspectorate. Subsequently, the Government have continued to press the Commission to bring forward proposals, as originally suggested by the United Kingdom, for a Community body to audit the application of EC environmental legislation, and has secured growing support from other member states for this idea. We will continue to argue its merits.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Royal Household

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what is the organisational structure of the press facility provided to the royal household by the Central Office of Information; and what is its remit;

(2) what was the cost in 1991-92, and what is the provision for 1992-93, of the press facilities provided to the royal household by the Central Office of Information; how many personnel are involved and in what capacities; and how much of the expenditure relates to salaries and staff costs;

(3) who recruits the personnel who make up the press facility supplied to the royal household by the Central Office of Information; to whom they are accountable; and what is their relationship to the head of the Government press service.

Mr. Waldegrave: Responsibility for the subject of these questions has been delegated to the chief executive of the Central Office of Information. I have asked him to write to the right hon. Gentleman direct.

Letter from Mike Devereau to Mr. Alan Williams, undated:

You recently tabled three Parliamentary Questions to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster concerning press services provided by COI to the Royal Household. The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has asked me to reply.

The press facility for the Royal Household is provided by staff employed in COI's eight regional offices in England. The staff are COI employees managed by their regional director but working to the brief of the Royal Household. The remit is to make arrangements for press attendance at visits by senior members of the Royal Family while carrying out their official duties in England.

The cost of work undertaken for the Royal Household by COI in 1991-92 for press facilities totalled £318,260 excluding VAT. The estimated spend for the same services in 1992-93 is some £350,000 excluding VAT. Normally one or two members of COI staff are involved in providing services for each Royal visit. Approximately 50 per cent. of the expenditure relates to salaries and associated staff costs.

The personnel who make up the press facility are, as members of the staff of the Central Office of Information, fully accountable to me. Their recruitment, training and career development is arranged with the support of the Information Officer Management Unit which provides similar support to all Information Officers working for Government and for which I am also responsible as the Head of Profession for information staff.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Livestock Farms

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the average amounts of capital employed excluding land, on livestock farms within the less-favoured areas at the most recent convenient date.

Mr. Curry: The 1992 edition of "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom" contains estimates based on sample surveys of the level of assets employed on livestock farms in the less-favoured areas. The following table shows the average value of total assets, excluding land and buildings, on LFA livestock farms in 1990-91.

	£'000 per farm
England	102·2
Wales	92·1
Scotland	105·4
Northern Ireland	57·7

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the average farm incomes for livestock farms in the less-favoured areas for each of the last five years up to 1992, using the notional figures which his Department have used of increases of 29 per cent. for last year and 16 per cent. for this year, split between severely disadvantaged and disadvantaged areas.

Mr. Curry: Estimates, based on sample surveys, of the levels of nominal net farm incomes on the various types of livestock farm in the less-favoured areas for the past three years are contained in table 14 of the data prepared for the 1992 autumn review of the economic conditions in the hills and uplands, a copy of which has been deposited in the Library of the House.

Year by year comparisons can best be made by reference to results from a constant sample of farms. The following table shows indices of net farm income for each year from 1986-87 to 1992-93 and estimated income levels for the latest available constant sample.

Average Net farm income on LFA livestock farms

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the rate of the hill livestock compensatory allowance to be paid on eligible sheep in the disadvantaged areas within the less favoured areas of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: I am pleased to announce that following the green pound devaluation with effect from 1 January 1993 the headage payment rate for eligible ewes in disadvantaged areas has been increased by 41p to £2·86 per ewe. A statutory instrument will shortly be laid before Parliament giving effect to the proposed new headage rates that will apply under the 1993 scheme. Payment of claims will start as soon as possible.

EDUCATION

Higher Education

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of students in higher education left their courses before completion and sought employment in (a) 1982 and (b) 1992.

Mr. Boswell: Destinations of students who leave courses before completion are not collected. Details of leavers in the old universities are given in table 10 of "University Management Statistics and Performance Indicators", 1992 edition, a copy of which is in the Library. Available data for the former polytechnics and colleges are shown in DFE statistical bulletin 9/92, which is also in the Library. The next departmental report will also contain a table of estimated wastage rates; it shows wastage at 13·1 per cent. in 1982-83 and 15·3 per cent. in 1990-91.

GCSE Grade Changes

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many candidates in 1990, 1991 and 1992, in the Southern examining group area, had their grades altered due to a year-on-year change in standards of more than 3 per cent.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: New GCSE awarding procedures were introduced by the Southern examining group in 1992. To ensure that these did not result in a change in standards, awarding officers' judgments were reconsidered in those cases where there was a significant change in the proportions of candidates achieving particular grades. The awarding officers' judgments were endorsed in all but two subjects; in these, 329 grades out of 19,374—1·7 per cent.—were revised. These procedures were not in operation in 1990 and 1991.

GCSE

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidelines his Department has issued to examining groups on changes to GCSE statistical standards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Department has given no guidelines to the examining groups on this or any other matter relating to the conduct of school examinations. My right hon. Friend will, however, shortly publish a mandatory code of practice which all groups will be required to follow as a condition of his continuing approval of GCSE qualifications.

Examinations (Criterion Referencing)

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) when the Schools Examinations and Assessment Council gave permission for examination groups to move from full criterion referencing to norm referencing; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what was the original timetable for GCSE grades to be fully criteria referenced; when it was revised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The national trend in the development of school examinations has been in the opposite direction to that implied by the hon. Member's questions. The introduction of the GCSE in 1988 marked a move to a more criterion-referenced examination system. The alignment of the GCSE with national curriculum requirements progressively from 1994 will mark a further move in that direction, since assessment in each of the foundation subjects will be related to clearly defined statements of attainment. The timetable for this alignment has not been altered: it will begin in summer 1994 with English, mathematics and science.

Teacher Education Units

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement about the future of teacher education units and the tutors involved in them in existing higher education institutions.

Mr. Boswell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South (Mr. Hawkins) on 17 November 1992, Official Report, column 123.

WALES

Operation Wizard

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement on the commissioning of Touche Ross by the Welsh Development Agency as part of the team of consultants working on the Operation Wizard exercise;

(2) if he will make a statement on the commissioning of consultants Outram Cullinan and Co., Villiers street, London WC2, as part of the Operation Wizard exercise;

(3) what ministerial approval was given for expenditure by the Welsh Development Agency on merchant banking consultancy advice on a wholesale or retail management buy-out of WDA operations in 1989-90; what consultations were undertaken; and what guidelines were set for the Operation Wizard exercise.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 13 January 1993]: The then Secretary of State considered possible options for the future of the WDA's functions in 1988 and 1989. This consideration included professional advice commissioned by the agency on a range of options for increasing private sector involvement. It was decided that the WDA's range of functions should remain unchanged subject to regular review from time to time under the cycle of financial management and policy reviews.

Dental Health

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he will take to improve the dental health of pupils in the schools of Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is the responsibility of health authorities, in conjunction with family health services authorities, to procure adequate dental health services for their area based on their assessment of local need.

The Welsh Office has circulated an "Oral Health Gain Protocol for Wales" which should assist health authorities in this process.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in order of dental health the health districts of Wales according to United Kingdom dental surveys; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The decannial United Kingdom child and adult dental health surveys do not provide data in the form requested.

Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) Welsh medium schools and (b) English medium schools have been (i) opened and (ii) closed since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Department does not collect information in the form requested. The provision of both Welsh and English medium schools is the responsibility of the local education authority.

Health Education

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he will take to improve health education in Wales (a) overall and (b) in respect of dental health.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: (a) The Health Promotion Authority for Wales has published a series of strategic documents entitled "Plans for Action". The latest document in this series, published in July 1992, presents specific health targets, many seeking improved lifestyles and enabling progress to be measured against the extensive health surveys undertaken throughout Wales.

Under the new GP contract health promotion arrangements, GPs are required by their terms of service to provide health promotion advice to their patients. New arrangements from 1 July 1993 will ensure that their advice will be delivered within a framework of national and local priorities.

(b) The Health Promotion Authority for Wales has appointed an oral and dental adviser with responsibility for dental health education in Wales.

The Welsh Office's recently issued oral health protocol laid down a number of major service targets relating to dental health education including the provision that dentists offer advice to patients on these issues.

Dyslexic Children

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what policy initiatives he will take concerning the needs of dyslexic children in the schools of Wales; and what is his policy concerning dyslexic children in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: It is the responsibility of local education authorities to identify, assess and make appropriate provision for children with special educational needs, including those who are dyslexic. The Welsh Office supports expenditure by local education authorities for the training of designated teachers of special educational needs in ordinary schools and the initial training of educational psychologists, both of which can help children with dyslexia.

Our proposals in the Education Bill to provide new rights and improve the assessment and statementing process will be of benefit to all children with special needs.

English Texts

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the texts by English language Welsh authors proposed for particular study by 14-year-olds in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The first statutory assessments of 14-year-olds in the subject of English, planned for June 1993, will include a test of reading against prescribed texts.

A booklet for study by 14-year-old pupils who are at levels 3 to 4 of the national curriculum was announced in November 1992. Based on books which are widely available in secondary schools, the list includes "Illustrated Poetry Broadsheets: Poetry from Wales" which is a thematic collection of poetry by Welsh authors. The wider recommended anthology for all abilities was announced on 4 January 1993 and includes extracts from Dylan Thomas's "A Child's Christmas in Wales" and R. S. Thomas's "Cynddylan on a Tractor".

The booklists were drawn up by the School Examinations and Assessment Council in consultation with the Curriculum Council for Wales and the National Curriculum Council. The texts are suitably demanding for pupils of this age, and reflect the requirements of the reading attainment target in English.

SCOTLAND

Mr. Thomas Adleigh

Mrs. Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Lord Advocate will direct that a fatal accident inquiry be held into the death of Mr. Thomas Adleigh of 27 Glencairn road, Paisley.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The death of Mr. Adleigh was reported by Strathclyde police to the procurator fiscal, Paisley who has sought further information as to the circumstances. A decision on whether a fatal accident inquiry will be held into Mr. Adleigh's death will be taken at the conclusion of the procurator fiscal's inquiries.

Non-domestic Rates

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on non-domestic rates for 1993-94.

Mr. Lang: Continuing our policy of reducing Scottish business rate poundages to the level of the English national non-domestic rate, Scottish businesses will pay £68 million less in rates next year than they otherwise would have done. This is a poundage reduction of over 7 per cent. in real terms and an actual reduction in cash terms of 4 per cent.

The total reduction, due to the Government's policy and our earlier decision to limit increases in poundages to no more than inflation from 1989-90 onwards, is now at least £400 million.

The reduction of £68 million is larger than had been allowed for in drawing up the spending plans we made last year and £56 million of it will be met by increased revenue support grant to local authorities. Local authorities are being asked to contribute the remaining £12 million through efficiency savings.

The table shows the rate poundages which I intend to prescribe for each local authority in regulations I shall lay before Parliament very shortly. Apart from Orkney and Shetland and, as a result of the reduction for next year, Kincardine and Deeside, which are at the English level, the poundage of every authority has been reduced in cash terms. As last year, I have decided to make larger reductions to those poundages furthest from the English non-domestic rate. As a result, the poundage reductions in real terms range from over 8·8 per cent. in Glasgow to 2·1 per cent. in the case of Kincardine and Deeside.

The reduction in poundages will again be accompanied by an associated reduction in derating: from 25 to 17·5 per cent. The reduction takes into account the additional £40 million reduction in poundages for this year made following the 1992 Budget.

Our decision to reduce business rates and to increase revenue support grant next year beyond our original plans yet again, at a time when resources are very scarce, continues to demonstrate the high priority we give to it. We remain committed to eliminating the difference between Scotland and England just as quickly as resources permit.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Royal Palaces (Fire Protection)

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he expects to set up the inquiry to assess the adequacy of fire protection measures at the royal palaces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I am pleased to announce that Sir Alan Bailey, former permanent secretary to the Department of Transport, has agreed to chair the inquiry. The other members are Mr. Donald Insall, architect and planning consultant and principal of Donald W. Insall and Associates and Mr. Philip Kilshaw, former deputy senior fire safety inspector in Her Majesty's fire service inspectorate. The terms of reference of the inquiry are:

"In the light of the Windsor Castle fire to assess the adequacy of fire protection measures for the royal palaces and residences for which I have a financial responsibility, and to report to me."

The inquiry group has already started work and I hope that it will be able to report within three to four months. The report will be published. I shall make a further statement when I have considered the report.

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if there have been any items accepted in lieu of tax or, allocated since his last announcement on 3 December 1992.

Mr. Brooke: Since my announcement on 3 December, Official Report, column 325, I am pleased to inform the House of the acceptance of two offers in lieu of tax. The offers are of chattels from Sheringham Hall, which will satisfy £119,119 tax, and a Charles I silver gilt standing cup and cover, which will satisfy £199,401 tax. The chattels will be allocated to the National Trust; no decision has yet been made on the allocation of the cup.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Northern Ireland

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning United States policy towards Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None in recent months.

Missile Technology Control Regime

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent changes have been made to the scope of the missile technology control regime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In the light of concerns about the proliferation of biological and chemical weapons, members of the missile technology control regime agreed, in July 1992, to extend the scope of the regime to cover delivery systems for such weapons, as well as those for nuclear weapons. Technical discussions on details of the changes have now been concluded and members formally adopted the revised guidelines on 7 January 1993. These changes will further strengthen international efforts to combat missile proliferation and to frustrate attempts to deploy weapons of mass destruction. We shall continue to urge all states who are not members of the regime to adopt similar responsible policies on missile exports. A copy of the new guidelines will be placed in the Library of the House.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community's Council of Ministers.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The following meetings are planned:

18 January: Economic and Finance Council
18-19 January: Agriculture Council

The following subjects are likely to be discussed:

(a) Economic and Finance Council—18 January
—Multilateral surveillance including national actions to promote economic recovery in Europe
—Action at the level of the Community to promote economic recovery in Europe
—Medium term Financial Assistance (possible)
(b) Agriculture Council—18-19 January
—GATT
—Accelerated transitional measures for Portugal (possible)

The Economic and Finance Council will meet on 18 January to conduct a multilateral surveillance of the economies of member states and the package of Community measures to promote economic recovery in Europe which was agreed at the European Council in Edinburgh in December.

The Agriculture Council will meet on 18 and 19 January. Ministers will discuss recent developments in the GATT Uruguay round negotiations. Accelerated transitional measures for Portugal may also be discussed.

EMPLOYMENT

Unemployment

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number and percentage of people leaving youth training in 1991 in (a) Walsall and (b) west midlands, who were without full-time employment after (i) six months, (ii) nine months and (iii) 12 months.

Mr. McLoughlin: Of those young people leaving youth training providers during 1991 53 per cent. in the Walsall training and enterprise council area and 51 per cent. in west midlands were not in full-time employment six months after leaving. Twenty-three per cent. described themselves as unemployed; the rest as in part-time work, on another training programme, or on a full-time course at a college or training centre or doing something else. No information is collected about trainee activity after nine and 12 months.

Solvent-based Paints

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment she has made of experience outwith the United Kingdom on legislation governing the conditions under which solvent-based paints can be used and the circumstances under which they can be applied; and if she will review the United Kingdom legislation in the light of the assessment.

Mr. McLoughlin: No assessment has been made of experience outside the United Kingdom on legislation governing the use of solvent-based paints. However, the dangers presented by these products are under regular review, both within the United Kingdom by the Health and Safety Executive and within the European Community through expert working groups involving representatives from all member states. In the United Kingdom, the use of solvent-based paints at work is subject to the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988. Specific guidance published by the HSE recommends the substitution of solvent-based paints by less harmful substances, such as water-based paints.

Jobcentres

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what plans her Department has to extend the range of services offered by jobcentres to the unemployed; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what are the rules by which jobcentre managers accept advertisements for services to the unemployed; and if she will make a statement;

(3) what plans her Department has to give jobcentre managers greater discretion on acceptance of advertisements for services to the unemployed; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Mr. Nigel Jones, dated 14 January 1993:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to write to you direct to respond to your Parliamentary Questions to her about the range of services offered by Jobcentres, the policy on advertising in Jobcentres and the flexibility which my local managers have on the display of advertising material. These fall within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The Secretary of State for Employment recently announced a new package of Employment Service measures aimed at providing nearly 500,000 extra opportunities in 1993-94 for long-term unemployed and other people disadvantaged in the labour market. As part of this package, we are introducing a new Jobplan workshop for people unemployed for 12 months. Jobplan will be a five day assessment workshop, which will help identify strengths and skills, set new job goals and draw up an action plan for the client's route back to work.

We are also expanding our Jobclub and Job Interview Guarantee programmes, which have proved to be very successful, as well as implementing a significant development of Work Trials. Work trials allow people the chance to try out a job for up to three weeks while retaining their entitlement to benefit.

Jobclub is aimed at people who have been unemployed for six months or more, and others at a disadvantage in the labour market. Jobclub members are given help and guidance in a variety of job hunting methods including interview technique, advice on applying for jobs, completion of application forms and preparation of CVs. Members also have access to telephones, stationery, newspapers, stamps and other resources.

The Job Interview Guarantee Scheme is also aimed at people who have been unemployed for six months or more. It offers employers a fuller recruitment and selection service in return for a guarantee that they will consider our long-term unemployed clients for their vacancies. I enclose a leaflet setting out the full range of help which unemployed people can access through Jobcentres.

Our policy for advertising services in Jobcentres is that my local office managers have full discretion to allow companies to display material likely to help our clients find work or training opportunities, providing there is sufficient space available and that no charge is made to the jobseeker for the service offered. There are no plans to change this arrangement.

As decided by the Administration Committee of the House of Commons, Chief Executive replies to written Parliamentary Questions will now be published in the Official Report. I will also place a copy of this letter in the Library of the House.

Labour Statistics

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his latest estimate in percentage and absolute terms of unemployment among black adults in England and Wales.

Mr. McLoughlin: Results from the labour force survey show that in summer—June to August—1992 there were an estimated 102,000 black people aged 16 and over, in England and Wales, who were unemployed on the international agreed International Labour Organisation definition. The International Labour Organisation unemployment rate for the group was 25 per cent.

Construction Site Cradles

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action has been taken or is envisaged by the Health and Safety Executive to restrict or prohibit the use of modular system cradles coupled by drop pins on construction sites.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Health and Safety Executive has alerted users of any suspended access equipment on which drop nose pins link together sections of cradles, to the need for thorough examination and maintenance before such equipment is used.

The Health and Safety Executive has also met representatives of the Suspended Access Equipment Manufacturers Association and the National Association of Scaffolding Contractors. It was agreed that such cradles should be designed so that failure of a key component should not lead to total failure of the whole suspended access platform and that the training and competence of those who install and use them is important. The Health and Safety Executive has successfully advocated that these points be incorporated into the relevant British Standard codes of practice and is updating its own guidance on precautions essential for the safe use of suspended access equipment.

Youth Training

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the legal effect of the statement in leaflet IS 26 that a person aged 16 or 17 years has a right to the offer of a youth training place; and what remedy is available if such an offer is not made.

Mr. McLoughlin: The statement reflects the Government's guarantee of the offer of a suitable youth training place to young people aged 16 and 17 who are not in full-time education or a job and are seeking training. The Department contracts with training and enterprise councils for the delivery of the guarantee at local level and various remedies are available to my right hon. Friend if training and enterprise councils fail to deliver the guarantee. The contract requires training and enterprise councils to record and investigate any complaint made directly by or on behalf of a person in the guarantee group to the effect that the guarantee has not been discharged in respect of that person. Training and enterprise councils are required to use best endeavours to remedy any complaint which is upheld or, if a remedy is not available, to notify my right hon. Friend in writing.

DEFENCE

Hokum Helicopter

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the capability of the Hokum helicopter.

Mr. Aitken: While we have a reasonable appreciation of the capabilities of all helicopters, including the Hokum, which might be used in the anti-armour role, a full assessment of the Hokum's capabilities will only be undertaken if it is offered in the forthcoming attack helicopter competition.

Apache Helicopter

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the capability of the Apache helicopter.

Mr. Aitken: While we have a reasonable appreciation of the capabilities of all helicopters, including the Apache, which might be used in the anti-armour role, a full assessment of the Apache's capabilities will only be undertaken if it is offered in the forthcoming attack helicopter competition.

Gulf Trust

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria have been regarded as relevant in judging eligibility and in making distributions to beneficiaries from the Gulf Trust fund or the relevant service benevolent funds.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The deed of the trust for the Gulf Trust prescribes that moneys must be used to meet the financial needs of the beneficiaries and for the relief of sickness, distress and any other physical or mental disability, arising from the involvement of the armed forces in military or other operations relating to or in connection with the Gulf conflict. Potential beneficiaries are limited to members of the armed forces involved in the Gulf conflict; civilian personnel attached to or accompanying the armed forces in the Gulf conflict; and their respective dependants. The support which the service benevolent funds provide can thus cover a wide range of areas and will vary from case to case, in accordance with individual need.

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the range of needs which have been judged eligible, and have been met, by distribution from the Gulf Trust fund through the service benevolent funds.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The support that the service benevolent funds provide can cover a wide range of areas within the terms of the trust deeds and charity law. It is not the practice of the funds to release details of how they have dealt with individual cases.

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the latest figure of distributions made by the service benevolent funds, specifying the figures for the three individual funds, from moneys passed to them from the Gulf Trust fund.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

King George's Fund for Sailors	nil
Army Benevolent Fund	304,990
RAF Benevolent Fund	287,630

The figures include moneys paid out up to 31 December 1992, but exclude adminstrative costs and miscellaneous expenses. Some of the payments that were made in the form of loans have already been repaid.

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the latest available figure of the sums donated by members of the public to the Gulf Trust fund; what total sums, and under what apportionment, have been passed on to the three service benevolent funds from the Gulf Trust fund; and on what basis the apportionments have been calculated.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 31 December 1992, a total of £3,008,051 had been donated to the Gulf Trust fund. No block allocation of funds has been passed by the united services trustee to the service benevolent funds. The benevolent funds are meeting claims arising from the Gulf conflict by payments made to them as necessary by the Gulf Trust fund. The amount of money allocated to each of the service benevolent funds will be announced when the Gulf Trust is wound up.

RAF Church Fenton

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans for the future use or disposal of the RAF Church Fenton headquarters buildings and residential accommodation have been made, following recent decisions about the RAF's future use and requirements of the landing facilities there.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The airfield at RAF Church Fenton is designated as a relief landing ground for RAF Linton on Ouse and this requirement will exist for the foreseeable future. The married quarters are to be retained for service use. The majority of the technical site, however, including the headquarters buildings is scheduled for disposal.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Self-employed Businesses

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the total number of self-employed businesses in the north-east for each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The available information for the northern region—Northumberland, Tyne and Wear, Cumbria, Durham and Cleveland—based on the labour force survey, is given in the table.

Vietnam

Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South on 14 December, Official Report, column 27, what discussions he has had with the Vietnamese Government with a view to recovering outstanding trade debts.

Mr. Needham: The Export Credits Guarantee Department has attempted to negotiate the settlement of trade debts owed by Vietnam on which ECGD has paid claims. These negotiations have proved fruitless. The Vietnamese Government have now signalled their intention to regularise their payments position with their creditors and to seek a formal restructuring of the official debt under the auspices of the Paris club.

North-East Businesses

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the net number of new businesses in the north-east for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The available information for the northern region—Northumberland, Tyne and Wear, Cumbria, Durham and Cleveland—based on VAT data, is given in the table. During the period 1987 to 1991 the number of businesses registered for VAT in the northern region increased by 6,800.

Nuclear Industry

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with (a) Nottinghamshire county council, (b) the European Commission and (c) any other bodies on the question of the compatibility of state aid to the nuclear industry with EC treaty provisions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Government are aware that Nottinghamshire county council has made representations to the European Commission concerning the Commission's decision in March 1990 not to raise objections to the provision of state aids to the nuclear industry. It is for the Commission to respond to these representations as it deems appropriate.

Wind Power

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his curent target in megawatts for wind power electricity.

Mr. Eggar: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Ceredigion and Pembroke, North (Mr. Dafis) on 16 November, Official Report, column 69.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will respond to the fourth report of the Select Committee on Energy on renewable energy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Government's response to the Energy Select Committee report on renewable energy was announced to the House on 16 July 1992, Official Report, column 997.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1992, Official Report, column 479, when he received the report by the renewable energy advisory group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The report by the Renewable Energy Advisory Group was received by the President's office on 24 November 1992. Its printing was then expedited to make it available to Members before the Christmas recess.

International Trade

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will state the value of imports, exports and trade balance in manufactured goods with the rest of the OECD countries, in total, and by individual country, in (a) 1970, (b) 1979 and (c) for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Information for 1979 and 1991 is given in the table. Information for 1970 and each year from 1980 to 1990 could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Pit Closures

Mrs. Golding: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps are being taken to extend the term of the existing redundancy agreement for miners following the High Court judgment preventing the immediate closure of pits; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: None. British Coal's redundancy terms are a matter for British Coal. It would, however, seem reasonable for the corporation not to determine its redundancy arrangements from 1 April 1993 until at least the outcome of the coal review is known.

Coal Industry

Mr. Burden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what response he has made to the submission to him from Birmingham city council on the impact of coal industry restructuring.

Mr. Eggar: I have seen and considered the paper, a copy of which was handed to me by my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Edgbaston (Dame J. Knight). We are taking its contents into account along with the other submissions we have received in the context of the coal review.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to repeal or amend section 46 of the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act 1946.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 11 January 1993]: I am considering British Coal's suggestion that this provision be repealed, along with all the other evidence to the coal review. We shall shortly publish a White Paper setting out the results of that review.

Accountancy Bodies

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has received the first annual reports on audit regulation of the Chartered Association of Certified Accountants and the Association of Authorised Public Accountants as recognised supervisory bodies under Part II of the Companies Act 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have now received the first annual reports of these two associations on their activities as recognised supervisory bodies for the regulation of company auditors, and have placed copies in the Library. My Department will be discussing the contents of the reports with the bodies.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Community Regeneration

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show the sums expended under the Community economic regeneration scheme in each year to date and detailing the projects supported and the sources of the funds, showing in each case the amounts, or as much of such information as is readily available to him.

Mr. Atkins: The sums expended on the Community economic regeneration scheme in each year to date and the details of the projects supported are as follows:

[1] To date.

Costs are generally shared equally between the International Fund for Ireland and the Department of the Environment (NI).

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show the sums expended on the Community regeneration initiative special project in each year to date; on which projects they were spent; and what were the sources of the funds, showing in each case the amounts or as much of such information as is readily available to him.

Mr. Atkins: The sums expended on CRISP in each year to date and the projects where the money was spent are as follows:

[1]To 8 January 1993.

Costs of the core projects and environmental improvement elements of CRISP are shared equally by the International Fund for Ireland and the Department of the Environment, Northern Ireland.

Information on the urban development grant element of CRISP is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. This grant is for the refurbishment of property and is available throughout Northern Ireland outside Belfast and Londonderry. It is wholly funded by the International Fund for Ireland.

Water Services

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much of the regional rate paid by ratepayers in Northern Ireland is charged for water services, including sewage disposal.

Mr. Mates [holding answer 11 January 1993]: Although the regional rate is based on expenditure by central Government in Northern Ireland on services which in Great Britain would be undertaken by local authorities, it is essentially a general charge and the proceeds are not allocated to the component services. However, since 1991-92 arrangements have been made to appropriate in aid of water services, including sewage disposal, the relevant share of regional rate income to facilitate transition to commercial accounting procedures. In 1992-93 the share of the regional rate appropriated in aid of these services is equivalent to poundage of 65·63 p.

PRIME MINISTER

Objectives

Q8. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister what are his objectives for 1993.

The Prime Minister: Among the Government's objectives for 1993 are continuing to work for economic growth and recovery and to encourage British industry to take advantage of the great opportunities offered by the single market; reducing the burden of regulations on business; pressing ahead with our reforms of education and health so that there will be more grant-maintained schools and more GP fund holders; continuing to drive for a return to basics in our schools and to give parents more information about how their children are doing; extending home ownership; making further progress with privatisation and contracting out; strengthening and modernising our police force and cracking down on juvenile offenders in particular; continuing our reforms as part of the citizens charter programme to give more power to those who use our public services; bringing forward proposals to develop a network of voluntary help in local communities; defending Britain's interests in Europe and the world.

Edinburgh Summit

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral statement in answer to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, of 14 December, Official Report, column 34, what was the result of his inquiries relating to Telecom's arrangements for incoming calls at the Meadowbank stadium for journalists attending the Edinburgh summit.

The Prime Minister: I wrote to the hon. Member on 16 December setting out the telecommunications arrangements at the European Council media centre.

Peerages

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the peerages created since 30 November 1990, together with the dates on which the holders were introduced.

The Prime Minister: The information is as follows:

Lord Elis-Thomas	18 September 1992	27 October 1992

Squatting

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Prime Minister if he will transfer responsibility for squatting as an issue to the Department of the Environment.

The Prime Minister: No.

Treasury (Advice to Ministers)

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Prime Minister when he expects to market-test the provision of advice to Treasury Ministers.

The Prime Minister: The provision of advice to Treasury Ministers is one of the Treasury's core functions and there are no plans for it to be market tested.

London

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Prime Minister what machinery of government deals with London affairs.

The Prime Minister: Government Departments deal with issues within their areas of responsibility. The Cabinet sub-committee on London co-ordinates their policies. The 32 London boroughs and the corporation of the City of London are responsible for local government services in London, with joint arrangements where these are necessary.

Ministerial Committees

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Prime Minister if he will update the list of ministerial standing Cabinet committees published in May 1992 to include a list of those ad hoc ministerial committees established since the formation of his Government.

The Prime Minister: I will publish an updated list shortly.

Travellers

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Prime Minister where the responsibility lies for caravan site provision for the traditional travelling community.

The Prime Minister: The Caravan Sites Act 1968 requires local authorities in England and Wales to provide accommodation on caravan sites for travelling people staying in or resorting to their areas. In Scotland and Northern Ireland, local authorities have a discretionary power to provide sites for travelling people.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Prime Minister what provisions exist to improve access to state services for the traditional travelling community.

The Prime Minister: In England and Wales, the Department for Education and the Welsh Office respectively provide grant support to local education authorities to help them improve the attendance of traveller children at school and meet their particular educational needs. General medical and hospital services are available to travellers on the same basis as to the rest of the population and health authorities are expected to take account of travellers' needs when planning services. In addition, the Department of Health is funding a number of special schemes aimed at meeting the day-to-day needs of such groups as single rough sleepers, families in bed-and-breakfast accommodation and traveller families.

In Scotland, education and health services for travelling people are under regular review by the Secretary of State's advisory committee on travelling people. In Northern Ireland, a document published in November 1992 by the advisory committee on travellers reviewed progress on travelling people's access to services. A consultation process is in train.

Cabinet Papers

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what is the reason for withholding release of certain Cabinet papers and departmental papers on the royal family and Cyprus beyond 30 years.

The Prime Minister: Records relating to these matters are considered for release after 30 years in the normal way in accordance with the provisions of the Public Records Acts 1958 and 1967. Any which are deemed to require protection for longer than 30 years are either closed under section 5(1) or retained in Departments under section 3(4) of the Public Records Act 1958 in accordance with the criteria published in the Government's response to the Wilson Committee report "Modern Public Records", Cmnd. 8531.

Government of Scotland

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister what he has done since April 1992 to take stock of how Scotland is governed; when he plans to announce his proposals for the future; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I am examining a wide range of aspects of the governance of Scotland and have had fruitful discussions with numerous people in Scotland representing many walks of life and political viewpoints. Once the review is complete, the Government will announce the results to the House.

Bed-and-breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if he will take steps to investigate the incidence of poor nutrition and ill health among families living in bed-and-breakfast accommodation; and what representations he has received on this subject.

The Prime Minister: There is evidence concerning the association between ill-health and adverse social circumstances, but little to identify specific causes of this, particularly the role of nutrition. Indeed, the nutritional content of the diets of people of all incomes is remarkably similar. A balanced diet with more bread, cereals, seasonal vegetables and fruit, and fewer fatty foods can be cheaper than a less healthy diet. The Nutritional task force set up to help implement the White Paper "Health of the Nation" will seek ways to improve the promotion of healthy eating.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if he will direct the Secretary of State for Employment to discontinue replying to hon. Members' questions over regional unemployment by referring them to the NOMIS data base in the Library; and if he will make it his policy that the information requested should be published in the Official Report.

The Prime Minister: I endorse the procedure followed by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Employment, which is to refer hon. Members to NOMIS when more than 10 figures are asked for. The introduction of this procedure was announced, in answer to a parliamentary question, by the then Secretary of State for Employment, on 19 October 1990. This was done only after extensive consultation with both sides of the House and with the then Speaker. The procedure does not result in withholding information and does not deny hon. Members the opportunity of asking questions about unemployment or other labour market issues. NOMIS is a public data base, which can be accessed through a terminal in the House of Commons Library. It provides an open and an efficient way of publishing statistics, which I welcome under the citizens charter. The Official Report has never been a statistical digest.

Council of Europe

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Prime Minister whether he has made any changes to the composition of the United Kingdom delegation for the 44th Session of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe.

The Prime Minister: With effect from 1 February 1993 my hon. Friend the Member for Ravensbourne (Sir J. Hunt) and my noble Friend, Lord Newall will become representatives on the delegation and my hon. Friend the Member for Hayes and Harlington (Mr. Dicks) and my noble Friend, the Earl of Dundee, will become substitutes. My hon. Friend the Member for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel) has resigned from the delegation.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 14 January.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 14 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Coreper

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what changes took place in the operation of the Committee of Permanent Representatives to the European Council during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Council.

The Prime Minister: None, other than that the chair was taken by the British representative.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Village Halls

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans his Department has to standardise the financial controls on loans given to village halls under different Government schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: There are no plans to standardise the financial controls on loans given to village halls under different Government schemes. However, the Government keep these schemes under review.

Cars (Taxation)

Mr. Olner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the yield in 1991-92, and what is the latest estimate of yield in 1992-93, from (a) petrol duty, (b) DERV duty, (c) vehicle excise duty, (d) VAT on petrol and derv sales, (e) VAT on vehicle sales and (f) car tax.

Sir John Cope: Information on the outturn yield in 1991-92 and the projected yield in 1992-93 is provided in the table:

	1991-92 Outturn £ billion	1992-93 Forecast £ billion
Petrol duty	8·0	8·3
DERV duty	2·8	2·8
Vehicle excise duty	2·9	3·2
VAT on petrol and derv	1·6	n.a.
VAT on vehicles sales	2·7	n.a.
Car tax	1·2	0·5

No direct figures are available for the VAT spent on petrol and DERV and on vehicle sales. The table contains estimates of the outturn on total VAT yield that can be attributed to these items on the basis of national accounts data on expenditure. For petrol and DERV the VAT estimate covers only consumers' expenditure—the yield from business expenditure is highly uncertain because the majority of businesses can reclaim the VAT paid as input tax. The relevant data are not available for 1992-93.

The 1992-93 forecasts for car tax have been revised to take account of abolition of the tax in November 1992.

HOME DEPARTMENT

IRA Bombing Campaign

12. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes he intends to make in the structure and operations of police forces in England and Wales to counter the current Irish Republican Army bombing campaign.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I consider that the existing operational arrangements for dealing with terrorism are satisfactory.

Safer Cities

13. Mr. Duncan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the main achievements of his Department's safer cities initiatives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many safer cities projects have been established; and what assessment he has made of their effectiveness.

Mr. Jack: There are currently 20 safer cities projects which through a partnership approach have delivered over 2,800 crime prevention projects many of which, as the latest safer cities progress report shows, are now delivering effective reductions in both crime levels and the fear of crime.

Prison Population

14. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest estimate of the prison population.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The prison population in England and Wales on Wednesday 13 January was 41,134, including 273 prisoners in police cells.

EC Presidency

15. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on what was achieved by his Department during the United Kingdom presidency.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We made progress on a wide range of interior and justice issues including immigration and asylum policy, police co-operation, action to combat drugs, and judicial co-operation. The meetings of Immigration and Trevi Ministers on 30 November and 1 December reached agreement on a number of issues, notably in relation to various aspects of asylum policy and member states' practices regarding expulsion.

In addition, at a special meeting of Interior and Justice Ministers held on 18 September, it was agreed to establish a joint group of police and judicial experts to report within six months on the organisation and structures of the Mafia and other international criminal organisations.

Asylum Applications (Europe)

16. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of asylum applications from European countries were successful in the last year for which figures are available; and what was the figure for the EC as a whole.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The large majority of recent asylum applications from the former Yugoslavia are still under consideration. Of applications from other central and eastern European countries that were decided in the period January to November 1992, 3 per cent. were recognised as refugees under the 1951 UN convention and granted asylum. We do not have corresponding information on the outcome of such applications to other EC member states.

Press Office

17. Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 9 December, Official Report, columns 662-64, what progress has been made in his review of his Department's press office's procedures for handling inquiries about individual inquiries.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have completed the review and am satisfied that, under existing procedures, there is no question of my press office divulging personal details of any individual who has not sought to publicise his own dealings with my Department. I propose to continue this policy while reserving the right to stop silly and unfounded rumours.

Police (West Yorkshire)

18. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police are available for duty on the beat in (a) West Yorkshire and (b) the Pudsey division.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the chief constable that a total of 2,834 officers out of the present force establishment are available for patrol duties. The corresponding figure for the Pudsey sub-division is 128.

Bombing (Manchester)

19. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional measures his Department has taken to assist Greater Manchester police following the bombing in central Manchester on 3 December.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Operational responsibility for the investigation of the terrorist incidents in central Manchester on 3 December rests with the Greater Manchester police, who are able to draw on any assistance which they might require from the Metropolitan police anti-terrorist branch. I have every confidence that, as in the investigation of other forms of crime, the police are well equipped to carry out this responsibility.

Rave Parties

20. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to increase the power of local authorities to levy charges and set conditions for the holding of rave parties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We have no plans to make any changes to the present arrangements governing the licensing of such events by local authorities.

Police (Northumbria)

21. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he plans to meet representatives of the Northumbria police authority to discuss manning levels.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State met representatives of Northumbria police authority on 10 December to discuss resource matters of concern to them. Staffing levels were included in those discussions.

Young People (Recidivism)

22. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to deal with the problem of recidivism in young people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The Government are concerned about recidivism generally. In particular, we believe that more could and should be done to deal with the problem of persistent offending by what appears to be a comparatively small number of juvenile offenders. We are therefore looking urgently and critically at the existing legal and administrative arrangements for responding to juvenile offending.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Milligan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his plans for consultation on Sunday trading.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary said in his statement on 26 November that we are consulting the Shopping Hours Reform Council and the Keep Sunday Special Campaign about how to reflect their models for reform of the law on Sunday trading in a Government Bill. My right hon. and learned Friend and I have also met representatives from a number of organisations and retailers to discuss our proposals for reform .

Drug and Alcohol Abuse

Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contribution the Home Office makes to the Government's overall strategy for tackling drug and alcohol abuse; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The Home Office works closely with other Government Departments to ensure that the law and the wide range of Government policies for tackling the misuse of drugs and alcohol are effective. It has responsibility for the national criminal intelligence service whose drugs division provides intelligence on drug trafficking to Customs and the police. The Government's drug prevention initiative is co-ordinated by the Home Office through a central drugs prevention unit which manages and supports 20 local drugs prevention teams in England, Scotland and Wales. The work of the prison and probation services includes helping offenders with drug and alcohol problems.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the percentage increase in crime since 1979 for (a) the United Kingdom, (b) South Wales and (c) Neath.

Mr. Jack: This answer refers only to England and Wales. Between 1979 and 1991 recorded crime in England and Wales has risen at an average rate of 6·3 per cent. In South Wales it has risen by an average of 7 per cent. Crime figures for Neath are not collected centrally.

Unemployed Offenders

26. Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of offenders appearing before the courts in the east midlands and in England and Wales were unemployed in 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Jack: Information on the employment status of those appearing before the courts in England and Wales is not recorded centrally.

Ethnic Minorities

27. Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations his Department has received on the level of funding under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 for the financial year 1993-94 and subsequent years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have received a number of representations about future levels of section 11 funding from hon. Members, local authorities and representative organisations, individual schools and colleges, professional associations and other interested bodies such as racial equality councils. My right hon. and learned Friend and I regret that in the present economic circumstances it is not possible to sustain throughout the next three years the level of expenditure that had earlier been planned.

Violent Offences (Women)

28. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the penalties that can be awarded by the courts for violent offences against women.

Mr. Jack: Courts already have at their disposal tough maximum penalties for violent crimes against women, as against any victim: life imprisonment is mandatory for murder and is the maximum penalty for manslaughter, rape and the most serious woundings. Indecent assault carries up to 10 years' imprisonment. Within these maxima, it is for the courts alone to determine the most appropriate sentences in individual cases in the light of all the available information about the seriousness of the offence and the circumstances of the offender.

Under the Criminal Justice Act 1991, which came into force on 1 October 1991, the courts now have enhanced powers to sentence violent and sexual offenders; within the statutory maxima, courts may pass longer custodial sentences than would be commensurate with the seriousness of the offence, if it is necessary to protect the public from serious harm.

Police Complaints

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 4 December, Official Report, column 412, if he will list the cases in which out of court settlements or court awards were made in civil actions against the police between 1988 and November 1992; and what disciplinary or other action was taken in each case against the police officer involved.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I will write to the hon. Member.

Refugees

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of refugees from the former Yugoslavia who have been granted entry into Britain in the past 12 months; and what plans he has to increase the number of refugees who will be granted refuge in Britain.

Mr. Charles Wardle: In 1992, a total of about 5,600 nationals of the former Yugoslavia, excluding dependants, applied for asylum in the United Kingdom. The large majority of these applications are still under consideration and the applicants are being allowed to stay in the meantime.

In addition, as I announced to the House on 30 November 1992, we are willing to accept 1,000 ex-detainees from Bosnia and other parts of the former Yugoslavia, together with their dependants, totalling perhaps 4,000 in all. The first group of these ex-detainees have already arrived.

Indictable Offences

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will list the number of persons found guilty of, or cautioned for, indictable offences, showing those cautioned as a percentage of all found guilty or cautioned for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Jack: Information on persons cautioned and found guilty of indictable offences is published annually in the Command Paper "Criminal statistics, England and Wales". Tables 5.3 and 5.11 of the 1990 publication give the requested data back to 1980. The 1991 volume will be published in February 1993. Table 1 of the Home Office Statistical Bulletin issue 30/92 "Cautions, Court Proceedings and Sentencing, England and Wales, 1991" gives estimated data for that year. Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Charities

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the support given by the Government to voluntary and charitable organisations in 1992-93; and to how many charities this support was given.

Mr. Jack: The information for 1992-93 is not yet available. Details of Government support for the voluntary sector during the last year for which information is available, 1990-91, were given in the reply to a question from the hon. Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims) on 16 July 1992, cols 868-69.

Prison Education

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on prison education.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) on 8 December, col. 555.

Kent county council has since been granted leave to apply for judicial review of decisions that were taken related to the competitive tendering of prison education. The action is due to be heard in the High Court next month. To avoid prejudicing the outcome of these proceedings and to ensure continuity of education provision in prisons, after 1 April 1993, the prison service has today written to local education authorities and colleges and institutions of further education which currently provide education in prisons. The letter invites them to continue to provide education services in prison establishments on the present basis of remuneration until 31 August 1993, by when the current action and any related legal proceedings should have been resolved.

It remains the Government's intention to ensure quality and value for money in the future provision of prison education through competition and to let contracts on this basis as soon as is practicable. Accordingly, if local education authorities and colleges and institutions of further education are either unwilling or unable to continue to provide these services on the present terms until 31 August 1993, contracts will be let on the basis of the current competition from 1 April 1993. Otherwise, and subject, of course, to the outcome of the hearing, it is the intention to let such contracts from 1 September 1993.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 597, if he will list the 30 private sector organisations which have bid to provide prison education services in 1993-94.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. I do not believe it is right to provide individual details of the tenderers bidding to provide future educational services to prison establishments in England and Wales while the competition is still running and decisions on the placing of contracts have yet to be taken. It could commercially disadvantage the Home Office in its negotiations and there is no expectation or understanding on the part of tenderers that the information should be made public.

Channel Islands (Wartime Occupation)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 30 November 1992, Official Report, columns 7-8, what account he took, during his review concerning the wartime occupation of the Channel Islands, of the documents held by the authorities in Jersey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: None. The Jersey records are not subject to the United Kingdom Public Records Acts and do not come within my responsibilities. Any decision relating to them is wholly a matter for the Jersey authorities.

EC Border Controls

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what documents or means of identification have to be shown to immigration officers at British ports of embarkation by travellers to another member state of the European Community; and for what reasons.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Immigration Act 1971 provides that an immigration officer may require any passenger on embarkation to produce a passport or some other document satisfactorily establishing his identity and nationality or citizenship.

My right hon. and learned Friend is considering the extent to which this power should be exercised in future in relation to travellers to other EC member states.

Race Relations

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many jobs section 11 funding is supporting in England and Wales currently; and what were the figures for 1992 and in 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under new projects approved for funding from 1 April 1992, a total of 10,118 posts, in full-time equivalent terms, attract grant support under section 11. A final figure for 1991-92 is not yet available, but it is estimated that 10,425 approved posts were funded. In 1990-91, 9,662 approved posts were funded.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many inner city projects in England and Wales are being supported by section 11 funding this year; and what were the corresponding figures for 1992 and 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is not available in the form requested. A project format for section 11 funding was introduced under new administrative arrangements for the grant which came into effect on 1 April 1992. The grant currently supports approximately 870 projects in England and Wales. Very many of these projects relate to activities throughout authorities' areas, both rural and urban.

Tyre Dumps

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many tyre dumps in the United Kingdom are classified as major hazard sites; what specific precautions have been taken against fire at such dumps; and if he will make a statement; (2) what contingency plans have been prepared for any serious fires at major tyre dumps occurring in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is the duty of each fire authority to make provision for fire-fighting purposes in its area and to ensure that its fire brigade has adequate and efficient fire cover arrangements. These would include contingency plans for all significant fire risks. Those inherent in major tyre dumps, for which the fire service has available special techniques, would typically include arrangements for liaison with the other emergency services and for the evacuation of the area if necessary.

Following two recent tyre dump fires in Canada and Wales, guidance on the storage of tyres in the open air is being revised. No tyre dumps are covered by the CIMAH —Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards— Regulations or the NIHHS—Notification of Installations Handling Hazardous Substances—Regulations.

From 1 April 1993, all tyre storage in the open air becomes subject to the requirements of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. This will require the occupier or operator of the tyre storage facility to make an application for a licence, under section 30 of the Act to the Local Waste Regulation Authority.

Merseyside Fire and Civil Defence Authority

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Merseyside fire and civil defence authority in respect of its difficulties in fulfilling its statutory duties; what his response has been; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The chairman of the Merseyside fire and civil defence authority wrote to my right hon. and learned Friend on 30 December about the authority's difficulty in complying with the nationally recommended minimum standards of fire cover in two specific areas. I shall write to the chairman as soon as possible.

Pescado

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the Devon and Cornwall police to raise the fishing vessel Pescado; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The salvage company which has been contracted to raise the Pescado on behalf of the Devon and Cornwall constabulary, is monitoring the weather closely and awaits favourable wind and sea conditions for undertaking the salvage operation.

The chief constable is responsible for the police investigation into the sinking of the Pescado and it would not be appropriate for me to comment on the investigation while it is continuing.

Inner Cities

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of self-help employment, social and training projects in inner city areas were supported by section 11, urban programme funds or both in the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is not available in the form requested.

HEALTH

AIDS

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) on what date the London borough of Bromley applied for AIDS support grant for the current financial year; and what efforts have been made by her Department to urge Bromley to apply for it;

(2) what amount of AIDS support grant was allocated to each local authority in each year since 1990-91:

(3) what extra costs she estimates to have been incurred by neighbouring boroughs obliged to deal with HIV/AIDS cases turned away by Bromley social services department; and what steps she proposes to take to recompense the neighbouring boroughs;

(4) by what date London boroughs should apply for the AIDS support grant for 1993-94; and what steps she will take to ensure that the London borough of Bromley applies for the grant on time;

(5) how many people in each London borough have died from AIDS:

(6) how many cases of HIV have been reported in the borough of Bromley in each year for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: In December 1991 the Department issued a circular (LAC(91)22) inviting all social services departments in England to bid for extra resources for HIV and AIDS services in 1992-93 under the AIDS support grant scheme. Criteria for bids under this scheme are set out in the circular. Copies are available in the Library.

The closing date for bids was 7 February 1992. The London borough of Bromley submitted an application in November 1992 although not in the form and detail set out in departmental guidance. By that time AIDS support grant moneys had been fully committed. The Department was, therefore, unable to allow Bromley's bid to proceed.

Although not in receipt of AIDS support grant money in 1992-93, we understand that the London borough of Bromley plans to spend £15,000 on HIV and AIDS services in the current year. We have no information to suggest that the borough has been compelled to turn away people affected by HIV.

For 1992-93 local authority social services departments will again be invited to apply for an AIDS support grant allocation. The closing date for applications will be 8 February 1993. It will, of course, be open to the London borough of Bromley to bid for funds under this scheme.

Information on the number of HIV and AIDS cases reported in individual boroughs and of deaths is not held centrally.

The table shows the AIDS support grant allocations which have been awarded since 1990-91:

Computerisation

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is taking to ensure value for money from investment in the computerisation of the NHS.

Mr. Sackville: A national health service strategy for information management and technology was launched on 10 December. It included: new criteria for approving all substantial IT investments. Investments of £1 million or more will be scrutinised by the management executive and not approved unless the criteria are met; new procurement procedures to secure compliance with national standards to ensure compatibility of systems across the whole NHS; and a requirement for general practitioner systems to comply with national requirements as a condition of the GP systems reimbursement scheme.

Sellafield (Cancer)

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice she has received from the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment on the study by Draper et al. published on 9 January about the incidence of cancer in young people living in the vicinity of Sellafield.

Mr. Sackville: The Government welcome publication of this study. It was commissioned by the Department at the request of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment following an earlier report which concluded that there was a higher than expected incidence of leukaemia in young people living in the vicinity of Sellafield over the period 1953 to 1983. This latest study's main finding was that the incidence of cancer in the age group 0 to 24 years in the village of Seascale has continued to be higher than expected when compared with national experience and that for the whole period 1953 to 1990 this was unlikely to have arisen by chance.

The Government are grateful to COMARE for its advice. In summary, the committee accepts the study findings while acknowledging that studies of this type cannot determine the cause of the raised incidence of cancer in young people in Seascale. The committee also considers that the level of concern raised by the earlier report is maintained by this study. COMARE notes that appropriate studies commissioned by the Government to elucidate the position are proceeding. These studies comprise epidemiological, dosimetric and laboratory-based research programmes which COMARE will wish to consider alongside this latest study as part of their current review of the situation around Sellafield. The Government look forward to receiving COMARE's full report on cancer incidence in the vicinity of Sellafield.

Following is the full text of COMARE's advice:

COMARE statement on Sellafield epidemiology study

1. In September 1989 the Department of Health requested COMARE to review the epidemiological data concerning cancer in the vicinity of Sellafield. At COMARE's request the Department of Health commissioned a study from a group of United Kingdom independent experts including Dr. Gerald Draper, Professors Cartwright and Craft. The results of the study (Draper et al BMJ reference) have now been published and considered by COMARE.

2. The Report of an Independent Advisory Group, under the Chairmanship of Sir Douglas Black, had previously investigated the incidence of cancer in West Cumbria in the period 1953 to 1983. Draper et al review this earlier period and extends it to the end of 1990. They have considered, in particular, leukaemia and other cancers occurring at ages 0-24 years including four patients in this age range with cancer being diagnosed between 1984 and 1990. One Seascale resident is known to have developed acute lymphoblastic leukaemia in 1991, which is too recent for analysis in the current study.

3. Draper et al report that the incidence of cancer arising in the age group 0-24 years in the village of Seascale has continued to be higher than the level expected on the basis of experience in the rest of the United Kingdom. Assessing the whole period from 1953 to 1990, the authors conclude that the pattern of cancer incidence in Seascale is very unlikely to have arisen by chance, although this possibility cannot be entirely excluded.

4. Analysis of information for the surrounding districts of Copeland and Allerdale, or for the rest of Cumbria, does not show an excess cancer incidence.

5. COMARE welcomed the study and has accepted its findings. In comparing the information from the period 1953 to 1983 with 1984 to 1990, the Committee noted that the four new cases identified were: two patients with non-Hodgkin lymphoma, one patient with Hodgkin's disease, and one patient with pinealoma. There were no additional cases of lymphoid leukaemia in the latter period although this was the most frequent type of cancer among the cases in the earlier report. The Committee also noted:

(i) lymphoid leukaemia and non-Hodgkin lymphoma occurring in childhood should be considered as a continuous spectrum of disease and therefore agreed that it was appropriate to combine them in the analyses.

(ii) there is no body of medical data to suggest that Hodgkin's disease or pinealoma can be caused by radiation.

6. COMARE wish to include these new findings as part of their current review of the incidence of cancer in young people in the vicinity of Sellafield. The Committee considers that the level of concern raised by Sir Douglas Black's report is maintained by the new information provided by Draper et al. The Committee acknowledge that studies of this type cannot directly address the problem of determining the cause of the raised cancer incidence in Seascale, which remains unknown. The Committee is aware of the current hypotheses which have been made regarding the causation of these cancers and note that appropriate studies to address the issues are proceeding.

Community Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the full cost to her Department of correcting the calculation for the community care special transitional grant indicative allocations to individual local authorities; and what is her estimate of the cost to local authorities of adjusting their budgetary calculations in the light of these corrections.

Mr. Yeo: The cost was minimal. It is routine practice to issue proposed allocations to allow authorities to check and, if they wish, to query the figures. In this case, a revised circular notifying authorities of their revised allocations was issued less than two weeks after the first. A further circular would in any event have had to be issued detailing the distribution of the additional allocation of £26·8 million for authorities' additional responsibilities for severely disabled people following the closure of the independent living fund. The revised circular was able to include this and therefore give full figures for the special transitional grant.

DES

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representatives she has received from the daughters of the women who took the drug DES during their pregnancy; what plans she has to assist them with compensation; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We have received a few representations, including some from DES Action UK, about the potential effects of Diethylstilbestrol. If an individual feels that she or he had been harmed through the mother's use of DES, they may seek legal advice on the nature of any remedy which may be open to them. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) on 12 January, column 699.

Dental Treatment

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list for each month in the period from July 1991 to July 1992 the number of applications to dental practice boards for approval of dental treatment above the £600 limit.

Note: The figures show all applications for prior approval, including those made for reasons other than a cost in excess of £200.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to publish the Bloomfield report of the review of dental remuneration; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will inform Members of the content of Sir Kenneth Bloomfield's report shortly.

West Midlands RHA

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all of the investigations presently being carried out in relation to the West Midlands regional health authority; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department of Health and the statutory auditor are currently investigating loans made by West Midlands regional health authority to a charitable company, Health Management Trust, to assist a subsidiary company, FIP Ltd. I am also aware that the auditor is conducting a review of West Midlands regional health authority's management of Healthtrac and the management buy-out of the management services information division by Qa Business Services.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish details of the section 20(3) report issued recently in relation to the West Midlands regional health authority by the district auditor; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We will consider publication when our inquiries into the specific points raised by the report are complete.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to improve the management of the West Midlands regional health authority; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Our priorities for the west midlands, which are shared with the West Midlands regional health authority, are to improve the health of the local population and to ensure that services are efficient and effective, underpinned by managerial and financial systems of the highest possible standards. Important changes have taken place in recent weeks to improve the management of the regional organisation, and I am confident that Sir Donald Wilson, the new regional chairman, will provide a strong lead on the challenging agenda ahead.

Patient Numbers

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to review the use of completed consultant episodes to measure patient throughput; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have no plans to do so at present.

Regional Returns

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to publish information from the quarterly monitoring returns from the regions; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: These are management returns which were instituted in 1991-92 and which are still under development. There are no plans at present to publish the results on a regular basis.

Patient Numbers

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish a table showing (i) the number of acute in-patient completed consultant episodes for the first six months of 1991-92 and the first six months of 1992-93 and (ii) the number of day cases also dealt with over these two periods.

Mr. Sackville: The total number of general and acute ordinary admissions and day cases purchased by the national health service in England, and the number of those which were day cases in the two periods, are shown in the table.

		000's
Ordinary Admissions and Day Cases	3,520	3,740
Of which: Day Cases	659	818

Note: Day cases are defined as acute elective admissions using a bed but not requiring an overnight stay.

London Health Care

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 6 November 1992, Official Report, column 450, if she will now list the members of the implementation group for Tomlinson on the future of London's health care; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We shall publish membership of the London implementation group when we announce our detailed proposals for change in London's health services.

Nicotine Patches

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance her Department has issued on the use of nicotine patches; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Department has issued no guidance on the use of nicotine patches, but guidance for the user can be found in the patient information leaflet provided with the patches.

Female Circumcision

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is taking to ensure that the law relating to female circumcision is monitored and enforced; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We are determined to eradicate this abhorrent practice. The Prohibition of Female Circumcision Act 1985 makes it an offence to carry out any of the procedures which are known as female circumcision, but which are more accurately described as female genital mutilation. The Act also makes it illegal to aid, abet, counsel or procure the carrying out of these procedures. Further legal protection is provided by the Children Act 1989.

In October 1991 we issued guidance entitled "Working Together Under the Children Act 1989" to all local authorities, health authorities, the police, the probation service, schools, doctors and a wide range of voluntary organisations working in the child care field. This guidance contained advice on the 1985 Act and on dealing with FGM. We provide funding for FORWARD—the foundation for Women's Health and Development, which works to educate the relevant communities and the professionals concerned about FGM.

To date, there have been no prosecutions under the 1985 Act. This may be because it can be difficult to acquire evidence. Any information we receive about specific instances of alleged FGM is sent to the police, and we ask others to do likewise. It is for the police to investigate any such allegations and discuss with the Crown prosecution service how to proceed. When appropriate, we also pass details to the General Medical Council, the local social services department, and the district health authority, if the offence is said to have taken place in a private hospital or clinic registered and inspected by the DHA.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Bosnia

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the pledges made by the United Kingdom and others; and if he will list the pledges which have been converted into cash for relief supplies for Bosnia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have committed over £70 million in humanitarian relief to the former Yugoslavia. Of this, £41 million has been pledged multilaterally through the EC and over £29·5 million in direct bilateral assistance. Most of this is focused on central Bosnia. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for High Peak (Mr. Hendry) on 23 November, columns 452-53, for details of how we are spending these funds. Comprehensive figures for the commitments made by other donors are not available.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits Agency Fraud

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the feasibility study into the market testing of sector fraud within the Benefits Agency has been completed; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The study commissioned into the feasibility of market testing all or part of the fraud work has not yet been completed. Once the eventual findings have been considered decisions will be taken on the extent to which market testing should be applied to this area of work.

Disabled People

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will compensate disabled people who are unable to make an application to the independent living fund because of delays in the processing of attendance allowance and disability living allowance claims.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to provide such compensation. The independent living fund is an independent charitable trust which is managed by trustees, who deal with all administrative matters.

Disability Allowances

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of claims received by his Department for the disability working allowance in each month since its introduction; and if he will provide a breakdown by region.

Mr. Scott: A regional breakdown is not available. The total number of claims received in each month is as follows:

1992	Total
March	4,153
April	4,124
May	2,570
June	2,700
July	2,344
August	2,081
September	2,085
October	1,432
November	1,431
December	1,008

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown by number and percentage of the total number of (i) initial and (ii) renewal claims for disability working allowance received by his Department that were refused on the grounds that (a) the claimant was not in remunerative work, (b) the claimant's income was above the limit, (c) the claimant was not in receipt of a qualifying benefit, (d) the claimant was receiving family credit, (e) the joint income of the claimant and his or her partner exceeded the limit, (f) the claimant was working less than 16 hours a week or (g) for other reasons.

Mr. Scott: By 2 January the total number and percentage of claims refused in each category was as follows:

	Claims refused
	Number	per cent.
Not in work or working less than 16 hours a week
New claims	11,069	57
Renewals	61	33

	Claims refused
	Number	per cent.
Income of claimant and partner exceeds DWA level
New claims	2,150	11
Renewals	108	57
No qualifying benefit
New claims	5,128	27
Renewals	8	4
Receiving family credit
New claims	494	3
Renewals	0	0
Other reasons
New claims	448	2
Renewals	12	6

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for the disability working allowance have been received by his Department to date; and if he will provide a breakdown by (a) the number and percentage of these that resulted in an award, (b) the number and percentage of these that were refused and (c) the number and percentage of these that are awaiting a decision.

Mr. Scott: By 2 January 1993, 24,280 claims had been received with following results:-

	Number	Percentage
Awards	3,360	14
Refused	19,480	80
Awaiting further information	625	3
Withdrawn before decision	815	3

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the organisations he plans to consult and outline any other plans the Department has for consulting disabled people and their organisations on the next revision of the claim pack for disability living allowance and attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: The disability living allowance and attendance allowance claim packs were developed in close consultation with disabled people and the organisations that represent them. We continue to consult widely both formally and informally. A reprint of the claim packs is being produced for April 1993. A table of the organisations we have consulted since 30 November 1992 is as follows.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many awards of the higher rate mobility component made since 3 February 1992 were made (a) on the grounds that the person was severely mentally impaired and displayed severe behavioural problems and (b) under the deaf-blind provisions.

Mr. Scott: Recorded numbers of people awarded the higher rate mobility component since 3 February 1992 are as follows:

(a) On grounds of severe mental impairment and severe behavioural problems—1,352 at 31 December 1992.
(b) Under deaf-blind provisions—110 at 30 November 1992.

Includes new claims and "top-up" claims from existing Attendance Allowance and Mobility Allowance beneficiaries.

All figures are provisional and may be subject to amendment.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to attempt to identify the numbers of people who lost the chance to submit an application to the independent living fund solely because the Benefits Agency had not processed their claim for the care component of disability living allowance or attendance allowance; and if he will compensate people in this position by extending the independent living fund deadline or otherwise.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the numbers of people expected to become entitled to the severe disability premium as a result of extending entitlement to people living with a person who is registered blind; and what is the estimated cost to his Department.

Mr. Burt: We estimate that a few hundred severely disabled people who are not currently entitled to the severe disability premium because they have an adult living with them will qualify for the premium because that adult is blind and their presence will be disregarded. We estimate that the cost will be of the order of £1 million a year.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many requests up to 26 November 1992 had been received for a review of a decision (a) not to award the highest rate of disabled living allowance care component and (b) not to award the higher rate of attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide details of the amounts, dates and basis upon which the chief executive of the Benefits Agency has been awarded any performance bonus.

Mr. Burt: The basis on which the chief executive of the Benefits Agency could earn a performance bonus under his contract was set out in my reply to the hon. Member on Tuesday 27 October 1992, at column 640. The chief executive's total remuneration for 1991-92 is set out in the Benefits Agency annual report, a copy of which is available in the Library, although the elements within that total remain confidential.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide details of the changes he plans to make to the medical control procedures applied to invalidity benefit announced in his autumn statement; and if he will provide details of how he expects to achieve his estimate of £240 million savings and to specify the numbers of people expected to have their invalidity benefit withdrawn as a result of these changes.

Mr. Scott: The changes which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 12 November 1992 are intended to streamline the medical control procedures which already apply to all incapacity benefit claims. People invited to medical examinations will be given more notice, asked to tell us if they cannot attend, and warned that failure to do so without good cause will result in loss of benefit. Improved reports by examining doctors will reduce the number of people who need to be examined more than once; enabling them to deal with more of the cases referred for control action. In the first year, we estimate that some 80,000 people who no longer satisfy the entitlement conditions will be identified earlier than under the existing arrangements.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will express the average income of single people and couples in receipt of invalidity benefit as a percentage of average income of equivalent household units in the country.

Mr. Scott: The information in the table is based on the estimates for 1988-89, the two calendar years combined.

Per cent.

	Income before housing costs	Income after housing costs
Singles	70	69
Couples	76	79

Note:

The estimates are based on Family Expenditure Survey data from the 'Households Below Average Income' series.

Service Pensions

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) where and on what date the Naval, Military and Air Forces etc. (Disablement and Death) Service Pensions Amendment (No. 2) Order 1992 was first published;

(2) when he first announced his intention to make the Naval, Military and Air Forces etc. (Disablement and Death) Service Pensions Amendment (No. 2) Order 1992;

(3) on what date and through which media he has taken steps to publicise to the general public the terms of the Naval, Military and Air Forces etc. (Disablement and Death) Service Pensions Amendment (No. 2) Order 1992.

Miss Widdecombe: The legislation was announced in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr.

Hayes) on 17 December at columns 369-70, and through a press release and letter to Members of the central advisory committee the same day. The legislation was laid before Parliament on 18 December 1992 and published by HMSO on 6 January 1993.

Hearing Loss (Military Service)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) why he proposes to remove the eligibility of ex-servicemen for lump sum compensation claims for hearing loss of less than 20 per cent. caused during their military service;

(2) if he will publicise the proposed abolition of the eligibility of ex-servicemen for lump sum compensation claims for hearing loss of less than 20 per cent. caused during their military service.

Miss Widdecombe: The introduction of a 20 per cent. disablement threshold for claims for noise induced hearing loss brings the war pension rules more into line with those for claims for occupational deafness under the industrial injuries scheme. The proposals form part of a package, the other element of which is the removal, from April 1993, of rank differentials in war disablement pensions; almost 200,000 war disablement pensioners will gain up to £5 a week as a result. The decision was announced in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) on 17 December 1992 at columns 369-70, and publicised through a press release and letter to members of the central advisory committee on war pensions the same day.

Retirement Pension

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to alter the relationship between the level of retirement pension and the cost of living.

Miss Widdecombe: The retirement pension is statutorily uprated each year in line with the movement in prices. We have no plans to alter this.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to make the retirement pension a means-tested benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: None.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take steps to remedy the situation referred to by the social security commissioners in decisions CIS/587/90 and CSIS/78/92 whereby a retirement pensioner previously receiving an invalidity pension is deprived of the higher pensioner premium if he or she reached retirement pension age before 11 April 1988.

Mr. Burt: The rules discussed in the decisions quoted are intended to ensure that a person who was receiving the premium because he had invalidity pension did not suffer a reduction in income as a result of taking retirement pension. The premium continues provided he remains in receipt of the relevant income-related benefit. The regulations fully reflect this policy. It was never the intention that a person who had already ceased to receive invalidity benefit when the relevant income-related benefit was claimed should qualify for the premium. We have no plans to change this policy.

Maxwell Pension Fund

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to respond to the Social Security Committee's report published on 12 January.

Mr. Lilley: I shall want to read the Committee's report carefully before responding fully. But my immediate response is to endorse firmly its main objective, the early distribution of assets already recovered or in the common investment fund to the Maxwell pension schemes.

The Committee makes two recommendations intended to help secure that objective. I have, in line with its first recommendation, asked Sir John Cuckney to continue to encourage mediation as a preferred course of action. In this he has my firm support and backing. If rapid progress cannot be made in the common investment fund by agreement I hope all parties will consider mediation.

The Committee also recommended that Sir John's role be extended to help ensure that any administrator or liquidator does not delay a settlement by pursuing highly doubtful claims to assets that were once in the possession of Robert Maxwell companies. These office holders are variously appointed by, and are accountable to, the court or the creditors. The scope for direct action by other parties is therefore limited. However, I have agreed with Sir John that he will be available to assist the office-holders wherever possible.

Regulation of Earnings Factors Order

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the application of the Social Security Regulation of Earnings Factors Order 1992 as it applies to additional pension paid with invalidity benefit.

Mr. Lilley: The policy intention has been that the revaluation order should apply to additional pensions paid with invalidity benefit. We have received legal advice that provisions enacted in the Social Security Act 1990 and carried forward into the Contributions and Benefits Act 1992 have not given full effect to this. This means an estimated £9 million paid between April 1992 and April 1993 will have been paid on a basis which is incorrect on the strict interpretation of the law. We intend to continue payments on an extra-statutory basis to ensure that claimants receive a level of benefits in line with the policy intention. Appropriation will be obtained in due course. The total amount paid on this basis, initially estimated at a cost of £0·8 million, rounded, per month, will be reported in a note to the Department's appropriate account.

TRANSPORT

Correspondence

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now reply to the letter sent to him on 2 October by the hon. Member for Gower relating to a constituent from Bishopston, Swansea.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I replied to the hon. Member on 18 December.

Public Transport Investment

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what limits are placed on the freedom of the chairmen of British Rail and London Transport to speak publicly on the investment needs and the maintenance spending required for their main businesses.

Mr. Freeman: None. However, in the context of the annual investment and financing review for nationalised industries, Government Departments and the industries find it useful to exchange information in confidence.

A46 Upgrading

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects (a) commencement and (b) completion of work on the Lincoln to Newark section of the upgrading of the A46.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The scheme is planned to go to public inquiry this spring and further progress will depend on the outcome of that inquiry. It is not therefore possible to provide a firm date for start of construction works, but it is likely to take about two years to complete.

Railway Expenditure

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what levels of investment spending have been assessed and requested by British Rail as required to (a) maintain the track and signalling so as to avoid speed restrictions and (b) replace outdated track, signalling and rolling stock.

Mr. Freeman: The British Railways Board allocates its investment spending within its overall external financing limit. The need for the board to maintain and replace infrastructure and rolling stock was taken into account in determining the additional resources for the railways announced in the Chancellor's autumn statement.

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the additional funds made available to British Rail in the autumn statement for leasing capital equipment could be appropriately used for the ordering of new long-distance network trains for the Kent coast services; and what constraints or impediments prevent British Rail from entering into such arrangements in the near future.

Mr. Freeman: The Chancellor's autumn statement enables BR to order on lease an additional £150 million worth of new rolling stock. Only the leasing payments will count against its external financing limit. BR is currently considering which rolling stock orders would be suitable for leasing; the options include new rolling stock for Kent coast.

I have asked BR to proceed as quickly as possible with negotiations on a suitable leasing arrangement.

Public Inquiries

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement on the role of local public inquiries where decisions they take have national significance in cases where national policy is still under consideration;

(2) if he will suspend the public inquiry into the Port of Bristol Harbour Revision Order until the future is decided of the collieries in South Wales and the midlands which are linked to the outcome of this inquiry.

Mr. Norris: Issues of overall Government policy are not properly a matter for local public inquiries. The Harbour Revision Order about which a local public inquiry is now in progress deals with the transfer to a company, First Corporate, of some of the harbour authority powers of Bristol city council. I understand that the company is constructing a bulk import facility but that it is not relying upon the order to obtain the powers to do so. It is not therefore appropriate to suspend the inquiry.

Vehicle Inspectorate

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he expects to report to Parliament following the consultation on the future of the vehicle inspectorate; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps he will take to ensure that road safety will be monitored in any changes that may be made in future vehicle testing following the current consultation exercise; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My right hon. Friend is currently considering the responses to our consultation on the future of the vehicle inspectorate's heavy goods and passenger carrying vehicles testing functions and will make an announcement in due course. As the consultation paper made clear, the Government are determined that under all options for the future, existing standards of vehicle testing should be maintained and where possible improved.

Oil Tanker Pollution

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assumption he makes for the purposes of pollution compensation schemes of the likely pollution clean-up cost of a major oil tanker pollution casualty on the south coast of England.

Mr. Norris: The limits of the funds available under the international compensation arrangements are designed to meet fully the costs of any incident in European waters. The current limit is some £50 million and this has not been exceeded in Europe since the system came into operation in 1978. However a diplomatic conference in November, co-sponsored by the United Kingdom, has agreed on protocols to double the current limit which will come into force once a minimum number of states have ratified them.

Hazardous Cargoes

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will institute a comprehensive review of the existing methods and routes of transportation of crude oil, oil products and hazardous chemicals around the coastal waters of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norris: The inquiry, under the chairmanship of Lord Donaldson, which was announced by the Secretary of State on 11 January will include a comprehensive review of the routing of tankers around the coastal waters of the United Kingdom.

Salvage Convention

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans Her Majesty's Government have to ratify the 1989 salvage convention.

Mr. Norris: It is the Government's intention to ratify this convention as soon as parliamentary time can be found for the necessary primary legislation. The main provisions of the convention are applied commercially when there is a Lloyd's open form 1990 contract between a shipowner and a salvor, as in the case of the Braer.

MV Braer

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the current arrangements for refunding the costs of pollution clean-up in a situation such as that caused by the Braer casualty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Under the relevant international conventions, to which the United Kingdom is a party, these costs are recoverable from the ship's insurers and the international oil pollution compensation fund. This is a tried and tested international scheme.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will widen the terms of reference of the inquiry into the causes of the stranding of the Braer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: No. The terms of reference of the inquiry being carried out by the marine accident investigation branch are broad enough.

Tyre Treads

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek a derogation from the EEC requirement that tyre tread depths should be a minimum of 1·6 mm; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have no plans to do so.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Labour Statistics

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated proportion of economically active Roman Catholics and Protestants as at 31 December 1996.

Mr. Atkins: The Government have not carried out any projections of the economically active population in terms of religion.

Public Bodies (Targets)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has for the introduction of goals and timetables to other public bodies in Northern Ireland similar to those introduced for senior civil servants in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: It is not for the Secretary of State to set goals and timetables for other public authorities. Under section 31(3) of the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989, all public authorities have a duty to consider the need for goals and timetables to assist in securing fair participation in their employment by both communities.

Press Office

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many staff were employed by his Department's press office in each year since 1979.

Mr. Mates: Data on staff employed prior to 1989 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The available information is as follows:—

	Staff in Post as at 1 April
1989	50
1990	54
1991	58
1992	58·5

These figures include staff from the home and Northern Ireland civil services and the press offices of Northern Ireland Departments.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Electricity Transmission Wires

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment his Department has made of the effects of overhead electricity transmission wires on farm animals using fields adjoining or below.

Mr. Soames: The Department has not made such an assessment.

Green Pound

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the value in European currency units of the green pound in each year since 1987.

Mr. Curry: The information requested is given in the table.

Value of Green Pound in European Currency Units

Press Office

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many staff were employed by his Department's press office in each year since 1979.

Mr. Curry: The number of staff employed in this Department' press office in recent years is as follows:

Year	Number
1985	35
1986	35
1987	30
1988	28
1989	26
1990	25
1991	20
1992	20

Figures for previous years are not readily available.

EDUCATION

Further Education

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he intends to publish advice with respect to changes of name for colleges in the new further education sector.

Mr. Boswell: The Department has today issued advice to colleges entering the new further education sector on 1 April 1993 on the procedure for applying for name changes. The advice also includes guidance on college titles.

Press Office

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many staff were employed by his Department's press office in each year since 1979.

Mr. Boswell: Figures for the number of press officers are available only for the last three years. These are as follows:

Year	Press officers
1990	9
1991	8
1992	8

Student Grant Cheques

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if Her Majesty's Government will hold urgent discussions with clearing banks about the criteria they use for cashing student grant cheques.

Mr. Boswell: This is entirely a matter for the clearing banks themselves to decide. My right hon. Friend has received no representations about any difficulties over their arrangements for cashing student grant cheques.

Secondary Schools, Northamptonshire

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish a list of secondary schools in Northamptonshire together with the amount spent per pupil in each school in the most recent available year.

Mr. Forth: Details of schools' planned unit costs are contained within part 2 of the budget statements prepared and published by each local education authority under section 42 of the Education Reform Act 1988. Information on schools' actual expenditure is contained in authorities' outturn statements. Copies of the relevant parts of the budget statements for 1991-92 and 1992-93 and the outturn statement for 1991-92 published by Northamptonshire county council have been placed in the Library.

PRIME MINISTER

Calcutt Inquiry

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister when he was first advised of the contents of the letter from Lord McGregor to Sir David Calcutt.

The Prime Minister: The first I knew of Lord McGregor's letter was when it appeared in the national press.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Prime Minister when he responded to a letter dated 9 December 1992 from President Dobrica Cosić of Yugoslavia concerning the conflict in the former Yugoslavia; if he will indicate what his response has been; and if he will seek agreement to the publication of the correspondence.

The Prime Minister: I replied to President Cosić's letter on 11 January. I believe it important to maintain the confidentiality of such correspodence.

Denmark

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 14 December, Official Report, column 37, what is the basis for clear distinction between the intergovernmental binding decision in respect of Denmark taken in Edinburgh, and a treaty judiciable at the International Court at The Hague.

The Prime Minister: In the EC context 'treaty' is normally used for an instrument amending the Community treaties and thus requiring ratification. The decision in respect of Denmark does not amend either the Maastricht treaty or the earlier Community treaties and does not require ratification. It is, like a treaty, binding in international law.

Jamaica

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it the policy of Her Majesty's Government to withdraw all British economic aid to Jamaica if hangings are recommenced there in February.

The Prime Minister: No. But in line with normal practice, our bilateral aid policy for Jamaica will continue to take full account of all human rights considerations.

Seals (Russia)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister what written evidence or information Her Majesty's Government have received from the Russian authorities concerning the seal cull in Russia; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Russian authorities informed us of the 1992 culling quotas of 7,300 and 2,300 for adult hooded and harp seals respectively. We have not received any figures for 1993. The Russian authorities are well aware of public concern in the United Kingdom about seal culling.

Human Rights

Mr. Soley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to incorporate article 10 of the European convention on human rights into British law.

The Prime Minister: No. Our policy remains not to incorporate the European convention on human rights into domestic law, since we believe that it is for Parliament, rather than the judiciary, to determine how the principles of human rights in the convention are best secured.

Honours (Withdrawal)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister under what circumstances he would recommend to the Queen that awards be withdrawn posthumously; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 14 January 1993]: None that I can foresee, but the forfeiture of awards is considered on a case-by-case basis.

Prince and Princess of Wales

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister what consultations he held with (a) the Prince and (b) the Princess of Wales prior to his statement of 9 December 1992.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on Tuesday 12 January at column 697.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Electrical Faults (Fires)

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of fires in (a) the private sector and (b) the commercial sector were caused by faulty electrical installations for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Jack: The table shows the percentage of fires attended by local authority fire brigades in the United Kingdom in 1991 where the cause was reported to be faults in the electrical plugs, sockets, switches, leads to appliances and other wiring in buildings, by their trade or business activity. The classification of "private" or "commercial" is not available.

Betting Offices

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to meet the chairman of the British Greyhound Racing Board to discuss the possible extension of betting office opening hours in the evening.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have no present plans for a further meeting, but have previously discussed this matter with the chairman. In addition, I met a delegation including the chief executive of the British Greyhound Racing Board on 21 December 1992 to discuss evening opening. My officials also met the chief executive and his colleagues on 2 December 1992.

Immigration

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice he has taken on the continuing right to deny entry to the United Kingdom of visitors to other EC nations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government have access to legal and other advice from a variety of sources, but it is not the normal practice to reveal details of the advice provided in relation to any specific issue.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his discussions with Commissioner Bangemann about the implications of proposed article 8A of the treaty of Rome in relation to the right of the United Kingdom to deny admission to visitors to other EC nations.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My right hon. and learned Friend had a number of discussions with EC Vice-President Bangemann when Herr Bangemann had responsibility within the Commission for implementation of the internal market. My right hon. and learned Friend made it clear that, while the Government's policy was to make it as easy as possible for EC nationals to enter and leave the United Kingdom, immigration controls would be maintained on non-EC nationals.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will outline the reasons underlying his statement that the United Kingdom has a continuing right to exclude visitors to other EC nations following the implementation of proposed article 8A of the treaty of Rome.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Our view is that, insofar as it deals with the movement of persons, article 8A of the treaty of Rome applies only to EC nationals.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will use sequestrated assets from drug dealers in Liverpool to fund the expansion of the city's Dare to Care anti-drugs project; and if he will make a statement on measures he is taking to combat drug abuse in Liverpool.

Mr. Jack: Under present public accounting arrangements confiscated money is treated in the same way as fine revenue, and paid directly into the Consolidated Fund from which Government expenditure generally—including substantial support for drug-related work—is financed. In April 1991 the seized assets fund was established to recycle assets confiscated here under drug confiscation agreements with other countries to support work against drug misuse. £3·2 million has been made available from the fund in the current financial year to enforcement agencies and a variety of individual projects, including some based in Liverpool, directed against drugs misuse. The possibility of further funding being made available from this source is under consideration, but the final amount will depend on the success of international operations to confiscate the assets of drug traffickers.

Under the drugs prevention initiative, a local drugs prevention team has been working in Liverpool since 1990.

The team has provided financial and other support to a wide range of drugs prevention projects, including Dare to Care.

Merseyside police play an active role in tackling drug misuse. In addition to enforcing the law, they are involved with other agencies, including the regional health authority and the education authority, in a number of prevention and education initiatives.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many new drug addicts registered on Merseyside in 1992; how many crimes on Merseyside were drug related over the past five years; and what resources are available to patrol Liverpool bay and the River Mersey to combat the smuggling of drugs into the area via small craft.

Mr. Jack: Addict statistics for 1992 are not yet available. In 1991, the number of new addicts notified to the Home Office in the Merseyside police area was 893.

Information on drug-related offences in Merseyside is contained in table A2.1 of the Home Office Statistical Bulletin "Statistics of Drugs Seizures and Offenders Dealt With, UK 1991 (Area Tables)", a copy of which is in the Library.

Anti-smuggling control is the responsibility of the Customs and Excise Department. Patrol of the areas mentioned forms a part of the duties of the flexible anti-smuggling teams based in the Liverpool area. These comprise a total of 38 staff plus support of two further officers whose specific job is to gather coastal intelligence. There are, in addition, further staff based at Holyhead, Heysham and Ellesmere Port who can be called on should the need arise.

The staff are supported by a locally based Searider semi-rigid inflatable vessel, Customs marine branch cutters, aerial surveillance and mobile radar vans as necessary. A wide range of other technical aids is also available to local staff as Liverpool is the centre for the research and development of Customs equipment.

Youth Crime

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what measures he proposes to take to tackle youth crime in Mansfield and Nottinghamshire;

(2) what measures he intends to take to deal with car crimes committed by young people in (a) Mansfield, (b) Nottinghamshire and (c) England and Wales.

Mr. Jack: The Government have encouraged the police and other agencies in the development of effective crime prevention programmes aimed at tackling youth crime and have funded a number of initiatives. The Home Office safer cities project in Nottingham has committed more than £100,000 to youth crime prevention schemes since 1989. In addition, we have set up a local drug prevention team in the area. The Department of Education announced last month that Nottinghamshire is to receive £147,000 in 1992-93 under its grants for education support and training (GEST) programme for youth crime prevention schemes, one of which will be a "wheels" project in the Ashfield district to divert young people from car crime. The Department of the Environment's city challenge programme in Nottingham is also targeting youth crime prevention. In addition the probation supervision grant scheme provides funding for three projects in the Nottingham area for support for offenders and ex-offenders.

As part of its programme of action on youth crime for 1993, Crime Concern is planning a series of regional seminars, including two in the midlands, on best practice in diverting young people from crime.

The Government are also considering what means might be needed to reduce offending by the very small group of persistent juvenile offenders.

With regard to the measures being taken nationwide to prevent car crime, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the question from the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) on 16 December 1992, Official Report, column 208.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of offenders appearing before the courts in (a) the east midlands, (b) Nottinghamshire and (c) England and Wales were unemployed in (i) 1989, (ii) 1990 and (iii) 1991.

Mr. Jack: Information on the employment status of defendants appearing before the courts in England and Wales is not recorded centrally.

Property Offences

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department will publish regional data on the relationship between property offences and consumption levels.

Mr. Jack: No.

Prison Education

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria he will use in deciding which contractors should be awarded contracts to provide prison education services.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Contracts will be awarded to those providers, whether from the public or private sector, who offer the best combination of quality and price which reflects the priority of the service.

Press Regulation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department was first made aware of the contents of the letter sent by Lord McGregor to Sir David Calcutt.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department first became aware of the letter when it was published in the press on Tuesday 12 January.

Offenders (Employment)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of offenders in (a) the east midlands, (b) Nottinghamshire and (c) England and Wales went immediately into employment on release from prison in (i) 1989, (ii) 1990 and (iii) 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not recorded. However, the National Prison Survey 1991, which was based on a random sample of the prison population, found that about one sixth of prisoners who had an earliest release date in 1991 said that they had jobs to go to on release.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of offenders under supervision by the probation service in (a) Nottinghamshire and (b) England and Wales were unemployed in (i) 1989, (ii) 1990 and (iii) 1991.

Mr. Jack: This information is not available centrally.

Terrorism

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been his response to a request from the Association of London Authorities for his Department to meet the costs of the Metropolitan police's counter-terrorism operations.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have not recently received any such request. But I shall be meeting representatives of the association later this month and will consider their views.

Press Office

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff were employed by his Department's press office in each year since 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Home Department's records do not contain a breakdown between press office and paid publicity (advertising, publications, exhibitions and videos) staff before 1982. Instead, public relations branch staff were listed together and this total, including clerical support grades, for 1979 to 1982 was 33 for each year inclusive.

Press office staff numbers, including clerical grades, for subsequent years are:

	Number
1983	22·25
1984	21·75
1985	20·50
1986	24·25
1987	24·50
1988	26·00
1989	28·50
1990	27·50
1991	26·50
1992	25·50

Crime Trends

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department of he will update Home Office research study No. 119: "Trends in Crime and their Interpretation."

Mr. Jack: The study examined a period of some 30 years up to 1987 and was published in 1990. More recent trends in recorded crime are being kept under review, but there is no reason to believe that there have been significant changes in the patterns which it describes in the period since publication.

In coming to its conclusion the study, published in 1990, based its findings on a period of some 30 years up to 1987 and as a consdquence I have no reason to doubt the continuing validity of its conclusions. I therefore have no immediate plans to repeat this particular work using post-1987 crime data.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Walsall, North of 17 December about inquiries into passport records.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I replied to the hon. Member on 13 January 1993.

Dr. Kypros Loucas

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 17 December 1992, Official Report, column 450, if he will identify the professionals who gave references on behalf of Dr. Kypros Loucas.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Dr. Loucas gave the names of two professionals as personal referees whom the Prison Service could approach. The references were given in a personal capacity and with the customary assurance that they would be treated in strict confidence. On that basis, it would be wrong to identify them.

Central European Time

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate his Department has made of the cost of a move to central European time.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Estimates of some of the possible costs and savings resulting from a move to Central European Time were made in the 1989 Green Paper "Summer Time: A Consultation Document" (CM722). We will review the adequacy of this information in our further consideration of policy on future summer time arrangements.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cold weather payments were made in November 1992 and in December 1992 (a) nationally and (b) in Merseyside.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Edward O'Hara, dated 14 January 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security asking how many cold weather payments were made in November 1992 and in December 1992 (a) nationally and (b) in Merseyside.

There were no forecast or recorded periods of cold weather in November 1992. Following forecast and recorded periods of cold weather in December 1992, around 2·5 million payments nationally have been made costing approximately £15·5 million. More detailed national and local figures will be placed in the Library as soon as they are available.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Claims

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims remained to be cleared on 26 November 1992 (a) in total and (b) for claimants already in receipt of income support (i) for new claims for the highest rate of disabled living allowance care component and (ii) for new claims for the higher rate of attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Ms. Jane Kennedy, dated 14 January 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security concerning claims for Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and Attendance Allowance (AA) outstanding on 26 November 1992.

A claim to either DLA or AA is a claim for the benefit as a whole and not for a specific component or level of component of the benefit. It is therefore not possible to give figures on the number of outstanding claims to a particular level of component. Information about outstanding claims for claimants who are already in receipt of Income Support is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

You asked about the number of claims outstanding at 26 November 1992. The information about claims is held on a monthly basis, therefore the number of new claims outstanding at the end of November was just over 66,000 for DLA, and 55,000 for AA.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Disability Allowances

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number and percentage of all inquiries received by the benefits inquiry line which relate to disability living allowances and attendance allowances in each month since February 1992 and the number and percentage of calls recorded but not able to get through on this line over the same period.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the benefit inquiry line for people with disabilities is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 14 January 1993.

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the numbers and percentages of all enquiries received by the Benefits Enquiry Line related to Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and Attendance Allowance (AA) in each month since February; and the number of calls recorded but not able to get through on this line over the same period.

The information requested is shown in the table:

December	15,048	7,397	31	16	7,380	16

[1] The number of abandoned calls is relevant to the whole service provided by the Benefit Enquiry Line.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy of this reply will appear in the Official Report. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to compensate claimants for the Benefits Agency delays in processing disability living allowance and attendance allowance and for backdating of linked benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance and attendance allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 14 January 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security, asking what plans he has to compensate claimants for Benefits Agency delays in processing Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and Attendance Allowance (AA) and for backdating of linked benefits.

The present arrangements are that compensation can be considered only where, because of a clear and unambiguous Departmental error, a claim has taken longer than twelve months to process or, in the case of an existing award, there is an interruption in payment of three months or more. Normal backdating rules will apply in linked benefits and arrears can be backdated only up to the statutory maximum time limit of 52 weeks.

I recognise that delays are unacceptable at any stage, and Ministers have given a clear commitment that no-one will lose benefit due to the delays in processing claims.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many disability living allowance and attendance allowance claims from (a) Stoke-on-Trent, North constituency and (b) the entire area dealt with by the relevant disability benefits centre have been outstanding each month since February 1992; and how many additional staff and at what grade have been taken on in each of those months.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Ms. Joan Walley, dated 14 January 1993:

As Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security concerning the number of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and Attendance Allowance (AA) claims in the Stoke North constituency and the relevant Disability Benefit centre.

Information about the number of DLA and AA claims from Stoke North constituency is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

All new claims from people in the Stoke on Trent area are dealt with by the Midlands Disability Benefit Centre in Birmingham. The following table shows the number of DLA and AA claims outstanding at the DBC for each month.

	Disability living allowance	Attendance allowance
February	1,712	11,238
March	7,536	15,237
April	12,617	17,027
May	18,187	18,486
June	19,978	20,210
July	19,759	20,639
August	20,004	18,787
September	16,713	15,168
October	11,357	7,136
November	9,639	8,464
December	9,121	8,557

You also asked about additional staff taken on at the DBC during each month. This information is in the following table.

	HEO	EO	AO	AA	Casual AA
February	—	5	—	2	—
March	—	2	[2]1	6	4
April	—	3	1	1	1

[1] 6 months.
[2] Part time.

In addition to the extra staff recruited, considerable overtime has been worked and staff have worked on a detached duty basis from other Benefits Agency offices. Work was also processed by staff at additional units which were set up elsewhere to assist in the clearance of the backlog. I gave details of this in my letter of 19 October 1992 to all MPs.

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he received a copy of the report of the survey of disability living allowance and disability working allowance jointly undertaken by the Disability Alliance and Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation during this summer; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I received a copy of the report of the survey of disability living allowance and disability working allowance by the Disability Alliance and Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation on 25 November 1992 and I replied on 22 December. I noted that, although this report was based on an unrepresentative sample, it raised a number of issues, many of which were already being tackled. Officials from this Department intend to meet the researchers to discuss their findings and recommendations.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown of successful disability working allowance applicants by (a) average hourly earnings, (b) average hours worked, (c) average age, (d) sex, (e) marital status, (f) householder status and (g) qualifying benefit.

Mr. Scott: Information on the householder status of applicants is not available. The table provides estimated figures derived from an analysis of successful claims up to 30 November.

	Number
Average hourly earnings	£2·95
Average hours worked a week[1]	30
Average age	37
Number of awards to men	1,538
Number of awards to women	1,099
Number of awards to single people	1,595
Number of awards to couples	1,042
Qualifying benefits[2]:
Invalidity benefit	382
Severe disablement allowance	120
Income support with disability premium	196
Housing benefit with disability premium	27
Community charge benefit with disability premium	52
Lower rate disability living allowance	259
Higher rate disability living allowance and attendance allowance	1,601

[1] Mean average of cases analysed. Forty-five per cent. work more than 32 hours and 38 per cent. between 16 and 24 hours.
[2] Main qualifying benefit taken for claim purposes; applicants may have more than one qualifying benefit.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people awarded disability working allowance failed to apply to renew the benefit after six months; and what plans his Department has to monitor reasons for failure to renew in such circumstances.

Mr. Scott: It is not possible to say how many people fail to renew their claim at any one time because they have an eight-week period around the time their award expires in which they can make a renewal claim. However, an analysis of the 1,159 awards made by 30 June 1992 shows that by the end of December, 834 of these recipients had been given a second award. This figure is likely to increase when late claims are decided.

We are monitoring disability working allowance claims and awards carefully and are also planning further research.

Fraud

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many prosecutions there have been for social security fraud in the most recent six-month period for which figures are available and the previous five comparable six-month periods.

Miss Widdecombe: The investigation of social security fraud is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Letter from M. Bichard to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 14 January 1993:

As Chief Executive to the Benefits Agency, it is my responsibility to answer questions about relevant operational matters. I am therefore replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of prosecutions that there have been for Social Security fraud in the most recent six month period for which figures are available and the previous five comparable six month periods.

The number of prosecutions conducted by, or on behalf of, the Benefits Agency in the six month period 1.4.92-30.9.92 was 2,047. Prior to April 1992 statistics were kept based on the number of prosecutions that had been authorised, not those actually prosecuted. These figures were:—

	Total
October 1991 to March 1992	2,069
April 1991 to September 1991	2,286

Before April 1991 these figures are only available on an annual total of the cases authorised, namely:—

	Total
1990-91	7,911
1989-90	8,671

I hope you find this reply helpful. A copy will appear in the Official Report. A copy will also be placed in the Library.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many invalidity benefit claimants in (a) York, (b) North Yorkshire and (c) England have been called for medical examination in the past 12 months; and what proportion these figures represent of all invalidity benefit claimants;

(2) how many claimants in (a) York, (b) North Yorkshire and (c) England have had their invalidity benefit withdrawn following medical examination in each quarter for the last two years; and what proportion of these claimants subsequently had their benefit reinstated.

Mr. Scott: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Press Office

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many staff were employed by his Department's press office in each year since 1979.

Mr. Burt: Information for the years 1979 to 1988 is not available in the form requested. There was no separate Department of Social Security until August 1988.

The figures for 1988 onwards are as follows:

	Professional	Administrative support
August 1988—April 1989	8	1·5
April 1989—April 1990	8	1·5
April 1990—April 1991	8	1·5
April 1991—April 1992	8	1·5
April 1992—April 1993	9	1·5

"Wales This Week"

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what contribution his Department made to the HTV Cymru programme "Wales This Week", broadcast on 7 January.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department had no involvement in the broadcast.

Young People

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures for the numbers of persons aged 16 and 17 years by county or region who received hardship benefit (a) in the financial year 1991-92 and (b) in the period April to October 1992.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the precise from requested. The table gives details of the number of claims for income support under the severe hardship provision by old DSS regions. Some people will have made more than one claim.

DSS Region	1991-92	April-October 1992
Scotland	12,754	11,493
North Eastern	9,340	7,812
North Western	6,835	7,235
Midlands	6,926	6,792
Wales and South West	6,846	6,305
London North	5,805	5,794
London South	6,303	5,763

Source: Severe Hardship Claims Unit database.

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many of the applications made in 1992 by (a) 16 and 17-year-olds and (b) 18 to 21-year-olds for (i) social fund loans and (ii) community care grants were made by females;

(2) how many applications were made in 1992 by 18 to 21-year-olds for (a) social fund loans and (b) community care grants; how many of these applications were refused; and on what grounds;

(3) how many applications were made in 1992 by 16 and 17-year-olds for (a) social fund loans and (b) community care grants; how many of these applications were refused; and on what grounds.

Mr. Scott: Information is not collected centrally on social fund applications by people from these age groups. This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Licensed Premises

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to ensure that excise verification officers, in carrying out spot checks on licensed premises to prevent fraudulent sales of excisable goods, do not impose an undue burden on the operation of legitimate businesses; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: Excise verification officers are specially trained to counter the new revenue risks following completion of the single market. They will operate unobtrusively and will impose no undue burdens on legitimate businesses. Their controls will be largely intelligence-based and targeted at points of greatest risk, using information derived in many cases from trade sources. Legitimate traders will welcome this additional protection against dishonest competitors who have evaded United Kingdom duties on the goods they sell.

VAT

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the yield of VAT estimated for the current financial year; and what would be the yield if VAT at 17·5 per cent. were extended to all goods and services currently zero-rated or exempt;

(2) what would be the yield of VAT in the current year if a rate of 15 per cent. were applied to all goods including those presently exempted or zero-rated.

Sir John Cope: We estimate the VAT yield for 1992-93 will be £37·7 billion.

The ready reckoner published in table 4.8 of the 1991 autumn statement suggests that, had the VAT rate been reduced to 15 per cent. from April 1992, the yield might have been £4·3 billion less.

No estimates are available for the likely revenue effect from applying the standard rate of VAT to goods and services that are currently zero-rated or exempt from VAT. The 1992 "Financial Statement and Budget Report" provides some indication of the individual costs of the zero rates in 1991-92. These costs are not additive, however, and make no allowance for the likely behavioural response were the standard rate of VAT to be applied to these supplies.

Whisky

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much he received last year in duty on whisky and whiskey; and how much more in real terms was received 10 years ago.

Sir John Cope: In 1991-92 an estimated £730 million was received in excise duty on whisky and whiskey.

In real terms, at 1991-92 prices, £365 million more than this was received in 1981-82.

Carbon Dioxide Tax

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to introduce a carbon dioxide tax.

Sir John Cope: In 1992 the United Kingdom signed the United Nations framework convention on climate change, which, on entry into force will commit the United Kingdom to draw up a programme of measures aimed at returning emissions of carbon dioxide to their 1990 levels by the year 2000. The Secretary of State for the Environment has recently issued a discussion document designed to stimulate a public debate about how to achieve this target. A tax on carbon dioxide and energy, and a tax on carbon, were included in the summary of possible Government measures.

The European Commission has proposed a draft directive to introduce a tax on carbon dioxide and energy. The draft directive requires the unanimous approval of all member states. The proposal was discussed at the Economic and Finance Council of the European Community on 14 December 1992. The United Kingdom made it clear that the Government are not yet convinced that an EC-wide tax on carbon and energy is a necessary or appropriate response to the problem of global warming. The Council agreed that before a decision could be taken on whether, and if so under what circumstances, such a tax should be introduced throughout the Community, further analysis should be undertaken on the impact of the proposed tax, notably on energy consumption, economic activity and competitiveness.

Further work should also be undertaken on a number of important features of the Commission's proposals, such as the balance between the carbon and energy elements of the proposed tax and the treatment of electricity. This work will take account of the conclusions of the Edinburgh European Council on the principles of subsidiarity. The Government are examining the Commission's proposal carefully but without prejudice as to its final adoption.

Books (VAT)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to impose VAT on books.

Sir John Cope: The hon. Member will not expect me to comment in the period running up to the Budget.

Village Halls

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what financial controls are imposed on loans granted by (a) Action with Communities in Rural England and (b) the Sports Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 14 January 1993]: The conditions attached to loans will depend on the terms of the scheme under which the loan is offered. Conditions vary between schemes and, over time, within schemes.

Manufactured Goods

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out in a table the value of (a) imports, (b) exports and (c) trade balance for manufactured goods for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 14 January 1993]: Information on imports, exports and the balance for manufactured goods is published regularly in the Central Statistical Office "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics" and is also available on the CSO database which may be accessed by the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out in a table an index of United Kingdom manufacturing output for each year from 1979, with 1979 set at 100.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 14 January 1993]: Indices of United Kingdom manufacturing output can be accessed by the House of Commons Library. The indices are based on 1985 = 100, but may be scaled appropriately.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Marlborough High Street (Fire)

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what reports he has received about the fire in Marlborough high street, Marlborough, Wiltshire, on 1 January; and what approaches have been made to his Department with regard to assisting its full restoration.

Mr. Brooke: I was greatly saddened to read of the disastrous fire which destroyed a number of 17th century buildings in Marlborough high street, and I have requested a full report on the incident from English Heritage. The only approach so far made to my Department concerning the possibility of financial assistance has been from my hon. Friend. The extent to which such assistance may be appropriate is a matter which is currently being considered by English Heritage in conjunction with other interested parties.

Press Regulation

Sir Jerry Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the recipients of embargoed copies of the report by Sir David Calcutt and the dates on which they received the

Mr. Brooke: No embargoed copies of the report by Sir David Calcutt QC were made available outside Government and civil service prior to the date of the report's publication.

Broadcasting

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has had from the Broadcasting Standards Council and the Independent Television Commission regarding television broadcasts originating from outside the United Kingdom with regard to standards of taste, decency, violence and sexual content; which broadcasts have been mentioned; and if he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's ability to control pornographic broadcasts.

Mr. Brooke: I have received reports from both the Broadcasting Standards Council and the Independent Television Commission concerning the satellite channel Red Hot Dutch. I am considering what action is open to me to take under the powers available to me in the Broadcasting Act 1990, consistent with the United Kingdom's obligations under the EC broadcasting directive.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is his policy and procedure when he responds to complaints (a) from hon. Members and (b) from members of the public that listed buildings are being allowed to fall into a state of disrepair; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: When such complaints are received, my officials would normally make inquiries of English Heritage, the local authority concerned, or the owner, as appropriate. Further action would in the first instance be a matter for the local authority, but in exceptional cases consideration would also be given to the use of my reserve powers.

Press Freedom

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement about ministerial consideration of the issues and proposals in the report from Sir David Calcutt QC.

Mr. Brooke: I would refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made on 14 January 1993, Official Report, columns 1067-82.

Bletchley Park

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the future of Bletchley Park as a museum dedicated to the cryptographers of world war two.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 14 January 1993]: Bletchley Park is at present owned partly by the Government and partly by British Telecom, both of whom plan to dispose of the site now that it is no longer needed for their own purposes. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State looks on disposal as the opportunity to create at Bletchley Park a visible record of the code-breaking activities which took place there during world war 2. Departmental officials, and British Telecom too, are in touch with the Bletchley Park Trust about the trust's proposals for acquiring part of the site and developing a museum there. These discussions are aimed at translating the present proposals into firm plans.

WALES

Education Programmes

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effective provision of personal and social education programmes in schools in the last two years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Personal and social education is subject to inspection by Her Majesty's inspectors of schools who have undertaken several surveys of aspects of its provision in parts of Wales over the past two years.

HMI has also addressed the subject, as appropriate, in its report on individual schools. Our new arrangements for inspections by registered inspectors will ensure more published reports on all aspects of the life of a school.

For 1993-94, the Welsh Office will be supporting expenditure by local education authorities to support schools in the personal and social development of young people.

School Building Design

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice has been published in the last two years in school building design; and what was the principal purpose of such advice in each case.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Guidance and advice on school building design in England and Wales is promulgated by the Department for Education. That Department seeks advice from the Welsh Office as and when appropriate.

Special Needs Education

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessments he has made of the number of educational psychologists, physiotherapists, speech therapists, qualified specialists in hearing and visual impairments and other specialist support staff needed to ensure that all statements of special educational needs are prepared within six months whilst work with other children with special needs is maintained at satisfactory levels.

Sir Wyn Roberts: It is for local education authorities to assess and make provision for appropriate numbers of such specialist staff to ensure that statements of special educational needs are prepared within six months. I would expect LEAs to liaise and work closely with district health authorities and social services departments in this process.

Whorled Caraway Plant

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to protect the whorled caraway plant species at the Rhigos site in Brecon Beacons national park.

Sir Wyn Roberts: None. The whorled caraway plant is not protected by schedule 8 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, nor is it classified as a nationally scarce species.

Sheep Producers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the procedure he intends to follow in the allocation of quota to individual sheep producers in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Over 90 per cent. of producers in Wales who were paid sheep annual premium in 1991 have by now received details of their initial allocation of ewe premium quota. Those remaining producers who have not received an allocation under this round are being considered under a second round of allocations. At a later date we will also be considering applications from producers who claimed premium for the first time in 1992 and producers who have inherited holdings from producers who ceased sheep production in 1992. Finally, applications for quota from the national reserve will also be invited following consultations with interested parties on how the reserve will be managed. The reserve has been established in order to deal specifically with cases where the determination of quota on a historical reference period would cause special difficulties for certain producers.

Total Management Centre

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the development of the north Wales QED site.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply given to the hon. Member for Wrexham (Dr. Marek) on 17 November 1992 at column 144. This has been supplemented by my letter of 16 December to the hon. Member for Wrexham, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Press Office

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many staff were employed by his Department's press office in each year since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of staff employed in my Department's press office during the years in question is as follows:

	Number
1979-80	8
1980-81	8
1981-82	8
1982-83	8
1983-84	8
1984-85	10
1985-86	9
1986-87	9
1987-88	8
1988-89	9
1989-90	9
1990-91	8
1991-92	9

Committee of the Regions

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Association of European Regions concerning the method of selection of the United Kingdom members and alternates of the proposed Committee of the Regions.

Mr. David Hunt: None.

Electricity Cables

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received expressing public concerns over the electromagnetic effects of overhead electricity cables.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend has received one representation about the possible human health effects.

DEFENCE

Helicopter Carrier

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the timetable for the procurement of the landing platform helicopter vessel and list any foreseeable factors which might affect the timing of his placing of the construction contract.

Mr. Aitken: Evaluation of the tenders for the new landing platform helicopter vessel, received in October, will be complete this summer. It is planned to place the order in the autumn.

Any order would be dependent upon the outcome of our evaluation of tenders and the competing demands within the defence programme at the time.

Press Office

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff were employed by his Department's press office in each year since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The numbers of information and administrative grades employed in the Ministry of Defence press and facilities office have been:

Numbers of information and administrative grades

	Number
1979	48
1980—82	24
1982—85	27
1985—87	23
1987 to mid 1992	20

Note: Current strength is 15.

Figures prior to 1987 are estimates based on the approved staffing levels.

Radiation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies have been made by his Department into the effects of electromagnetic field radiation and low-frequency non-ionising radiation, respectively, from facilities and equipment operated by his Department.

Mr. Aitken: The MOD assesses its facilities and equipments against national guidelines for non-ionising radiation. In addition measurement surveys are carried out to determine the field and effects from both existing equipments and new equipments as they are brought into service.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to respond to the study by the National Radiological Protection Board into the effects of radiation on personnel in attendance at British nuclear tests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: When the National Radiological Protection Board report is published the Ministry of Defence will, in the light of its conclusions, consider how best to respond.

Iraq

Sir George Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the outcome of coalition operations against Iraq on 13 January.

Mr. Rifkind: I am delighted to report that information now received confirms that no coalition aircraft or personnel were lost or damaged in the attack. There are media reports of a small number of Iraqi casualties, but we are unable to substantiate these at present.

I am also in a position to confirm that the operation achieved a high degree of success. All the indicators so far are that a serious blow has been dealt to the Iraqi air defence network in the south, thereby significantly enhancing the safety of coalition aircraft patrolling the no-fly zone. The latest information indicates that the RAF Tornado GR1 aircraft involved successfully inflicted severe damage on their targets in the air defence facilities at Al Amarah.

Further reconnaissance will be required to provide firmer details, and it will be some time before final assessments of the success of the operation are available. I will continue to report to the House as more information becomes available.

HEALTH

Industrial Diseases

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are taken at the level of district health authorities, between them, or by the Health and Safety Executive, to survey the incidence of use, and collation of the contents of information supplied by medical practitioners signing death certificates consequent to changes in those certificates under the Industrial Diseases (Notification) Act 1981.

Mr. Sackville: All registered deaths, including those certified by coroners as due to an industrial disease, are statutorily drawn to the attention of the district directors of public health, under section 124 of the National Health Service Act 1977, who may analyse them as they feel appropriate.

Information concerning deaths from selected causes which may be the consequence of an industrial disease are routinely supplied to the Health and Safety Executive and analysed and published as appropriate.

Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement about the future of the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research.

Mr. Sackville: The centre for applied microbiology and research (CAMR) is at present part of the Public Health Laboratory Service (PHLS), and reports to me through the PHLS board. Following recent consideration of these arrangements, we have decided that CAMR should become a separate body in its own right, remaining accountable to Health Ministers. This will be implemented by creating the centre as an authority under the Department of Health, which will report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State through its own board. I will make a further announcement once the necessary preparations have been completed.

Epilepsy (Computer Games)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations she has had with the British Epilepsy Association concerning the incidence of photo-sensitive epilepsy and causal links with computer games.

Mr. Yeo: None.

Community Care Grant

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the allocation of community care grant to each London borough and the City of London Corporation in 1993-94; and if she will make a statement on the ability of the London authorities to provide community care services in 1993-94;

(2) if she will provide details of the calculations for community care grant in London as provided by her Department to local authority associations and to provide an explanation for the corrections made.

Mr. Yeo: Indicative special transitional grant allocations for all authorities were given in the Department's circular LASSL(92)12 (amended) issued to local authorities on 14 December 1992. The circular sets out the basis of the calculations, and a copy is in the Library. The figures were revised because of a technical error in the original formula used to calculate the figures. The extra £565 million which has been made available to local authorities for community care has been ring fenced to enable all authorities to arrange and purchase appropriate care under their new responsibilities.

Tomlinson Report

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the estimated cost of funding the transfer or redundancy of 680 doctors in London, as envisaged by the Tomlinson report;

(2) if she will publish the detailed reasoning behind the Tomlinson report estimate of £150 million to be spent on developing primary care services; and if she will publish similarly detailed costing of the costs of implementing the Tomlinson report in respect of (a) transfer and redundancy of doctors and (b) capital investment in restructuring hospitals;

(3) what provision has been made in the public expenditure planning totals for 1993-94 to 1995-96 to fund the implementation of the Tomlinson report in respect of (a) transfer and redundancy of doctors, (b) developing primary care services and (c) capital investment in restructuring hospitals.

Dr. Mawhinney: We shall publish our proposals for health services in London in the light of the Tomlinson recommendations, and their financial implications, shortly.

Residential Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of residential care and nursing home places in each London borough.

Mr. Yeo: Statistics on private nursing homes are not collected by borough. Details of nursing home places are held by district health authorities and the latest available information is contained in "Private hospitals, homes and clinics registered under section 23 of the Registered Homes Act 1984", copies of which are available in the Library.

The reported number of places in residential care homes in London boroughs as at March 1991 was:

	Number
Barking	582
Barnet	2,262
Bexley	583
Brent	594
Bromley	1,489
Camden	939
City of London	0
Croydon	2,106
Ealing	1,379
Enfield	1,175
Greenwich	714
Hackney	809
Hammersmith and Fulham	651
Haringey	1,174
Harrow	1,008
Havering	1,387
Hillingdon	1,010
Hounslow	790
Islington	937
Kensington and Chelsea	635
Kingston upon Thames	658
Lambeth	1,681
Lewisham	1,334
Merton	719
Newham	774
Redbridge	1,112
Richmond upon Thames	1,109
Southwark	895
Sutton	889
Tower Hamlets	549
Waltham Forest	1,058
Wandsworth	1,611
Westminster	874

These figures include places in independent and local authority homes (both staffed and unstaffed). They do not, however, include places in most independent homes for fewer than four residents and some other independent homes which are not subject to registration under the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Departmental Property

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 615, how many residential properties are owned by her Department, other than by the national health service; and what number and percentage of these are empty.

Mr. Sackville: The Department itself does not own any residential properties.

Press Office

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff were employed by her Department's press office in each year since 1979.

Mr. Sackville: Information for the years 1979-80 to 1987-88 is not available in the form requested.

	Professional staff	Administrative staff
1989-90	13	1
1990-91	14	1
1991-92	13	1
1992-93	14	1

Electromagnetic Radiation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department has conducted into the health effects of electromagnetic energy subsequent to the study on electromagnetic fields and the risk of cancer, published in March 1992.

Mr. Sackville: The Department is funding the National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) to undertake a programme of laboratory research into the effects on health of electromagnetic fields. This work was under way at the time the March 1992 study from the board was published. The programme includes the development of methods of measuring fields' strengths, theoretical assessments of energy distribution within the human body and the effects of fields on the development and behaviour of animals and cellular systems. Results will be published as the various studies are completed.

In addition, an advisory group to the board, chaired by Sir Richard Doll, continues to review new published information from worldwide sources.

European Drug Prevention Week

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the promotional budget for European drug prevention week was spent on (a) leaflets advertising specific services, (b) radio advertising and (c) television advertising.

Dr. Mawhinney: Producing and screening television commercials advertising the week represented about 16 per cent. of the total expenditure on European drug prevention week of Government Departments in England and Wales.

No radio advertisements or leaflets advertising specific services were commissioned centrally. However, £590,000 was made available to regional health authorities, health districts and local drug prevention teams for the development of local projects. Some local radio advertisements and leaflets advertising services were produced from within the regional allocation as part of local campaigns.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was spent on producing (a) folders, (b) promotional pens and (b) balloons for European drug prevention week.

Dr. Mawhinney: A range of support material was made available to help local groups promote awareness about the dangers of drug misuse and the availability of services during the Week. This material included posters, flyers, folders, badges, pens and balloons. The cost of producing folders, pens and balloons was £27,500, £34,000 and £11,000 respectively.

Myelography

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what efforts are being made to ensure that patients for whom myelography is proposed are made fully aware of the risks of that specific form of treatment.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 11 January 1993]: This forms part of the process of achieving informed consent from the patient prior to the procedure.

Patients are entitled to receive sufficient information in a way that they can understand about the proposed treatment, any possible alternatives and any substantial risks. Patients must then be allowed to decide whether they will agree to the treatment. This important principle has been highlighted in the patients charter.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been issued to radiologists and radiographers regarding the dangers of use of the contrast medium iophendylate.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 11 January 1993]: Iophendylate is the active ingredient of Myodil. I refer the hon. Member to the replies that my right hon. Friend gave the then right hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, South, Mr. Ashley, on 13 December 1990 at columns 466-69.

Magnetic Resonance Imaging

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has on the level of use of magnetic resonance imaging within national health service institutions.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 11 January 1993] : I am aware of 51 magnetic resonance imaging units in use in the national health service in the United Kingdom.

SCOTLAND

Departmental Property

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the total number of residential properties owned by his Department, (b) the number of such properties which are empty, and (c), (b) as a percentage of (a).

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 January 1993] : The total numbers of residential properties owned by the Scottish Office, including the health service, as at 31 March 1992 was 1,666, of which 245 were vacant. The number of vacant properties expressed as a percentage of the total owned is 14·7 per cent.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Accident Prevention

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what reports he has received from British Nuclear Fuels plc on the effectiveness of its plutonium evaporator live visual inspection system to prevent radiological accidents at Sellafield.

Mr. Eggar: Following the incident involving the plutonium evaporator cell at Sellafield on 8 September and the recovery of the resultant spillage, a number of features have been introduced to prevent a recurrence and to improve early detection in the unlikely event of there being any such similar spillage in the future.

Such measures include detailed examination of relevant welds and where necessary repair, installation of drip trays with leak detectors, installation of television cameras and an improved inspection regime. The Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate also required British Nuclear Fuels plc (BNFL) to improve lighting and to install an automatic imaging system to detect any changes in the evaporator cell. These systems are in place and BNFL is confident that it would detect any similar leak if one were ever to occur.

Combined Heat and Power

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations his Department will have at the seminar on combined heat and power and the effects of EC environmental legislation on small-scale plants, to be held in Birmingham on 26 January.

Mr. Eggar: A representative of my Department will be speaking at the seminar. I understand that representatives of the Department of the Environment, including the energy efficiency office, and of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution are expected also to attend.

Offshore Oil and Gas

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will suspend the 14th round of offshore oil and gas production licences.

Mr. Eggar: I have no plans to do so.

Electricity Cables

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what studies his Department, or predecessor departments, has undertaken into the electromagnetic effects of high-voltage electricity cables.

Mr. Eggar: The Department and its predecessors have not themselves carried out such studies. However, the Department keeps in close touch with the work being done nationally and internationally on this subject. In the United Kingdom the National Grid Company, formerly the CEGB, is currently funding such work which is carried out by independent research bodies.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the number of jobs in those areas currently enjoying assisted area status.

Mr. Sainsbury: Of the 322 travel-to-work areas in Great Britain, 99 have assisted area status including Manchester which is part non-assisted. The latest available data on employment at TTWA level come from the 1989 census of employment. This gives the number of employees in employment, excluding self-employed, in all assisted areas as 7,230,384. The total for Great Britain was 22,234,458.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the amount of (a) Government grants and (b) European Community grants given in each of the last five years to assisted area status locations.

Mr. Sainsbury: On (a), Government expenditure by my Department in each of the last five financial years in respect of regional selective assistance, regional enterprise grants, consultancy initiative, expenditure by English Estates on land and factories and on residual expenditure under the regional development grants schemes, to locations in England with assisted area status were:

	£ million at current prices
1987-88	271
1988-89	323
1989-90	280
1990-91	223
1991-92	175

Details of expenditure on other schemes run by my Department are not held on a regional basis.

On (b), the European Community makes many different types of grant to the United Kingdom. Of these, part of the structural funds is regionally allocated under objectives 1, 2 and 5B. The only area in the United Kingdom that receives moneys under objective 1 is Northern Ireland. Regions designated under objectives 2 and 5B equate approximately to the assisted areas of Great Britain as designated by my Department. Totals allocated to these two areas in each of the calendar years 1989 to 1993 were:

	£ million at current prices
1989	321
1990	466
1991	450
1992	619
1993	643

Mr. Morley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to announce the results of the review of assisted area status.

Mr. Sainsbury: Our intention is to announce the results of the assisted areas map review as early as possible, taking account of the outcome of the coal review and after the necessary clearance of the European Commission.

Review Results

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he proposes to announce the results of his coal review; when he proposes to announce the results of his review of assisted areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The findings of the coal review will be set out in a White Paper to be published as soon as possible. The results of the assisted areas review will be announced as soon as possible and after the necessary clearance of the European Commission, but will need to take account of the coal review and the responses of the consultation document which the Government issued in June 1992.

Coal-water Mixtures

Mr. Dowd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans the European Commission has to invest in coal-water mixture research in (a) 1993 and (b) 1994.

Mr. Eggar: The European Commission has no plans to invest in coal-water mixture research in either 1993 or 1994.

Mr. Dowd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information his Department has on the use of coal-water mixtures for power generation in non-EC developed countries and countries of the former Soviet Union.

Mr. Eggar: My Department is not aware that coal-water mixtures are used commercially for power generation in eastern Europe or the countries of the former Soviet Union. It is aware that extensive research and development has been carried out in these countries and the United States over several decades and that research and development is continuing in Japan. Japan is thought to be the only country undertaking extensive demonstrations of the technology with around 10 projects initiated over the past few years.

The previous research and development carried out in the United Kingdom indicated that the technology is not economic in this country.

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has for extending the non-fossil fuel obligation to Scotland and Ireland; when it will happen; and if it will be on a rolling programme basis.

Mr. Eggar: Policy in relation to the making of non-fossil fuel obligation orders in Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Northern Ireland respectively. Meanwhile, the coal review is considering the implications of the obligation on electricity suppliers to purchase non-fossil power.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much his Department spent in each year from 1988-89 to 1991-92, and how much is planned to be spent in 1992-93, on research and development on renewable energy.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has spent the following amounts on research and development on renewable energy.

	£ million
1988-89	16·0
1989-90	17·9
1990-91	20·8
1991-92	24·0

Note
The provision for 1992-93 is £24·3 million.

Coal Industry

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will give the total cost of consultancies commissioned into the coal industry since April 1990;

(2) how much he plans to spend on consultancies into the coal industry during the current financial year.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 14 January 1993]: The Department of Energy commissioned only one consultancy on the coal industry in 1990-91, from Alan Oakes. On grounds of commercial confidentiality, the costs of individual consultancies is not released.

In 1991-92 the Department of Energy commissioned six consultancies on coal privatisation at a cost that year of £3·3 million.

A further two consultancies have been commissioned by the DTI on coal privatisation in 1992-93. The Department has also commissioned four consultancies into the coal industry as a result of the coal review. I have in addition appointed John T. Boyd to report on the 10 pits currently subject to consultation. Total expenditure on consultancies into the coal industry by the DTI in 1992-93 is currently forecast to be £6·5 million.

A number of consultants have also contributed to the Department's coal research and development programme, managed by the energy technology support unit at Harwell.

Pit Closures

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade according to what criteria the review procedure ordered by Lord Justice Glidewell in his ruling of 21 December 1992 will assess the viability of the 31 pits listed for closure.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will now include the 10 pits proposed for immediate closure with the other 21 in his review following judgment of the High Court of 21 December 1992.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 14 January 1993]: Lord Justice Glidewell did not order a review procedure to assess the viability of the 31 pits. His judgment related only to the 10 pits subject to consultation by British Coal. He said that what was needed was the rapid addition to the consultation already under way of some independent scrutiny. While it was for British Coal and the unions to decide how such an independent scrutiny should be conducted and who should conduct it, he said he had the impression that if my right hon. Friend instructed Boyds to report on the 10 pits as well as the other 21 and in particular to consider whether British Coal's criteria for the closure of 10 pits would be met in relation to any or all of them, the unions and other applicants might well agree to that course. It was also in his view a solution which any future court might well conclude was within his declaration.

In his light of the judgment, my right hon. Friend has appointed Boyds to report on the 10 pits. This course is not intended in any way to pre-empt the outcome of the discussions between British Coal and the unions on the procedure which they should now follow. It is also a separate exercise from Boyd's current work on the other 21 pits being carried out as part of the coal review. No final decision will be taken on closing the 10 pits until the House has had the chance to debate the coal review White Paper, the consultation process has been completed and Boyds have reported.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans there are to resume production at the 10 collieries that he announced would be closed in his statement to the House of 19 October 1992, following the ruling of the High Court of 21 December 1992.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the steps being taken by his Department and British Coal following the judgment of the High Court of 21 December 1992 in respect of (a) resumption of normal working at the 10 pits proposed for immediate closure and (b) review of the redundancies occurring between 13 October 1992 and 21 December 1992 at those pits.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 14 January 1993]: These are matters for British Coal. However, I do not understand there to be anything in the judgment which requires coaling to resume at the 10 pits.

Press Office

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many staff were employed by his Department's press office in each year since 1979.

Mr. Eggar: Separate figures for the years before 1987 are not readily available. The number of staff in post in the Department's press office on 1 April since then has been as follows:

	Number
1987	51
1988	51
1989	37
1990	37
1991	38
1992	135

[1] The total subsequently increased to 42 following the transfer of staff and functions from the former Department of Energy. It includes 15 clerical and other support posts.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EC Committee of the Regions

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress towards establishing the membership of the EC Committee of the Regions (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in other member states of the EC.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Government are still considering the nomination of the 24 United Kingdom members of the committee (and 23 alternates) and how the seats should be allocated between the different parts of the United Kingdom. No decisions have yet been taken.

The position is broadly similar in most other member states. Only Greece has so far announced their candidates.

Visitors' Visas

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the number of appeals in the last 12 months against refusal of visitors' visas to people visiting relatives or friends in Walsall.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested is not centrally recorded and could not be provided except at disproportionate expense.

Israel

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to Israel in regard to the expulsion of more than 400 Palestinians in December 1992; and what representations Her Majesty's Government have made on the expulsions to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have drawn the attention of the Israeli Government to the two EC statements which condemned the deportations, urged the Israelis to return the deportees, and emphasised the importance of pursuing the peace process. And since the adoption of the Security Council resolution 799 the British ambassador has continued to underline to the Israelis our strong views on this issue. The UNHCR is not at present involved in this issue.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evaluation Her Majesty's Government have made of the relevance of article 49 of the fourth Geneva convention (1949) on human rights to Israel's expulsion of over 400 Palestinians in December; and what representations have been made to the International Red Cross by Her Majesty's Government on the matter.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We consider the deportations to be in violation of the fourth Geneva convention. We remain in close contact with the International Committee of the Red Cross.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to his Israeli counterpart in regard to United Nations Security Council resolution 799(92).

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since the adoption of Security Council resolution 799 the British ambassador has continued to underline to the Israelis our strong views on the question of the Palestinian deportees.

Jonathan Moyle

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he made during his recent visit to Chile to the Chilean Government on the death of Jonathan Moyle.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discussed the Moylé case at some length with both the Foreign Minister of Chile, Senor Silva Cimma, and the Moyle family's lawyer, Senor Trivino. Among the subjects discussed was the question of seeking the appointment of a special investigating magistrate.

Hong Kong

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the living conditions for refugees at the Whitehead detention centre in the Crown Territories of Hong Kong.

Mr. Goodlad: The Whitehead detention centre currently houses 20,354 Vietnamese migrants. They enjoy freedom of movement within their sections of the centre where medical, educational and social facilities are available.

The Hong Kong Government seek to maintain law and order in all the detention centres while trying not to run them as prisons. Conscious efforts have been made to encourage Vietnamese migrants to participate in the running of the centres through the establishment of camp committees.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions in regard to the role of British forces in civil emergency planning and evacuation in the Crown Territories he had during his recent visit to Hong Kong.

Mr. Goodlad: None. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has not recently visited Hong Kong. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence visited Hong Kong from 7 to 8 January. These issues did not figure among the discussions that he held there.

Holiday Accommodation

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he is planning to make to his counterparts in the EC about unsafe holiday accommodation abroad.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no such plans. The safety of holiday accommodation is a matter for the individual Governments of the member states.

The Association of British Travel Agents offers advice to British tour operators on the safety standards of holiday accommodation. The EC package travel directive however makes tour operators liable for damage or injury suffered by customers, even if caused by negligence of the owner or manager of holiday accommodation they use.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure that United Kingdom holidaymakers are not exposed to hazardous foreign accommodation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office offers the British travelling public advice about dangers to their safety resulting from political unrest, lawlessness, threats of violence, natural disasters or epidemics.

Holidaymakers are advised to consult their travel operator or the relevant national tourist office about the safety of their accommodation.

Thailand (Public Defender)

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps were taken by the British consulate in Thailand to advise (a) Karyn Smith, (b) Stephen Harris and (c) other British citizens accused of crimes in Thailand, of the existence of a public defender system in that country; and what consideration he has given to making ex-gratia payments to the families of British prisoners in Thailand who have been caused hardship by the failure of the consulate to inform them of the public defender system.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the cases of Karyn Smith and Stephen Harris the question did not arise. Karyn Smith's parents arrived in Thailand shortly after her arrest and assumed responsibility for appointing a lawyer. Mr. Harris specifically asked the embassy not to become involved in the legal aspects of his case. The public defender system in Thailand is well known among detainees. But because it is not regarded by Western embassies as a viable alternative to private legal representation, our embassy has not made a practice of recommending it. Few British detainees have opted to use it. Most opt for private legal representation. There are no grounds for making ex-gratia payments to the families of British prisoners in Thailand.

Argentina

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had with his Argentine counterpart on the prospects of Argentina joining the nuclear non-proliferation treaty during his recent visit.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and his Argentine counterpart discussed a number of non-proliferation issues, in particular the importance of bringing into effect as soon as possible the treaty of Tlatelolco which will create a nuclear weapons-free zone in Latin America. This is a vital agreement for the security of the region, and we consider it a step towards accession to the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's response to the Iraqi incursion into Kuwait around 10 January.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The UN Secretary-General reported to the Security Council that these activities were in violation of the procedures established by the Security Council. The Security Council responded on 11 January with a statement condemning the action taken by Iraq which constituted further material breaches of SCR 687 which established the ceasefire at the end of the Gulf war. The council demanded that Iraq co-operate fully with the United Nations Iraq/Kuwait observer mission (UNIKOM) and warned Iraq of the serious consequences that would flow from continued defiance. We fully supported this statement.

On 13 February the Iraqi ambassador to the UN notified the President of the Security Council that his Government had suspended incursions to retrieve equipment from Kuwait. The Permanent Four have since put the Iraqis on notice that coalition actions on 13 January will not be the end of the matter if Iraq continues to flout the will of the international community.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the visas which have been granted or other facilities extended in the last year to enable Iraqis to enter the United Kingdom for the purposes of discussion with telecommunication or other commercial companies.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Statistics according to nationality and purpose of visit are not centrally recorded and could not be provided except at disproportionate cost. However, we are aware that visas were issued to eight Iraqis in December 1992 to enter the United Kingdom for the purpose of discussions with a telecommunications company.

We have not extended any other facilities to enable Iraqis to enter the United Kingdom for commercial discussions.

Press Office

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many staff were employed by his Department's press office in each year since 1979.

Mr. Goodlad: The numbers of staff employed in the FCO diplomatic wing news department and the aid wing press and briefing section are as follows:

Year	Staff
1983-84	26·0
1984-85	26·0
1985-86	26·5
1986-87	25·5
1987-88	19·0
1988-89	18·0
1989-90	18·0
1990-91	18·0
1991-92	18·0

Our records do not go back beyond 1983.

ENVIRONMENT

Radon

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the current average radon level in United Kingdom houses, expressed in becquerels per cubic metre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) estimates that the average radon level in dwellings in the United Kingdom is 20 becquerels per cubic metre of air. The action level is an annual average of 200 becquerels per cubic metre.

Homelessness, Walsall

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make an assessment of the extent of homelessness in Walsall; and how many (a) families and (b) single people will benefit from the additional funding announced in the autumn statement.

Mr. Baldry: An assessment is made on the basis of the local authority's own estimates contained in its housing strategy statement and statistical returns, together with the homelessness indicator in the housing general needs index.

This information was used to inform our decisions on the housing investment programme allocations to local authorities which were announced on 17 December 1992.

The autumn statement made considerable additional resources available to support capital programmes which will directly benefit families and single people in housing need:

An increase in the Housing Corporation spending to £2·3 billion this year, to enable the immediate purchase of about 17,000 new, empty or repossessed homes for those in housing need (against the original autumn statement target of 16,000).

Provide sufficient funds to exceed the target of 153,000 new housing association homes in the three years 1992-93 to 1994-95. This is now expected to be 170,000.

The release of local authority capital receipts, which are expected to add around £1 billion to housing spending between now and 1995-96.

And the creation of a new housing partnership fund where £30 million will be available nationally in the form of supplementary credit approvals to be bid for worthwhile housing investment projects.

Housing, Walsall

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses there are in multiple occupation in Walsall.

Mr. Baldry: The April 1991 census of population reports 52 shared dwellings in the Walsall local authority area.

Tarmac Construction

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amount of money the Government transferred to Tarmac Construction for the liability it assumed for the redundancy entitlements of staff who transferred with PSA Projects under the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981.

Mr. Redwood: Money was not transferred to Tarmac Construction specifically for the liabilities it assumed for staff redundancy entitlements. Under the severance sharing scheme Tarmac will be reimbursed for the costs of making staff redundant on an agreed basis subject to the overall limit to the Government's liability for redundancy payments in respect of staff as detailed in the answer given to the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans), on 25 November 1992.

Property Services Agency

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total estimated cost of closing PSA Building Management Scotland based on December 1992 staff-in-post figures.

Mr. Redwood: This figure is not readily available and would, in any event, be commercially confidential.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of the PSA Projects board members were aware of the bids of the different potential purchasers for PSA Projects.

Mr. Redwood: All board members met the shortlisted bidders and, in preparation for that, were given copies of the bids with the financial details edited out.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether Her Majesty's Government are willing to sell all five PSA Building Management business divisions to one purchaser.

Mr. Redwood: The Government are anxious to promote competition in the provision of maintenance services and would therefore be most reluctant to sell all the businesses to one purchaser.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment has been made of value for money in the sale of PSA Projects to Tarmac Construction.

Mr. Redwood: Tarmac's bid for PSA Projects was assessed both against the value of competing bids and against the cost of closing projects.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Government expect to receive a net income from potential purchasers of all the PSA Building Management business divisions.

Mr. Redwood: Each of the businesses will have a sizeable contractually committed workload at the point of sale. We expect this to be reflected in the financial arrangements for disposal.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for the future of those PSA Building Management business divisions which remain unsold by 1994.

Mr. Redwood: I have no specific plans as our intention is to sell the Building Management businesses this year.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when the memorandum for the sale of the five PSA Building Management business divisions will be issued to potential bidders;

(2) what is the timetable for the sale of the PSA Building Management business divisions.

Mr. Redwood: Final decisions have not yet been taken on the timetable for the sale of PSA Building Management business divisions or for the issue of the sale memorandum.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many times between December 1991 and 30 September 1992, on what dates, for what purpose and on what basis civil servants and others serving as PSA Projects board members formally and informally met representatives of companies bidding for PSA projects;

(2) how many times, on what dates, and for what purpose, and on what basis civil servants and others serving as PSA Projects board members formally and informally met representatives of the Tarmac Group between 1 December 1991 and 30 September 1992.

Mr. Redwood: Many meetings would have taken place both formally and informally between individual members of Tarmac and other companies bidding for PSA Projects, as with other major construction industry companies, in the normal course of business.

In addition during the due vigilance phase of the sales process both the board and individual board members met the shortlisted bidders. Following Tarmac's selection as preferred bidder at the end of September and before exchange of contracts on October 1 there was a meeting between the board and Tarmac Construction to discuss Tarmac's plans for the business and their communication to PSA Projects staff and a number of discussions between individual board members and Tarmac representatives on particular aspects of the prospective sale.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many outstanding claims against PSA Services have been lodged by companies within the Tarmac Group; what is their total value; and what is the total value of such claims relating to work at the Faslane and Coulport submarine bases;

(2) how many outstanding claims against companies within the Tarmac Group have been made by PSA Services;

(3) what arrangements he has made to settle outstanding claims lodged by Tarmac companies against PSA Services following the sale of PSA Projects to Tarmac Construction Ltd.

Mr. Redwood: There are no outstanding claims against the Tarmac Group of companies by PSA Projects or vice versa. Since 1 April 1992 the contracting authority for Government works contracts has been the individual client department. Any service provided by PSA Projects has been solely as agent.

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements exist to ensure that surplus staff from PSA Projects will be matched with vacancies in Departments and that Departments do not recruit externally while there are surplus staff in the same grade in PSA Projects.

Mr. Redwood: PSA maintains constant contact with other Government Departments through its personnel change unit which was specifically set up for the purppse of identifying alternative posts for all surplus staff in PSA. These Departments are sympathetic to the PSA's situation and generally respond positively to our approaches. Most Departments consider surplus PSA staff before embarking upon any external recruitment, but if they decide to advertise outside the service PSA staff are normally invited to apply.

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the dates, times and places, during the three-month period up to the sale of PSA Projects, of the internal meetings other than those with trade unions, at which PSA management discussed how the Agency's equal opportunities policies would be applied to the PSA Projects sale; and if he will make a statement on each step taken arising from those meetings, with regard to application of those policies.

Mr. Redwood: PSA Projects personnel staff, and representatives from the group personnel directorate, which has overall responsibility within PSA Services for all equal opportunities matters, regularly held meetings throughout the three-month period up to the sale of Projects, to discuss how the Department's equal opportunities policies should be applied in the sale of PSA Projects. The main meetings took place on 30 July 1992 in Marsham street and 21 September and 23 October 1992 in Croydon. Steps taken as a result of these meetings were:

(a) to produce a paper for the trade unions setting out the proposed secondee selection criteria and arrangements for the avoidance of sexual and racial discrimination.

(b) to undertake a further survey of the ethnic origin of those staff in PSA Projects who have hitherto declined to provide this information in order to improve the quality of information held on the ethnic origin database.

(c) to establish central monitoring by the equal opportunities unit of the secondee selection process.

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action was taken to ensure that there was no direct or indirect discrimination in the selection of PSA Projects staff for secondment; and if he will list the measures taken to prevent discrimination on the grounds of race, gender or disability.

Mr. Redwood: The trade unions were consulted about the proposed criteria for the selection of secondees in October 1992.

The procedures to be adopted in the selection of staff for secondment were set out in a letter from the then managing director of PSA Projects to all his senior managers. This letter drew specific attention to the requirement of the equal opportunities legislation and the importance of avoiding any direct or indirect discrimination on the grounds of race, gender or disability. A copy of this letter was given to the trade unions in December 1992.

Throughout the selection process the results were monitored centrally to ensure that no direct or indirect discrimination had taken place.

Other measures undertaken during 1992 included the issue of guidance to all staff about the avoidance of racial or sexual harassment in the workplace. A new complaints and grievances procedure was also agreed with the trade unions and issued to staff throughout PSA Services in the form of a staff circular in advance of the PSA Projects sale.

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what written guidance was given to PSA Projects staff, setting out the appeals procedure to follow if they were turned down for secondment and they believed this was done on the grounds of gender, race or disability.

Mr. Redwood: The appeals procedure for staff to follow in the event of any complaint or grievance including any on sexual or racial discrimination grounds was set out in a departmental notice which was agreed with the trade unions and issued to all PSA staff in April 1992.

In the light of this no separate guidance for PSA Projects staff was thought to be necessary.

Rents

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 10 November 1992, Official Report, column 738, when he expects the Housing Corporation to publish its report on rents and affordability.

Mr. Baldry: The Housing Corporation's report, "The Affordability of Housing Association Rents", was published on 15 December 1992 and a copy was placed in the Library.

Travellers

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of (a) the traditional travelling community and (b) the new age travellers.

Mr. Baldry: The Department does not hold information in the form requested. Section 16 of the Caravan Sites Act 1968 defines gipsies as "persons of nomadic habit of life, whatever their race or origin". In some cases, the Courts have held that individual new age travellers are gipsies within the statutory definition. Local authorities in England and Wales undertake regular counts of gipsy caravans in their areas, and in January 1992 English local authorities counted a total of 12,777 gipsy caravans.

Cable Identification Colours

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the extent of harmonisation of cable identification colours in the EC.

Mr. Baldry: Preliminary discussion on the possible harmonisation of cable identification colours has taken place within technical committees responsible for electro-technical standardisation at European and international level.

The representation of United Kingdom interests in these negotiations is the responsibility of the British electro-technical committee.

Electrical Contractors

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether an electrical contractor from another Community country will be required to comply with BS 7671 when carrying out an electrical installation in the United Kingdom after the completion of the single market.

Mr. Baldry: In accordance with treaty obligations United Kingdom regulatory authorities, public purchasers and certain private bodies would not be able to insist on strict compliance with the British standard. Compliance with a specification offering equivalent performance would also be acceptable under present arrangements.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in which other EC states British electrical contractors have to comply with that state's national regulations.

Mr. Baldry: In general the details of regulations applicable to electrical installations are a matter for individual member states. Information on particular regulatory and other requirements applicable to British electrical contractors can best be obtained from the appropriate national authority. Where there is EC legislation—for example, relevant clauses of the workplace directive 89/654/EEC—affecting installations, the requirements of national regulations in all countries should be satisfied by meeting the requirements of the directive.

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provisions of United Kingdom legislation govern compliance with BS 7671.

Mr. Baldry: Compliance with BS 7671 is not an express requirement under United Kingdom legislation for electrical safety. However, compliance with the BS may be used as evidence in claiming conformity with certain statutory requirements. In this the role of BS 7671 is essentially the same as that of the "regulations" for electrical installations previously published by the Institution of Electrical Engineers.

Home Improvements, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what level of resources is available to Liverpool city council for home improvement grants in the current financial year; how many homes will be renovated in the current year; how many applications remain to be approved and works commenced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The level of resources dedicated to house renovation grants is a matter for Liverpool city council to decide within the framework of its capital programme and available resources.

Urban Programme

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what estimate his Department has made as to the impact on voluntary organisations of phasing out the urban programme;

(2) what procedures were followed by his Department in deciding to phase out the urban programme; and what guidance his Department has received in assessing the impact on the voluntary sector of changes in policy.

Mr. Robin Squire: There will continue to be a substantial urban programme (UP) in 1993-94 amounting to £176 million. We will honour in full existing commitments, including those for the voluntary sector and provide £20 million for urban partnership fund projects as part of the new capital partnership programme. It is open to local authorities to involve voluntary organisations in their urban partnership fund proposals. The decisions on the urban partnership were taken having regard to all the relevant factors, including their effect on the voluntary sector.

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many urban programme funded (a) social welfare and health and (b) housing projects targeted at ethnic minority communities will end in each of the financial years 1992-93, 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96; and what is the financial cost of these projects in each year;

(2) how many urban programme funded (a) social welfare and health and (b) housing projects run by voluntary organisations will end in each of the financial years 1992-93, 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96; and what is the financial cost of these projects in each year;

(3) how many urban programme funded (a) social welfare and health and (b) housing projects will end in each of the financial years 1992-93, 1993-94, 1994-95 and 1995-96; and what is the financial cost of these projects in each year.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Empty Offices

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the current level of empty office space in (a) central London and (b) Greater London.

Mr. Baldry: Information on the level of empty office space in central and Greater London is not kept by this Department.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for the conversion of empty office blocks in London to housing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: A number of housing associations have been able to convert commercial property in London for short-term occupation by the homeless, and they are continuing to investigate properties on the market which might be suitable for this type of use. However, the scope for such work does appear to be fairly limited, compared with opportunities for permanent housing provision by more orthodox means.

Property Taxation Europe

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the countries in the Council of Europe which have a property tax which applies to houses and flats.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is not available in respect of Cyprus, Malta, Liechtenstein, San Marino, Hungary, Czechoslovakia or Poland. However, "Revenue Statistics of OECD Members 1965-1991" indicates that all other members of the Council of Europe collect recurrent and non-recurrent taxes on the use, transfer or ownership of property. Taxes on the use of properties for residence, where the amount payable is a function of the users' personal circumstances, are treated as taxes on income and are not separately identified.

City Challenge

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements his Department has made for a third round of bidding for city challenge funds in 1993-94; and what arrangements will be made in respect of future city challenge bids.

Mr. Robin Squire: The future of city challenge will be considered in the light of the general review of urban needs to be undertaken in 1993 and progress in the areas successful in the first two competitions.

TRANSPORT

Company Cars

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of the proportion of cars in, entering or leaving central London in peak hours whose total running costs are not met wholly by the taxable income of their owners or drivers; and what are the comparable figures available since 1980.

Mr. Norris: A survey conducted in 1989 found that 85 per cent. of cars entering central London during the morning peak (7 to 10 am) received some form of travel assistance from their company or employer for the journey being undertaken. Comparable figures from surveys conducted by the GLC in 1982 and 1985 are 74 per cent. and 78 per cent. respectively. The types of assistance received in 1989 are shown in the following table.

Type of travel assistance received for car journeys to central London during the morning peak (7-10 am): 1989

	Per cent.
Percentage receiving any form of travel assistance:	85
Type of assistance received (per cent.)[1]
Parking space provided	50
Parking charges fully or partly paid	25
Mileage allowance	8
Self-employed tax relief or company allowance	8
Fuel costs fully or partly paid	38
None	15

[1] Percentages sum to more than 100 because more than one form of assistance may be provided.

Railway Expenditure

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much capital expenditure British Rail incurred, or plans to incur, on regional network track renewal in each year from 1980 to 1994.

Mr. Roger Freeman: The figures for British Rail's expenditure on track renewals between 1980 and 1991-92, the latest year available, are in the table.

	£ million[1]
1980	244
1981	238
1982	200
1983	253
1984-85	232

Rail Privatisation

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish current and historical profit and loss accounts and balance sheets for each of the proposed rail passenger franchise units; and if he will set a date for publication.

Mr. Freeman: It is our intention to provide financial information to bidders for franchises, with accounts based on the financial performance of the British Rail units to be set up to "shadow" the service groups to be franchised. The information will be made available to bidders when they are formally invited to tender.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provisions will be made for reimbursement of local authorities for investment in capital programmes in proposals for privatisation of the railways.

Mr. Freeman: A number of local authorities have supported worthwhile railway investment projects in order to secure enhanced services or facilities for local people. The benefits which the local authorities were seeking to secure will continue to be provided. Where the local authorities' investment has been made on the basis of British Rail providing a particular service this obligation will pass to British Rail's successor. So there is no case for reimbursement.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that British Rail cannot act in a manner detrimental to current private passenger and freight operators until Railtrack is totally separated from British Rail passenger and freight operations.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend and I remain in close touch with the chairman of the British Railways Board. I remain confident that British Rail will do all that it can to ensure an effective transition.

Rolling Stock

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what powers he has to allow locomotive, wagon and rolling stock manufacturers to acquire surplus British Rail assets for sale or lease to private sector operators in advance of franchising legislation receiving the Royal Assent.

Mr. Freeman: This is a commercial matter for British Rail. British Rail is always interested to hear from those who wish to be included in tender lists for surplus rolling stock. For example, freight locomotives have already been sold to railway manufacturers for refurbishment and use in the private sector.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to publish an inventory, on a regular basis, of the locomotive, wagon, and rolling stock assets of each proposed passenger franchise and provide the same information for freight services.

Mr. Freeman: An inventory of rolling stock assets, including locomotives and wagons, for BR's existing passenger profit centres was published in the consultative document, "The Franchising of Passenger Rail Services", which we issued in October 1992. Updated information will be provided to bidders for passenger franchises when they are formally invited to tender. Information on the assets of the freight businesses will be contained in the information memorandum which will be provided for each business when it is offered for sale.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that British Rail does not scrap locomotives, wagons and rolling stock which could be acquired by the private sector (a) for operations in advance of franchising routes and (b) for refurbishment to create a second-hand market in advance of refurbishment.

Mr. Freeman: BR's policy is to dispose of life-expired rolling stock by competitive tender. Not all disposals are scrapped.

BR is storing securely the best assets which successor private operators might be able to use.

Tankers

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps his Department takes, in the case of sightings of unidentified tankers being reported in the Minch, to determine the identity of the vessels concerned;

(2) in what ways his Department has pursued reports of sightings of tankers in the Minch as promised in the Government response to the 40th report of the Public Accounts Committee, Session 1990-91 in December 1991;

(3) how many sightings of tankers in the Minch have been reported to his Department since their request for such reports in the Government response to the 40th report of the Public Accounts Committee in December 1991;

(4) what was the precise wording of the request for reports of sightings of tankers in the Minch referred to in the Government response to the 40th report of the Public Accounts Committee, Session 1990-91, December 1991; and to whom this request was made.

Mr. Norris: In the summer of 1991 the Highland regional council held a symposium on tankers in the Minch attended by representatives of many interested organisations. At the symposium, my Department issued a general invitation to report sightings of vessels which might be large laden tankers to my Department. This invitation was followed up in detailed paper by my Department for the Council, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. On a number of other occasions we have asked that local people should report any sightings of tankers in the Minch to the Department. In a new initiative, supported by my Department, the Highlands regional council is shortly to issue a leaflet outlining the voluntary reporting scheme.

The Department has received no reports of laden tankers over 10,000 tons grt using the Minch from any source. Any such laden tanker identified would be investigated by the Department to discover the reasons for its presence in the Minch. There is no means of investigating unidentified tankers.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to consider a requirement on all tankers and bulk carriers passing through British waters to carry equipment to allow them to be tracked by satellite in the same manner as for passenger aircraft.

Mr. Norris: Extension of existing surveillance arrangements for ships fall within the terms of reference of Lord Donaldson's inquiry announced by my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps his Department currently takes to monitor the movement of laden oil tankers around the British Isles.

Mr. Norris: A reporting system for loaded oil and chemical tankers of over 1600 grt is in place in the channel and Dover strait (MAREP). This provides detailed information about such ships to surveillance centres. In addition the channel navigation information service monitors by radar all traffic in the Dover strait and its approaches.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make an announcement on the route for the channel tunnel rail link; and if he remains committed to the construction of an international station at Stratford.

Mr. Freeman: An announcement will be made as soon as possible. The Government's view has not changed that the route should run via Stratford and Union Railways route studies have taken account of this. The opportunity for a station at Stratford is thereby preserved.

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive and subsequently publish the report by Union Railways on the channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Freeman: A report has now been received. We shall move as quickly as possible to commence public consultation.

International Driving Licences

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek to remove the requirement for United Kingdom drivers to hold a current international driving licence when driving in other European Community countries.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: United Kingdom licence holders driving within the European Community are not required to hold an international driving permit in addition to a current full driving licence.

Green Card Insurance Certificate

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether a green card insurance certificate is now no longer required by United Kingdom drivers driving in other European Community countries.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: United Kingdom motor insurance policies provide third party cover in all EC member states. Drivers are not required to have a green card though they may find that in some countries the green card is more easily recognised as evidence of insurance than their insurance certificate.

Farm Vehicles

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures are taken by his Department to ensure proper lighting and registration marking on farm vehicles and on the implements they tow.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Requirements covering the fitting and use of lamps and reflectors on all vehicles used on public roads, including agricultural tractors and trailers, are set out in the Road Vehicles Lighting Regulations 1989 (SI 1989-1796). There is also a requirement that a registration mark should be displayed on agricultural machines and trailers in the Road Vehicles (Registration and Licensing) Regulations 1971 (SI 1971/450). Enforcement of these rules is a matter for the police.

Press Office

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff were employed by his Department's press office in each year since 1979.

Mr. Norris: Details of staff in post in the Department's press office from 1984 (including administrative support) are as follows:

Year	Total staff in post
1984	12
1985	11
1986	11
1987	10
1988	10
1989	12
1990	12
1991	13
1992	13

Before 1984, the information division was a common service of the Department of Transport, Department of the Environment and Property Services Agency. Figures prior to 1984 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

M1–M62 Link

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce the results of the public consultation process concerning proposals for an M1–M62 motorway link in west Yorkshire.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The results of the public consultation will be announced after the analysis of the responses has been completed. This is likely to take several more months due to the complexity of the scheme and the large number of responses received.

M20 and A20

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the widening of the M20 in the Maidstone area and the new A20 road from Folkestone to be completed.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The M20 junctions 5 to 8 widening and A20 Folkestone to Dover schemes are expected to be complete by late summer 1993.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 216

SESSION 1992–93

14th December, 1992—15th January, 1993

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
